The hon. Gentleman wrote to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in October 1984, following correspondence with the chairman of the Post Office about this and another closure in his constituency, requesting that the Post Office be encouraged to review its decision. My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary said in his reply that he could not comment, because the matter was for the Post Office. He was not being obstructive or unhelpful—the hon. Gentleman is not suggesting that — but following the clear and persistent policy of the Government and their predecessors on such operational questions, which are matters for the Post Office, not for the Government.

Mr. Lloyd: I was not wishing to suggest that the Parliamentary Under-Secretary was being obstructive. I understand why that is the normal response. I do not want the Minister or the Parliamentary Under-Secretary to think that I was trying to be personally insulting. However, I query the way in which the Government approached this decision, considering the overtones of monopoly abuse.

Mr. Pattie: My noble Friend will be grateful for that, although neither he nor I thought that there was any question of the hon. Gentleman taking that position.

It should be clearly understood that the Post Office is responsible for running the counters network and that decisions about individual post offices are operational ones for the Post Office, not for the Government. That is in accordance with the clear distinction, of which the hon. Gentleman is aware, between the respective roles of the Government and the Post Office Board.

Since the Post Office was established in 1969 as a public corporation with its own board, the policy of successive Governments embodied in the relevant legislation has been that decisions concerning the day-to-day management of business are the responsibility of the board. The role of the Government is confined to broad issues of general policy and matters of overall financial control. Of course, no post office closure is popular, because it will inevitably mean some inconvenience to people who must travel further to the nearest alternative post office, as those right hon. and hon. Members whose constituencies are affected by post office closures will appreciate. There is no constituency in the country that has not suffered a closure, and my constituency is no exception.

It is understandable that the average post office customer's primary interest is in the post office which he or she is used to visiting, and he or she will be concerned if it is decided to close that office. However, the Government and the Post Office Board are required to take a wider view. As to the network of post offices, the Government's interests and responsibilities relate to the overall network, and the Government consider the Post Office's proposals for the urban network in that context. We have frequently stated our recognition of the valuable role that post offices play in the economic and social life of the country. However, if the network of post offices is to continue to provide such a role in the future, it is vital that the Post Office, in running the network, should seek ways of improving its efficiency and effectiveness and maintaining it at a satisfactory level.

Since 1945, the Post Office has had a criterion of providing post offices in town areas at intervals of not less than one mile. That is not and was never intended to be a precise and inflexible standard. It represents what the Post Office regards as a reasonable balance between the service that its customers want and the costs involved. The Post Office has not applied the criterion rigidly, but has, over the years, made decisions about post offices in the light of local circumstances.

Until the late 1960s, the network grew due to new housing development, population growth and growth in business. However, with some exceptions, closures were considered only when sub-postmasters resigned or retired and the distribution of population was not fully reflected in the provision of post offices.

A review undertaken by the Post Office in 1983 revealed an excess of about 2,000 offices against the criterion. The review also showed that about 2,000 urban offices failed to make a financial contribution to the financial overheads of the business. The excess of offices was especially evident in the inner cities, where the population movements were strongest.

The Post Office was aware that any proposals to tackle the excess of offices were bound to be unpopular, and we should commend the fact that it did not take the easy option of doing nothing but had the courage to draw up its proposals to reduce the number of post offices in urban areas.

The Post Office informed the Government about the outcome of the review and the proposals to reduce the urban network. We were concerned to ensure that the proposals did not prejudice our commitment to the maintenance of a network adequate to enable the Post Office to fulfil its statutory duty with regard to efficiency, economy and social needs. The Post Office's proposals included its intention to consult the National Federation of Sub-Postmasters, the Post Office trade unions and the Post Office Users National Council. It also confirmed that individual closure proposals would be subject to the existing code of procedure agreed with PONC in 1981, and revised in January 1984 to include Crown offices, which provides for consultation with local interests before final decisions are made to close offices.

The Government were satisfied with the overall balance that the Post Office wished to strike between the needs of those whom it served and the need for reasonable economy and efficiency. The proposals were consistent with its statutory duty. But that, I repeat, is the extent of our involvement. We are not involved in decisions to close offices, nor are we involved in the process of prior consultation. There have been some complaints about the operation of the consultation process. The hon. Member did not go as far as couching his comments in a way that I would describe as a complaint, but he mentioned the consultation process. I must tell him that, in more than 10 per cent. of cases, the Post Office has withdrawn proposals to close offices following local consultation.

To my mind, that is hardly evidence, as has been suggested by some hon. Members—although not by the hon. Gentleman — that the Post Office's approach is blinkered or that it merely goes through the motions, with the result already a foregone conclusion.

On the contrary, it suggests to me that the Post Office takes the process very seriously. This impression is borne out in the number of representations that have been made to me to intervene on particular closures, where those complaining have complimented the Post Office on the way that the consultations have been handled, even if they disagreed with the final decision. It seems to me that too many of those who complain about the procedure fail to distinguish between the decisions which the Post Office makes and the way that it has to make them.

As for the hon. Gentleman's main point about monopoly power, the requirements that the Government place on the Post Office to operate an efficient network should ensure, particularly with the consultation procedures and the various consultations with the different national bodies which I have just described, that nothing that the Post Office does could possibly be described as an abuse of its monopoly position. It has gone to great lengths, both in this case and in other cases of which I am aware, to satisfy itself and local people that alternative post offices exist. I do not think that the degree of care and attention that the post office devotes to this question could possibly justify the hon. Gentleman's description of the Post Office abusing its monopoly position.

I explained during the debate on 23 January that in undertaking the review of the urban counters network and in framing the subsequent proposals for reducing the size of the network the Post Office's aim is to improve the efficiency and cost-effectiveness of the counters network. The Post Office is well aware that closures are not popular, but it believes that the exercise is essential to secure the future of the network, to the long-term benefit of the community.

I appreciate and admire the hon. Gentleman's persistence. I do not claim that I have been able to convince him at this stage in the process, I hope that I have explained to him with sufficient clarity the Government's position vis-à-vis the Post Office Board and what the board is seeking to achieve by the various reductions it is making throughout its network while still fulfilling the requirement that we have placed upon it. The Post Office has the Government's full support in its endeavours to carry out the review and its programme.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at twenty-two minutes past Ten o'clock.

House of Commons

Friday 24 May 1985

The House met at half-past Nine o'clock

PRAYERS

[MR. SPEAKER in the Chair]

BILLS PRESENTED

REFORM

Mr. Tony Benn, supported by Mr. Tony Banks, Mrs. Margaret Beckett, Mr. Gerald Bermingham, Mr. Bob Clay, Mr. Martin Flannery, Mr. Eric S. Heffer, Miss Joan Maynard, Mr. Bill Michie, Mr. Dave Nellist, Mr. Dennis Skinner, and Mr. Gavin Strang, presented a Bill to extend and entrench the democratic rights of the electors of the United Kingdom, through their representatives in the House of Commons, over all legislation, all foreign and defence policy, all treaty-making and all executive powers that do not at present derive from statute, to abolish the House of Lords, to reduce the duration of a Parliament, to repeal the Official Secrets Act, and for purposes connected therewith: And the same was read the First time; and ordered to be read a Second time upon Friday 5 July and to be printed. [Bill 152.]

MEDICAL ACT 1983 (AMENDMENT)

Mr. Nigel Spearing, supported by Dr. Brian Mawhinney and Dr. M. S. Miller, presented a Bill to amend section 36 of the Medical Act 1983 to enable the Professional Conduct Committee of the General Medical Council to exercise greater discretion in respect of conduct which they judge cannot be regarded as acceptable professional conduct: And the same was read the First time; and ordered to be read a Second time upon Friday 7 June and to be printed. [Bill 153.]

Confectionery Industry

Motion made and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Archie Hamilton.]

9.35 am

Mr. Conal Gregory (York): My first Adjournment debate since the general election is the subject of some elation because I have been applying to you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, more on than off, for eight months. At long last my persistence has had success. On a sunny day such as this, what better subject to choose for debate than the United Kingdom confectionery industry—the subject of all my applications.

In view of the importance of our confectionery industry, it is amazing that this is the first debate, so far as I can find, on the subject since at least the second world war. Yet after Scotch whisky, confectionery is the second most important export in value to the food and drink sector.

I shall spell out what I mean by confectionery so that my hon. Friends do not misunderstand me. I interpret it as the collective name for sweetmeats and confections. It has enjoyed a long and distinguished part in our history. In 1545 Raynold referred to

"ambre, muske, frankincense, gallia muscata and confectionnere."

In 1769, Mrs. Raffald, the apogee of Georgian England, remarked in her "English Housekeeper":

"The receipts for the confectionery are such as I daily sell in my own shop."

We have moved to an era in which the art of the confectioner is no longer confined to a course of sweetmeats at dinner, delicious as After Eights are, not just then, but at any time of day.

It may be appropriate for me to place my constituents in the context of this great industry. The city of York saw the innovative rise of several industries during the last 20 to 30 years of the 18th century, including comb making, toy manufacturing, horn making, a glass works and a wholesale drug trade, all of which have now unfortunately disappeared. However, the town is now a world leader in confectionery.

Two family concerns are now giants in the confectionery industry. In 1725 Mary Tuke opened a grocer's shop which in 1752 passed to her nephew William, the Quaker philanthropist. In 1785 he was joined in the business by his son Henry, and from then on they manufactured cocoa and chocolate behind their Castlegate shop. Those were the modest beginnings of a business which in 1862 transferred to Henry Rowntree.

The confectionery trade of Terry and Sons started in St. Helen's square in 1767 in the firm of Bayldon and Berry. By 1851 Terry employed 127 staff. Rowntree employed 100 workers in 1879 and saw rapid expansion. By 1894 it employed 893 workers, and 15 years later 4,066. On a smaller scale M. A. Craven and Son and the York Confectionery Company Ltd. were also prospering.

Today, York is a thriving and elegant city. Confectionery is the major industry with the world headquarters of Rowntree Mackintosh, whose sales last year passed the £1,000 million mark for the first time. It is the home base of both Terry and Craven.

Since this is the first debate on this important subject since the second world war—several years before I was born—perhaps it would be appropriate to mention the state of the industry. Last year, the consumer value of home trade chocolate and sugar confectionery was about £2·4 billion, or 8 per cent. of consumer expenditure on food. Sales of chocolate confectionery continue to improve, with the achievement last year of another production record of almost 428,000 tonnes, beating the previous records established in 1982 and 1983. Home trade despatches of sugar confectionery in 1984 were 251,465 tonnes. That is an improvement on previous years, but is still 20 per cent. below the 1978 level—an important date, as I shall explain in a few moments—and 25 per cent. below the 1973 level.

In 1984, Britain exported more than 60,000 tonnes of chocolate confectionery, which is about the same as in 1978-79. Exports have been fairly static for the past seven years, and I shall examine why that is in a moment. Last year, almost 70,000 tonnes of sugar confectionery were exported, which is the highest for five years, but still well below the exports achieved in 1973 and 1979. I shall invite the House to consider which world leader enjoys sugar confectionery in moments of crisis. The principal export markets for British confectionery are Ireland, the United States of America, Saudi Arabia, West Germany and Canada.

After those few words of good cheer, I must mention some important political matters that are the reason for today's debate. Perhaps the most important matter is the tariff barriers which are a burden on the export achievements of British confectionery. There are three dimensions to that: duty, quotas and artificial labelling regulations.

The United States, like EC countries and many others, operates a protected sugar market. In January, in response to anxiety about the quantities of sugar being imported in mixes with other ingredients, President Reagan took action under section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act 1933 and signed a proclamation imposing quotas on goods under three tariff headings. They included sweetened cocoa powder and some edible preparations such as pancake mixes. In March this year, the President, acting under the same legislation, signed a letter ordering the United States International Trade Commission to investigate other tariff headings with a view to recommending whether quotas or extra duties should be imposed on them to protect the sugar regime. They include chocolate and sugar confectionery products and confectionery coatings, although my latest information is that retail packages will be excluded from the investigation.

The Americans have been complaining for some time that EC policy on citrus fruits discriminates against their exports. The dispute has been referred to GATT, but since the alleged discrimination has not been removed the Americans are considering retaliatory action on several tariff items, including sweetened chocolate and confectionery. This is extremely important to the House, because recommendations on the matter will be made to President Reagan by 30 May, and a decision will be taken within 28 days.

The confectionery industry rightly takes a grave view of those developments. Although exports, helped by the strong dollar, have increased in recent years, they cannot pose a serious threat to the vast American sugar market. Although the President may be under pressure from the strong sugar and citrus fruit lobbies, it is difficult to escape the impression that he is also responding to those who advocate more protectionism to help the American trade deficit. The British Government and the EC Commission have been made aware of the position and have undertaken to do all that they can to prevent action by the American authorities. I ask my hon. Friend for an assurance that everything possible is being done to ensure that no retaliatory action affects the $41 million export market to the United States—our No. 1 market.

Japan places extremely high duties on confectionery —35 per cent. on sugar confectionery and 20 per cent. on chocolate—but it pays only between 5 per cent. and 10 per cent. on its exports to the United Kingdom. It also has complex and protective packaging legislation. For example, if After Eights are exported to Japan, they must be in white envelopes, because the Japanese say that "optical brightening agents cannot be in contact with food."

If that sounds like double Dutch to my hon. Friend the Minister, I am afraid that she is in for even more. Nothing is formally published, and often the only way is to send goods and see whether they are accepted or rejected. Imported products have limited access to distribution outlets in Japan. It would be helpful if the Japanese Government would issue administrative guidance to their retail trade in general, encouraging them to buy and sell imported products.

If Britain is to receive as many Japanese cars as appear to be flooding the country, there must be some reciprocal treatment. The time for pleasant words over a glass of sake, or whatever my hon. Friend enjoys with the Japanese ambassador, are over. She should wield a fairly big stick and say that we are tired of Japan's false barriers. For example, Japan does not allow the emulsifier YN to be used in confectionery. Almost alone in the world, Japan uses a special glucose, and will not allow glucose in more than 28 parts per million of sulphur dioxide. That increases the costs of United Kingdom exporters by about 20 per cent. The Japanese are extremely fussy about emulsifiers, colours and wrapping materials. I am sure that the Department of Trade and Industry could occasionally discover that the rear axle of a Japanese car is not exactly the right size, and might consider taking action if the Japanese pursue their policy.

But the far east is not only Japan. Korea has 3,000 pages of complex ingredient and package rules of which there is no English translation. Therefore, British companies are often exporting in the dark. Fox recently had its products rejected. Taiwan claims that it has reduced its import duty, but it is still 70 per cent. It is a high trade surplus country.

South Africa will not accept standard United Kingdom weights, such as 8 oz, which is popular here with families. It will accept only 100 g, 200 g, and 300 g packages.

Unfortunately, problems also exist in the EC, and I draw my hon. Friend's attention to its newest member —Greece. Since 1981, the commercial margin allowed to importers and wholesalers combined has been limited to 10 per cent. Much hard work had gone into trying to persuade Greece to expand the margin, but so far to little avail. Although Greece has been a member of the EC for some time, it has still not abolished a regulatory tax, which is as high as 65 per cent. on some products. Importers of confectionery are not allowed to make more than 10 per cent. profit on chocolate confectionery and therefore cannot trade profitably. Greece does not allow food colouring, so all the chocolate exported there is white, and different coloured wrappers must be used to show different flavours.

The usual chocolate sold by Cadbury in the United Kingdom would be considered imitation chocolate in Belgium and the Netherlands, because it does not contain the required amount of cocoa solids. The West Germans say that a minimum of 25 per cent. cocoa solids should be used before a product can be called chocolate.

Therefore, perhaps with some of the delicious products from the British market, my hon. Friend the Minister will sit down with her EC opposite numbers and iron out those bureaucratic problems. There is a large bureaucracy to be overcome, which confectionery traders concerned with claiming refunds and monetary compensation amounts from the intervention board find especially burdensome. The simplest requirements are found in non-European sophisticated countries such as the United States and Australia.

The documents for the Common Market are not common to all member states. The proposal for a Council directive on chocolate and confectionery manufacture consists of no fewer than 32 pages. Let us remember that Abraham Lincoln's Gettysburg speech consisted of only 232 words, and the Ten Commandments of 309. This mass of EC rules and regulations is turning our confectioney executives into fruit and nut cases. I urge my hon. Friend the Minister to simplify procedures and work towards a really common market.

My second major theme concerns the dumping of non-EC confectionery. This is difficult to quantify, but it is definitely on the increase. Half the problem is in terminology. I am not referring to high price products—quite the contrary. Three to four years ago, non-EC confectionery accounted for a mere 2 per cent. of the market. Now it accounts for 10 per cent. of the market. Such confectionery originates in states where there is cheap labour, in South America—Argentina and Brazil—in South Africa and Eastern Europe—Czechoslovakia—although less so since there have been notably higher costs. My hon. Friend might like to have some dumped confectionery——

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Ernest Armstrong): Order. The hon. Gentleman must not perambulate while he is making a speech.

Mr. Gregory: I apologise, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I simply wanted my hon. Friend to see some dumped chocolate in due course, and I hope that she will take great care in future and draw the attention of her civil servants to he difficulties concerning the ingredients. These countries are dumping because they are after hard currency. There will come a time when my hon. Friend the Minister will be seduced into buying these materials for her family simply because of the low unit costs. At that stage, we shall be pricing confectionery workers out of employment.

What values and quantities of imported gums, jellies and pastilles, particularly orange and lemon slices, are coming in from these non-EC countries? I know the popularity of the jelly bean in President Reagan's household, but we have an even better quality product on this side of the Atlantic. If he visits York, I shall be delighted to show him a sample.

My third theme is VAT. Confectionery should be treated as a food and zero rated. This would bring VAT rules on confectionery into line with those in other EC states. In 1973, confectionery was zero rated and the volume of trade rose by 10 per cent. In 1979, the tax was reimposed and doubled. However, in Belgium there is a tax of only 6 per cent., and in West Germany one of only 7 per cent., although all foods incur it.

My hon. Friend may, in the considered way in which I know that she looks at these matters, say that we cannot differentiate between one category of food and another. If she does, I shall refer her to Indian confectionery sold here, which has been both manufactured here and imported here. This is zero rated and is made by companies such as the Royal Sweets and Bombay Halva Company in west London. Where is the logic behind the Indian community saying that its confectionery is food and has to be zero rated while ours is not? The confectionery made in my constituency and in that of my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, South (Mr. Powley) is also food, and we should like it to be zero rated. We have the precedent and the experience, and sales and employment would increase with zero rating.

The confectionery industry is in favour of nutritional labelling, but does not want a complicated system. It wants one that gives energy, fat, carbohydrate, protein and fibre contents.

It does not want a row with the EC over this. The ingredients labelling is on most products now, but in the EC labelling regulations differ between countries. In Canada there is labelling in French and in English. The COMA report on diet and cardiovascular disease suggests that high fat consumption is an important contributing factor to heart disease and proposes that food containing more than 10 per cent. fat, or which makes a significant contribution to fat in the diet, should be labelled with its fat content.

The confectionery industry is disappointed by my hon. Friend's stated intention that the Government will introduce legislation to require all such products to be labelled with their fat content. Insufficient account has been taken of possible retaliatory measures that legislation might provoke among the United Kingdom's trading partners in the EC. I have no objection to the introduction of a voluntary nutritional statement on food labels, and I am sure that the confectionery industry is actively working to promote this.

My next theme is unit pricing. The EC Commission has issued a draft directive that will require food to be labelled with the price per pound or kilo at point of sale. The confectionery industry is strongly opposed to this measure, which it believes will be costly to implement and meaningless to the consumer and may reduce the choice of available products. I should not like to add to the mass of material with which already civil servants, Customs and Excise and the confectioners themselves have to deal. Therefore, I welcome the report of the Select Committee of the other place which explicitly concurred with the following statement made by the Consumers in the European Community Group:

> "We have reservations about universal unit pricing. The cost of unit pricing has to be studied in terms of the benefits . . . Therefore, we would prefer unit pricing to proceed selectively by product and not as the Commission proposes by the establishment of the principle with a negative list of exemptions."

Although I see only one Labour Member present, I was horrified to learn of the Labour party's plan to tax sugar, as stated by the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr.

[Mr. Gregory]

Meacher), its Front Bench spokesman on social services. I am delighted that yesterday my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Treasury, advised in a parliamentary reply that the Conservative party had no such plans. In 1608 and 1635, a book of rates referred to duties on sugar. It seems that James I may have the dubious honour of being the first to tax the product. I would not suggest that, as he was also James VI of Scotland, he should have returned there. We should remember that the duty on British sugar was first repealed on 1 May 1874, reintroduced by the Finance Act 1901, and survived until 1962.

Dr. Norman A. Godman (Greenock and Port Glasgow): The hon. Member has mentioned both my party and Scotland. I am deeply concerned about the possibility of a tax on sugar, as one of the most important industries in my constituency is that of cane sugar refining.

Mr. Gregory: I hope that the hon. Gentleman will speak to his hon. Friend the Member for Oldham, West. Our sugar beet and refining industries are an ancillary aspect of the United Kingdom confectionery trade. The hon. Gentleman has better sense on this occasion than his Front Bench. I need hardly remind the House that a tax on sugar, one of the main ingredients of confectionery, would have serious consequences, and I invite my hon. Friend to confirm the Government's position.

Companies in England and Wales have no protection from hoaxes, as money is not involved. We all recall with horror the case last year involving animal rights liberation groups. Even if such people are found, they cannot be prosecuted. The Government should take early action in this matter. Co-ordination between the police, the Home Office, the industry and the consumer protection officers is needed. I realise that this is not the departmental responsibility of my hon. Friend, but as the threat occurred in this industry I hope that she will have consultations with her colleagues and ensure that this is regarded as a matter of priority. There is protection in Scotland and we need it to be extended south of the border.

A tax is also threatened on oil and fats. No British Minister can give an assurance on this unless the veto is used in the national interest, and then we would be unable to negotiate. Two regulations are involved. The first is regulation 262/79, which makes butter available at reduced prices from intervention stores for use, for example, in pastry products, sugar confectionery and the like. The second is regulation 1932/81, which makes butter available at reduced prices from the open market. This is not just a matter of EC bureaucracy. The main benefit to consumers is to pensioners. It is they who most enjoy fudge and other forms of oil and fat confectionery and we should be careful not to impose unnecessary tax burdens on that section of the population.

Her Majesty's Customs and Excise and the intervention board for agricultural produce administer the schemes. Among the things that they must ensure is that butter is not used in real chocolate as defined by the EC chocolate directive or in sugar confectionery. It may be used in real chocolate or in cakes, biscuits and ice cream. It may also be used in imitation chocolate and in sugar confectionery. The broad brush approach of the administration in Brussels would be to aid the dairy fat content of all composite foods covered by regulation 3033/80. The cost of the extension would be small but the benefits to companies and administrators would be large, but let us ensure that there is no tax on oils and fats.

The fifth report of the Select Committee on Agriculture on 25 April recommended that the Ministry should press for the confectionery industry to have direct access to Brussels. Commission decisions are made on the basis of advice from relatively junior civil servants of each country. I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will regard that recommendation as a helpful way to support her staff and diplomats.

I hope that my right hon. Friend the Patronage Secretary, who was here earlier, has passed on to the Whips Office—if not, I shall do so later—information about some of the problems with non-EC confectionery and the good British products with which my pockets are bulging, and I end with Arthur Marshall's splendid parody of John Betjeman:

"There's nougat at the Hendersons, the Hopes have got some fudge,
And Pam has popped the pralines in the tool-bag of her Rudge.
Voluptuous and tarmac-borne, she free-wheels through East Cheam,
My caramelly angel girl, My luscious sweet-meat dream."

I invite my hon. Friend the Minister to reply.

10.2 am

Mr. John Powley (Norwich, South): I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for York (Mr. Gregory) for allowing me to take part in this debate—the first for many years on an industry that is vitally important to this country. My hon. Friend will be aware, from his past connections with the city of Norwich, that the Rowntree Mackintosh factory is a major employer and a backbone of industry in the area, employing about 1,350 people. Everyone has seen the advertisements for Yorkie bars. The factory in my constituency produces about 22,000 tonnes of Yorkie bars per annum to keep lorry drivers going, so it is clearly vital to our communications system. I had the pleasure of visiting that factory recently and I know that what I saw there is common to confectionery factories in other parts of the country. It is a highly efficient industry, which has moved with the times and takes advantage of all the new technology to keep itself extremely competitive.

I wish to make two brief but vital points. First, as my hon. Friend the Member for York has rightly said, the industry needs a free and competitive market. My hon. Friend rightly described the barriers erected against our exports. We always tend to play the game with regard to tariffs and barriers but it seems that our competitors do not do so. I urge my hon. Friend the Minister to take seriously the need for competition to be fair and open for all countries so that our manufacturers can compete properly and fairly.

Secondly, the confectionery industry relies heavily on imports of raw materials. We need political and price stability in the exporting countries so that our manufacturers can plan their strategy, production and pricing with some certainty and without having their plans upset by political turmoil or price instability in the countries producing raw materials such as cocoa, mint and sugar which are essential to our industry but which cannot be grown in this country.

I have already mentioned the 1,350 employees in the industry in my constituency. I also make a plea for all the small shopkeepers selling confectionery throughout the land. They need a thriving confectionery industry for the stability of their small businesses. I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will take on board the need for fair and open competition for all aspects of the confectionery industry.

10.6 am

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (Mrs. Peggy Fenner): I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for York (Mr. Gregory) for raising this important subject. It is certainly time that the confectionery industry was debated in the House.

Confectionery sales in the United Kingdom amount to about £2·5 billion and about 8 per cent. of consumer expenditure. The United Kingdom has one of the highest levels of confectionery consumption in the world, which is doubtless a tribute to the production and marketing skills of our confectionery industry. There can be no doubt, therefore, that the industry makes an important contribution to our economy, to employment and, I suggest, to our quality of life. For my grandchildren, this will be the most important contribution that I shall make to any debate in my entire career.

Any major industry operating in difficult and highly competitive conditions in the world economy faces a number of problems. In the short time available, I shall do my best to deal with those mentioned by my hon. Friends the Members for York and for Norwich, South (Mr. Powley) as well as with a couple of other important issues.

First, as my hon. Friend the Member for York has said, our confectionery industry, especially the chocolate sector, has cause for a good deal of satisfaction. Recent company reports show increased sales and profits by leading manufacturers. In 1984, the United Kingdom confectionery market as a whole continued to grow for the fourth successive year. A further increase of 4 per cent. by volume took the market to new record levels in both tonnage and value. It was especially gratifying to note that sugar confectionery showed a modest increase after several years of decline.

In referring to the industry's strong and profitable performance, I should perhaps take the opportunity to comment on the point made by my hon. Friend the Member for York about value added tax. I appreciate the industry's concern that its products, together with ice cream, crisps and various other items, have historically attracted VAT while food generally has been exempt. I also appreciate the desire for parity of treatment for similar products.

I understand, however, that Customs and Excise has studied the example of Indian sweetmeats to which my hon. Friend referred and is satisfied that the products in question are essentially different from traditional confectionery. They are brought out at births, deaths and funerals and, when I visit the Sikh temple in my constituency, they are offered as hospitality and a welcome to worship. As VAT is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor, however, further representations should be made to him.

As one would expect with a sophisticated market such as confectionery, there is a two-way trade with other countries. I am glad to say, however, that our exports of confectionery substantially exceed imports and in 1984 increased by over 7 per cent. over the previous year. Indeed, the volume of confectionery exports as a proportion of total production is now double that for the food manufacturing industry generally. I hope that the industry will continue still further to increase its export performance, in co-operation with Food From Britain and its export arm, the British Food Export Council. The enlargement of the European Community to include Spain and Portugal should provide another promising area as tariff barriers begin to be abolished.

On the question of tariff and other trade barriers, I should like first to refer to the current developments in the United States to which my hon. Friend the Member for York referred. I was glad to note that the ban imposed in January on the import of a range of products which included sweetened cocoa powder has now been modified to permit imports in retail packages. Nevertheless, the United States international trade commission is currently investigating the possibility of introducing restraints on a broader range of sugar-containing products. That could certainly have an adverse effect on the United Kingdom's confectionery exports. The Government naturally view those developments with concern and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, during his recent visit to Washington, made clear to the United States authorities the strength of our objections to such restrictions. The European Commission has also raised the issue in the GATT. I certainly hope that the United States authorities will be dissuaded from introducing further restrictions on trade in this sector.

In Japan, to which my hon. Friend also referred, there remain serious tariff barriers. There has been some improvement in the case of chocolate confectionery. In 1983, following persistent pressure by the Government and a commendable initiative taken by the Chocolate, Cocoa and Confectionery Alliance, the tariff rate was reduced from 32 per cent. to 20 per cent. Unfortunately, a corresponding reduction was not made for sugar confectionery, the sector which offers the greatest export potential. The Japanese tariff on sugar confectionery remains at the unacceptably high level of 35 per cent. We will continue to make representations to the Japanese Government about the matter whenever opportunities arise.

The Department of Trade and Industry is aware of many of these problems and is seeking to have them removed. We will certainly discuss with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether there is anything more that we can do in this respect. The situation highlights the dangers of protectionism. I agree with my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, South (Mr. Powley) that the EC should be a true common market. On EC procedures, I assure my hon. Friend that we support moves to create a more genuinely common market in that respect.

I suppose that the problem raised by my hon. Friend the Member for York in relation to third country imports of low-priced chocolate into the Community presents the inverse of tariff barriers. The European Commission has responsibility, on behalf of member states, for action on anti-dumping issues, although the Department of Trade and Industry maintains an anti-dumping unit which is always willing to advise and help in the preparation of anti-dumping cases.

While dealing with questions of international trade, I should like to refer briefly to the negotiations that have been held under the auspices of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development for a fourth international cocoa agreement. My hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, South stressed the importance of stability in the markets for raw materials. The present agreement — the third — has not proved successful, because it sought to defend price levels that proved totally unrealistic, partly as a result of the rise in the value of the dollar, on which the agreement price is based.

Our objective, and that of our Community partners, is to ensure that any successor agreement aims to secure price stabilisation based on market realities and through the mechanism of sensible and adjustable defence prices. On that basis we shall continue to participate constructively. Perhaps I could take this opportunity to place on record the Government's appreciation of the support that they have received in negotiations from the confectionery industry and the cocoa trade.

I am very conscious of the concern in the confectionery industry about the recommendations of the report of the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy and the action that the Government will take to implement those recommendations. The report did not single out particular foods and the Government have no intention of doing so either. What COMA recommended was a reduction in the consumption of fat and particularly saturated fatty acids. Our aim in implementing the recommendations is to ensure that consumers have the necessary information to enable them to follow the COMA advice. The wide-ranging labelling provisions that we envisage will enable consumers to identify the important sources of fat in the diet and thus to select an eating pattern that is both healthy and palatable.

My hon. Friend was worried about the effect of the COMA proposals on our partners in Europe. They might be regarded as a potential barrier to intra-Community trade. That is not what they are intended to be. They represent our response to a serious public health problem in the United Kingdom.

Although this was not among the COMA recommendations, the Government have also proposed guidelines for those who wish voluntarily to adopt full nutritional labelling, including energy, proteins and carbohydrates as well as fats.

My hon. Friend was concerned about proposals for taxes on fats and on sugar. I confirm that we remain opposed to any tax on oils and fats, as that would have a damaging effect on the food industry, consumers and third country suppliers. We are equally opposed to the recent misguided suggestion of a tax on sugar.

Dr. Godman: Hear, hear.

Mrs. Fenner: I am glad to note that at least one Opposition Member agrees with us about that.

My hon. Friend referred to the regrettable activities of the so-called Animal Liberation Front. I can appreciate the concern of the confectionery industry and indeed of food manufacturers and distributors generally over the problem. I cannot deplore too strongly the irresponsible and malicious acts carried out in the name of that body. Nevertheless, I am advised that the Food Act 1984 should provide adequate protection for companies whose products have been subject to malicious tampering. If, however, my hon. Friend is aware of any specific respect in which he feels the Act does not adequately meet the problem, I hope that he will send me details and I will consider the matter.

My hon. Friend referred to unit pricing. The Government are opposed to the Commission's proposal to extend unit pricing to foodstuffs. We believe that it would give little useful information to consumers and would place unnecessary burdens on food manufacturers and distributors. We consider that a sensible system of standardisation of package sizes would be a far more satisfactory, and far cheaper, means of helping consumers to make value-for-money comparisons.

My hon. Friend was concerned about direct access. If he has any special problems, I hope that he will write to me. The normal access of the industry to the Commission is through CAOBISCO, the European trade body that has close and frequent contact with the Commission.

At racing pace and given a little injury time, I hope that I have answered most if not all the points raised in an interesting and useful debate.

I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for York on his persistence on this matter, which concerns the great city that he represents in the House and which has a particular interest in the industry. I know that my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, South shares that interest.

I conclude by congratulating the confectionery industry on its achievements in the past few years in an environment that has not always been wholly favourable, and I assure it and the House of our concern to ensure a propitious climate for its continued success.

Alcohol Abuse

10.20 am

Dr. Norman A. Godman (Greenock and Port Glasgow): I should like to say first of all that I am not a prohibitionist. In this place, it would be difficult to work up support for such a policy.

I raise this Adjournment debate so that the Under-Secretary of State can answer certain questions concerning alcohol abuse and its treatment. I recognise that its treatment extends beyond his Department, so I should be grateful to him if he passed on some of my observations and questions to his colleagues.

In the light of the report of the Select Committee on Home Affairs on the misuse of drugs, which was published yesterday, there may be those who are of the opinion that my time would be better employed discussing hard drug abuse. Drug abuse is a most serious social problem in Britain today. The Select Committee's report states that cocaine has become the "drug of choice" in America, and is becoming increasingly popular in Britain. It states further:

"We fear that unless immediate and effective action is taken Britain and Europe stand to inherit the American drug problem in less than five years. We see this as the most serious peacetime threat to our national well-being."

I readily acknowledge that drug abuse is a major social problem, but I emphasise that alcohol misuse or abuse is equally serious. For millions of British people the choice of drug is alcohol. For example, it has been estimated that in any one week over 75 per cent. of men and 50 per cent. of women will drink alcohol. Taken over a 12-month period, 50 per cent. of the population will consume alcoholic beverages. Adult consumption in the United Kingdom almost doubled between 1950 and 1980. During that period the price of drinks in real terms has more than halved. Since 1980 there has been a slight fall in consumption. I believe that that decline is due to the economic recession and fiscal policy, with the 1981 Budget increase in the price of drinks, for example.

It has been estimated by the Scottish Home and Health Department that Scots spend about £3·5 million daily on alcoholic drinks, which represents 7·5 per cent. of consumer spending. I am not criticising my fellow Scots because United Kingdom consumer spending on alcohol in 1984 equalled some £14,319 million, which is about 7·5 per cent. of all consumer expenditure. I believe that in Scotland, as well as elsewhere in the United Kingdom, alcohol is a significant element in everyday life, particularly in recreational and leisure activities. I am seeking moderation in alcohol consumption. We need a more active commitment from the Government to an alcohol health education programme.

In an excellent report called "Health education in the prevention of alcohol-related problems", produced by the Scottish Health Education Co-ordinating Committee, the authors said on alcohol consumption:

"Alcohol is used as a stimulant, a tranquilliser, a celebrant, a medicine, a social lubricant, a religious symbol, and as an indicator of the transition from work to play. The functions of its use are so diverse that at times they are contradictory. Our expectations about the value and effects of alcohol influence our behaviour to a far greater extent than do the mood-altering properties of the drug . . . . Discussion about alcohol and the problems associated with its use provoke a diversity, and often a conflict, of opinions. This is never more so than when strategies for prevention of abuse are being considered."

While I am sure that the Minister has read that excellent report, I ask him to advise his officials to read it. The British Medical Journal said in its review of the report:

"The past 10 years have seen a plethora of reports on alcohol, but most have been concerned with describing the problems associated with alcohol rather than a plan for overcoming them. The only report that came close to matching this present Scottish report in the scope of its suggestions was the suppressed report by the Government's think tank (Central Policy Review Staff). The flimsy Department of Health and Social Security document Prevention and Health: Drinking Sensibly, which could be seen as the Government substitute for the suppressed report, was much stronger on platitudes than suggestions."

I believe that a similar examination should be conducted south of the border with a subsequent report, I hope of similar quality, to the Scottish report. I hope that the Minister will confirm that such an exercise will take place in England and Wales in the near future. I am sure that the Minister will agree that alcohol abuse is not peculiar to Scotland. That form of drug abuse continues on its widening and destructive path throughout the whole of the United Kingdom.

I should like to refer to the economic costs and benefits of alcohol. A report of a British Medical Association conference, which I believe the Minister addressed, said:

"The Government refused to take the strong measures needed to curb alcohol abuse because it was afraid of offending the drinks industry, said Mr. Derek Rutherford, Director of the institute of Alcohol Studies. Ministers were defending the commercial interests of the drinks industry in the same way that they have defended the tobacco firms."

The Minister may wish to respond to that allegation.

It is certainly true that the state derives enormous positive benefits from alcohol. The production, marketing, distribution and selling of alcoholic beverages provides employment for more than 750,000 people. United Kingdom excise duties and value added tax obtained from the sale of alcohol in the financial year 1983-84 will exceed £5,200 million, which is one third of the cost of running the National Health Service.

This morning we have heard about exports of confectionery. The value of alcohol exports exceeds £900 million a year and there is a pronounced positive balance of trade with other nations. However, the economic costs of alcohol are formidable. Those costs relate to lost production and absenteeism and the cost to the social and medical services of treating those suffering from alcohol abuse. It has been variously estimated that these costs amount to about £1·2 billion. There are other costs, of which alcohol-related crime and fire are two, but there are still others which are extremely difficult to quantify.

Given the fact that alcohol is the drug of choice of millions of people, it is not surprising that the use of alcohol presents so many problems to the individual, his or her family, the community, the police, the health services and the Government. The Government have a major role to play. The type and extent of the problems will vary, but they involve problems with the law, including drunkenness, drinking and driving, criminal damage, theft, assault and homicide, social problems including aggression, domestic violence, child neglect and abuse, domestic accidents, absenteeism and road traffic accidents; and medical problems including alcoholic poisoning, drug overdose, acute gastritis, acute trauma, head injuries, parasuicide, epilepsy and amnesia.

Although there is no universal definition of the number of alcoholics in Britain, the estimates vary widely between 400,000 and 800,000. In my area of Scotland, the lower

[Dr. Norman A. Godman]

Clyde, hundreds of persons have been proceeded against for the offences of being drunk and incapable and of habitual drunkenness. In an answer given to me by the Under-Secretary of State for Scotland — the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Ancram) — in column 411 of the Official Report of 21 May 1985 I was informed that in 1984 in the district court in Inverclyde 797 people were proceeded against. In Strathclyde the figure was 3,456 and in Scotland as a whole it was 6,500. I am anxious to emphasise that this is not just a Scottish problem. It is a British problem, because the figures for England and Wales are equally high. An answer given in the other place showed that, in 1982, there were 107,326 findings of guilt for offences of drunkenness in England and Wales. This is a massive problem which involves a great deal of police and court time.

The same answer given in the other place provides grimmer statistics on the numbers of death from cirrhosis of the liver between 1979 and 1983. There is a remarkable consistency in the numbers of recorded deaths from this illness. In 1979, 2,676 people died in the United Kingdom as a result of cirrhosis of the liver. In 1983, the figure was 2,679. In Scotland the rates are even higher.

About one road death in five—about 1,200 a year—occurs in accidents where at least one person has consumed an amount of alcohol over the legal limit. Between 1968 and 1980 convictions for drunken driving in Scotland increased, although the numbers have declined since then. The Scottish conviction rate for drunken driving is far higher than the rates in England and Wales. In 1981, the rate per 100,000 of the population was 123 for England and Wales, whereas for Scotland it was 217. Conviction rates are, of course, determined by both police activity and the amount of alcohol consumed.

Many other costs are borne by the drinkers, their families, the community and the state. For example, statistics on days lost due to alcohol-induced sickness have been estimated at between 8 million and 15 million days a year. In some industries, this is known as the Friday afternoon-Monday morning problem.

There is clear evidence of the role of alcohol abuse in family problems. One third of all divorce petitions cite alcohol as a contributory factor. One third of child abuse cases have been linked to the regular heavy drinking of one or both parents.

I have sought to highlight some of the problems surrounding the British choice of drug. The Government have a major role to play in containing these and other problems. This Government and earlier Administrations have left far too much of the burden on the hard-pressed local authorities and voluntary associations. I criticise not just this Government but Governments during the past 20 years. The voluntary associations do a fine job with inadequate resources.

I should like to ask the Under-Secretary of State a few questions, some of which he may be able to answer during this debate. When can the House expect a joint statement by the DHSS and the Home Office on their policy on public drunkenness?

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security (Mr. John Patten): Shortly.

Dr. Godman: That is the type of answer I like—beautifully succinct. I hasten to say, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that I shall not take too many interventions.

Is there any likelihood in the near future of the Government's policy on designated places being changed? I hope that the Under-Secretary of State feels able to contain himself on that question. The Government's policy is clearly set out in a letter of 1 March 1985 which I received from the Under-Secretary of State for Scotland with responsibility for health and social work—the hon. Member for Argyll and Bute (Mr. MacKay). I have the hon. Gentleman's permission to quote his letter. He said:

"Thank you for your letter . . . about the possibility of setting up a designated place at Greenock, to which the police could take persons found drunk as an alternative to charging them."

There is no danger of the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow falling into that category, despite the fact that, occasionally, he likes a glass of malt whisky, especially at the end of a fine meal. He believes that a malt whisky is far superior to a continental liqueur. The Under-Secretary of State continued:

"After the coming into force of section 5 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 1980, my Department issued guidelines on designated places in April 1982 . . . the initiative in setting up such a place is in the first instance for local authorities and voluntary bodies. The Secretary of State is prepared to offer advice and guidance on the setting up of designated places and is at present making use of his power to assist voluntary bodies under section 10 of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968 to pay grant for the setting up and running of Albyn House, Aberdeen"——

I am sure that the Under-Secretary of State has heard of Albyn house—

"but before considering a scheme for Greenock . . . the Secretary of State . . . would need to establish that there was in being a group capable of sponsoring and running the project and that arrangements had been or were being made to involve, and obtain the support of, all the agencies who would be referring people to a designated place . . . Grants to local voluntary bodies"—— and I shall be questioning the Minister about such grants——

"are normally time-limited (the standard period being three years) and we would also need to establish that if a designated place were to be set up . . . in Greenock . . . there should be reasonable prospects of its continuing after the end of the grant period."

I have quoted extensively from that document because it encapsulates the Government's thinking on designated places, certainly north of the border.

Designated places play an important role in dealing with drunkenness offenders. We have only one such place in Scotland, Albyn house, in Aberdeen, which was opened as recently as March 1984, but already it has been a conspicuous success. Within 12 months of opening, Albyn house and its staff have gained the confidence and support of the local police, doctors, social workers, members of the legal profession and, most important, of the clients. The chief constable of Grampian, Mr. Lynn, recently said:

"The principal effect in so far as Grampian Police are concerned is that arrest procedure and the accompanying administrative process, both time-consuming, are now almost non-existent. A second important feature is that the maximum supervision of drunks in police cells is not always practicable and is a matter of concern, whereas constant attention can be provided by the staff of Albyn House. Grampian Police benefits from Albyn House, as Officers, if only in a relatively small way, are less hindered in performing the more important aspects of their statutory functions, which is surely in the public interest."

The chief constable raised an important point concerning the custody of those suffering from drunkenness, for it is a regrettable fact that too many have died while in police custody, death having been brought about in some instances by vomiting leading to asphyxiation. It is a real problem and the chief constable hit on an important point in that context.

Having discussed the issue of designated places with Mr. Drew Watson, director of the Inverclyde Council on Alcoholism, senior police officers — including Chief Superintendent Barry Shaw, the most senior police officer in my constituency—and social workers and doctors, it is patently evident to me that we require a designated place in Greenock and Port Glasgow. I appreciate that the Minister has no responsibility for that, but I trust that he will bring it to the attention of his Scottish colleagues. I say with regret that we need one in Greenock, but many more are needed throughout the United Kingdom. Is there any likelihood of the Government taking up more of the financial burden? For example, is there any chance of an extension of the grant period from three to, say, 10 years? Grampian region will have serious problems concerning Albyn house once the three-year period is up.

Designated places can tackle only a small area of alcohol abuse and hence much more needs to be done. In the time remaining to me, I can outline only some of the areas where the Government can do much more to tackle the social evil of alcohol abuse. Close and continuing co-operation between the Government, local authorities, health and social services, employers and trade unions is vital for the containment, and I hope prevention, of alcohol abuse.

What are the Government's plans for the development and extension of health education programmes? Such programmes concerning alcohol abuse must be brought into schools. There is far too much alcohol abuse among teenagers, both north and south of the border. It is a real problem. Indeed, it is more serious in some respects than solvent abuse and certain other forms of drug-taking. Do the Government believe that such educational programmes should be organised by local authorities and voluntary organisations, or do they believe that the Government have a more comprehensive role to play? What Government-sponsored research is being undertaken in the vital sphere of health education?

I appreciate, as I come to fiscal policy, that the Minister may not be able to answer for the Government on many of the points that I raise. The Scottish report to which I referred contains the argument that an increase in excise duty reduces the average per capita consumption of alcohol and, in particular, the consumption of the heaviest drinkers. In terms of fiscal policy, what is the Minister's response to the observation that the Government should, as a positive health measure, regularly increase the duty on alcoholic beverages in line with the retail price index or, better still, add an extra 3 to 5 per cent. each time an increase is made?

The authors of that report argue that recent evidence supports their point of view. They mean by that that in the 1981 Budget the excise duty on alcoholic beverages was increased dramatically and that that decision, in tandem with price increases introduced by the breweries, meant that for the first time for several decades, the price of alcoholic drinks increased by much more than the overall rise in the retail price index.

Between 1978 and 1981, the RPI of alcoholic drinks increased by 61 per cent., whereas the RPI of all products increased by 52 per cent., and personal disposable income rose by 55 per cent. In other words, drinks were more expensive to buy. In 1981-82, for the first time for 30 years, the per capita consumption of alcohol in Britain declined, from 10·4 to 9·3 litres of pure alcohol per adult. That decline was accompanied by a 10 per cent. reduction in convictions for drunkenness and an 8 per cent. decline in convictions for drunken driving. Clearly, that was more than coincidental.

There are other areas in which the Government could play a more decisive role. For example, are Home Office Ministers satisfied with the education and training that police officers receive in dealing with alcohol problems and their prevention? Is education concerning alcohol problems a prominent feature of police training programmes? If not, why not?

I appreciate that the Minister has no responsibility for police training, but do social workers receive any training in the detection and prevention of alcohol abuse? That is important, given that alcohol abuse features so largely in, for instance, child abuse cases. Are social workers equipped to tackle alcohol problems, or are they simply encouraged to pass on those problems to the local special alcohol unit?

I appeal to the Government to encourage more actively the development of joint employee policies on alcohol abuse. In a growing number of companies, members of senior management and trade union representatives negotiate alcohol recovery programmes which have as their objective the early identification of alcohol-related problems. Many companies have adopted that policy and found that it reduces the incidence of alcohol-induced inefficiency, gives health and sport to employees and their families and discourages the felt need to lie, conceal or deny the existence of a problem. As a major employer of labour, the Government could exercise a considerable influence throughout the country.

I know that this is nothing to do with the Minister, but is there an alcoholic recovery programme for hon. Members and employees of this House and the other place? It is some time since we had a drunken Parliament. The Scottish Parliament which sat in Glasgow on 1 October 1662 had only one sober Member on its first sitting day. The Minister ought not to hold that against us when we demand a Scottish Parliament.

The nation needs a public health policy on alcohol abuse. There is a staggering growth in alcohol-related problems and we must ask whether the Government are doing enough and whether their policies are likely to contain or reduce this social disease. I believe that much more could be done.

10.50 am

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security (Mr. John Patten): The hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman) has given the subject of this debate a good airing and I have listened carefully to him. We do not always get time to debate this matter in full. I am grateful to him for the style and content of his speech.

The hon. Gentleman was extremely courteous to my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in allowing her to encroach on his time. I must reply rather briefly so that I do not go into the time of my hon. Friend the Member for

[Mr. John Patten]

Lewisham, East (Mr. Moynihan). I shall speak rather fast and try to be succinct, along the lines of my intervention in the hon. Gentleman's speech.

The hon. Gentleman asked many questions on matters which are not my ministerial responsibility. I shall try to reply across ministerial boundaries. It is not very helpful to say that a matter is one for my right hon. Friend for this or my hon. Friend for that, although it is a rather good defensive line when the temperature is raised. The hon. Gentleman is quite right to say that alcohol and certain drugs can be benificial in tightly controlled circumstances. For example, heroin is still used for the relief of pain. It is important that, while being rightly worried about the threat of heroin and cocaine abuse, we do not forget other substances such as alcohol, tobacco or solvents, the abuse of which can also cause mayhem. My Department is keen not to fall into that trap.

I cannot speak with authority about Scotland, so I shall have to seek advice from my colleagues in the Scottish Office. I shall also ask for advice from colleagues in the Home Office and the Department of Transport to compose the omnibus letter that I shall have to write to the hon. Gentleman.

The Government are determined to do as much as possible to mitigate the effects of heroin and cocaine coming into the country. That is why, in 1984, we spent an extra £19 million on the police force, why every police force has a regional drugs squad, why we spent an additonal £10·5 million in 1984 on customs activity against heroin and cocaine, why we put an extra 160 officers in the drugs squad — there is now a cocaine squad — why we mounted a £2 million educational publicity campaign and why we have customs and intelligence officers in countries such as Holland, Pakistan and India in an attempt to cut off the lines of supply.

At a recent meeting, I talked to Ministers and other people from countries such as Pakistan, Taiwan, Bolivia and Mexico where drugs are grown, refined and exported, to stress to them, eyeball to eyeball, how strongly British people feel about their export of drugs. The World Health Organisation must get on faster with its programme of drug education.

I shall not refer to the hon. Gentleman's suggestion that there should be advice available in this place about alcohol. That is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House and the usual channels. It is not water into which I shall put my toe as I fear that it would be badly burnt. I am sure that the whole House agrees that alcohol is not bad unless it is abused. Indeed, some medical advice suggests that small amounts of alcohol taken regularly can be beneficial for some people in certain circumstances. I am told that the odd glass of wine taken daily is good for men with heart problems. Other medical authorities maintain that four or five glasses a day is bad for everything from the liver to the brain and back again, never mind work patterns.

Moderation should be encouraged. The hon. Gentleman quoted the British Medical Journal or a speech by a member of the British Medical Association. Our document entitled "Drinking Sensibly", which has been widely welcomed, does not give flimsy advice. Indeed, its advice is good and straightforward — be sensible, be moderate. The problem is getting that message across. The hon. Gentleman gave us statistics covering everything from days of absence from work to road accidents. We all know what the problem is and the answer — do not abuse alcohol. That is why health education is so important and why the Health Education Council in England, Wales and Northern Ireland and its equivalent body in Scotland are so active. That is why a new body called Alcohol Concern is being funded at such a high level. It brought together all of the voluntary bodies of substance—one or two chose not to join—in an attempt to deal with the problem nationally. We sometimes give substantial funds to local projects.

The problem of alcohol abuse must be worked out by each individual in the world in which he lives — his family, his place of work and so on. While we can prime the pump and fund national bodies concerned with health education, in the end the necessary services are best provided at local level. We can prime the pump and fund national bodies for a while—three years appears to be the norm—but thereafter it is better dealt with locally.

I pledged that I would not speak beyond 11 o'clock. The hon. Gentleman may not have appreciated the integrated nature of the Government's approach to alcohol abuse. If so, that is my fault for not having put it across more clearly. I shall try to put right that misapprehension in the very long letter — that is both a threat and a promise—that I shall write to him in a few weeks.

Foreign and Commonwealth Office Vote

11.1 am

Mr. Colin Moynihan (Lewisham, East): While I have neither eyes to see nor ears to hear what happens behind the Bar of the House or in the Box, I understand that a number of the Minister's advisers will be present today. As I shall be present for further Adjournment debates this morning in my capacity as parliamentary private secretary, when I shall have no voice to speak, I take this opportunity to thank the advisers for giving up this official public holiday for the Civil Service in honour of the Queen's birthday in order to assist the House in its proceedings.

In 1979 my right hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, South-East (Mr. Pym), the then shadow Foreign Secretary, declared that the underlying theme of Conservative foreign policy was the safeguading not only of our own freedom but that of the whole free world. Every free country has a shared interest in the freedom of every other country, and we in Britain should look forward from this island in that spirit and with that faith.

A remarkable series of events have witnessed the British Government speaking and acting clearly in favour of British and Western interests since then. There was a peaceful and democratic settlement on Zimbabwe after 15 years of deadlock and abortive negotiations. The rebuffed Argentine aggression reminded a doubting world of the conviction of a democratic country in safeguarding not only its own freedom but that of the whole free world. There has been a strengthening of our defences and a new emphasis on the protection of human rights during this year's visit to Poland by the Foreign Secretary and the negotiations about the future of Hong Kong — all of which are hallmarks in a period of our foreign policy that reflects an essential guarantee of a strong and decisive projection of Britain abroad.

Today I test the means by which such a projection is achieved—the Foreign and Commonwealth Office Vote, and the financing of the diplomatic service, the BBC overseas service and the British Council in particular. Of course, resources are scarce in any spending Department. Of course, politics is the business of organising priorities. Allocation must be achieved in the interest of the public good so that the broad policy that I have outlined can best be effected.

A classic vehicle through which that policy can be effected is a flourishing BBC overseas service. It is respected for its quality, accuracy and impartiality, and it enhances Britain's image abroad. We live in one of the few societies in the world where a genuine, accurate, impartial and truthful service is one of the best selling points for a country. Three words sum up a uniquely British idea—accurate, impartial and truthful. They are the best possible ambassadors for British diplomacy. That is a remarkable fact.

The unique world reputation held by the BBC external broadcasting service must be strongly supported. Ways and means are urgently needed to improve audibility and to bring about modernisation. The emphasis on audibility is all the more important when our competitors are boosting transmissions. Let us consider one example—the lifeline that the BBC external service is providing to the Afghan refugees. Between October and December 1984, a survey was conducted in the north-west frontier province of Pakistan where Pashto is the principal language spoken. Interviews were carried out among two separate samples of 600 adults each, one representing the adult urban population of the north-west frontier province, the other representing the Afghan refugees settled in the various camps of the province. According to latest population estimates, the total urban population of the north-west frontier province is close to 2 million, of whom about 1 million are adults. The Afghan refugee population of Pakistan is officially estimated at almost 3 million, and in the area covered by the survey there are 1·3 million refugees, of whom about half are adults.

The BBC Pashto service, which broadcasts for four hours a week, was inaugurated in August 1981. The survey provided the first opportunity to assess its impact among two distinct populations. Among Pakistanis, most people understand Urdu. Previous research in Pakistan, most recently in 1982, has shown a large, well-established audience for the BBC in Urdu in the north-west frontier province. In terms of their exposure to the BBC, the Pashto speakers of Pakistan are very different. Although many of them understand the Iranian Farsi language, the introduction of the Pashto service represented the first occasion on which the BBC had spoken to them in a language that the majority could understand.

It is interesting that both communities use radio as their main source of news. However, the resemblance stops there. Among Pakistanis, radio is closely challenged by television, with newspapers rather further behind. Among Afghans, television is almost wholly unavailable, and the low level of literacy results in little usage of newspapers. The radio is overwhelmingly dominant among the formal media and word of mouth is the only other news source, especially for women.

The regular radio audience figures are astonishingly high — 64 per cent. for Afghans and 61 per cent. for Pakistanis. Just over half the Afghan refugees listen to the BBC in Pashto. There are regular Pashto audiences among men of 88 per cent. for the BBC, 50 per cent. for Iranian radio and 40 per cent. for Voice of America.

Anyone who has visited the area will know that those transmissions are vital lifelines. It is for that reason that more Afghans listen to the BBC external service than to Voice of America, All-India Radio, Deutsche Welle and Radio Moscow combined. Yet, regrettably, that is all too uncommon a picture worldwide.

In the House on 22 November my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary said about external services:

"the BBC, too, has had to face some increase in costs. I do not believe that it would be right to meet that increase in full. As in the case of the British Council, I shall be looking for savings of about 1 per cent. in its total expenditure."—[Official Report, 22 November 1984; Vol. 68, c. 429.]

The reduction of £1 million to £2 million envisaged this year will be the ninth cut in the working revenue of the external services for 10 years.

The cuts of 1982 ended the Spanish for Europe, the Italian and the Maltese services. French for Europe and the Brasilian service were halved. During the Falklands war that same year, the two nations in Europe least sympathetic to Britain because of their historical ties were Spain and Italy.

The grant to the transcription service that supplies recorded programmes for rebroadcasting to more than 100 countries was reduced by £300,000, and the number of programme hours from 500 to 350 per annum. The Government agreed, and this was welcomed, to fund the BBC programme of capital expenditure starting in 1981-82 of £102 million, to be spent during the following nine years. That included new transmitters in Hong Kong and the Seychelles and the replacement of United Kingdom transmitters, some of which were installed during the second world war. The willingness of the Government to build costly transmitters contrasts with the cutting of the number of services going out on them, which seems to lead to an inefficient use of capital.

It is true that in this year the BBC will receive an additional £700,000. That corresponds to the difference between the 3 per cent. cash limit for pay last year and the actual settlement of 4·8 per cent., similar to that of the Civil Service. The indicated cut of £1·2 million with which the external services will have to cope this year corresponds to improvements in conditions of employment that the corporation as a whole is having to make to remain competitive within its employment market.

Even if the present savings are found, they cause much greater problems in prospect for future years. In the next three years the external services could be facing a deficit of some 10 per cent. of its operating costs. That could be met only by a major reduction in broadcasting. A now crucial change in the way that the BBC's external services are funded was recommended at the end of last year. A plan was brought forward for money to be made available to the external services from the Government for exactly the same length of time, and at exactly the same point in time, as the licence fee settlement for the rest of the BBC. I support that plan.

Funds for the external services, which are part of the Foreign Office Vote, are currently granted for just one year, and that has led to a series of annual cost crises as successive Governments have tried to trim public expenditure. But the inquiry has accepted the BBC's contention that a move away from the one-year financial straitjacket for the external services' operating expenditure would facilitate more effective and efficient forward planning. The report also recommends that capital underspending of up to 10 per cent. — because of unforeseen delays in transmitter replacement projects, for example — can in future be carried over from one financial year to the next.

I hope that at this stage in the Public Expenditure Survey Committee round, my hon. Friend the Minister will press the Treasury to reflect on the increased costs and the effect of the depreciation of sterling. I also hope that he will consider how greatly the external services might benefit from the protection against depreciation that is customarily enjoyed by the Foreign Office. I further hope that he will agree that any further savings in total expenditure would militate against Britain's interests overseas and would be, to use Lord Carrington's words,

"totally counterproductive and the money saved trivial compared to the amount of damage done."

I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will urge the Treasury to recognise that international broadcasting is a growth business. Voice of America has been given a $1·2 billion expansion plan. France has just had an austerity budget, and its foreign relations expenditure was reduced all round, with the exception of one item — external broadcasting. The money for that was increased from 296 million francs to 335 million francs.

The Japanese are expanding their overseas radio services as well, and the Soviet Union has expanded its output and dominates the airwaves in terms of hours broadcast: 2,200 hours a week as opposed to the BBC's 720 hours a week. But above all, I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will see the strength of the moral argument that we have a duty to support the BBC's overseas service. It is a moral duty when something that is so small a burden on a rich country can provide such a massive service to the people of the world, and has substantial invisible exports. We need moral recognition that, despite the millions invested in Radio Moscow and Voice of America, the BBC has the most respected independent status, and its impartial voice is an essential means of sharing our interest in the freedom of every other country.

No one who has ever seen the extensive use made of British Council libraries around the world would hesitate to acknowledge that here is an institution central to Britain's role in overseas representation. The council has become a focus for a wide range of cultural activities. Meanwhile the council's emphasis on English language teaching is vital not just to thousands but millions worldwide.

In response to the Berrill report, The Times wrote:

"Britain's values have been formed by centuries of international traffic in culture and information. If Britain ceases to attach high importance to continuing participation in this traffic, loses faith in the contribution she makes to it, and fails to respond to the demand which her excellence generates abroad, her own cultural bloodstream will become that much poorer, her self-respect that much lower, and in the long run her international influence that much smaller."

That is why many of us regret that the opportunities will be missed now that the British Council has announced a programme of closures and cuts to meet the additional savings of £1·1 million required by the Government.

The opening of a new British Council office in Shanghai has been postponed. The council's Oporto office will close, as will one English language teaching institute in Venezuela. A post will be withdrawn from Qatar. Funds to send books overseas and for academic and youth exchanges will be reduced. The balance will come from cuts in the council's computerisation and capital programmes.

The savings demanded by the Government are in addition to £800,000 already required for 1985-86 to meet the cash limit imposed on the council. The latest cuts bring the reduction in the British Council's budget to almost 22 per cent. in real terms since 1979, and many posts have been lost. Ten regional offices have been closed in Britain and representation has been withdrawn from Afghanistan, Argentina, Iran, Malta, Mauritius and Costa Rica. Although some of those withdrawals were involuntary, they contributed to the necessary savings, and prevented closure elsewhere. Further cuts will inevitably mean reducing activity and closing more overseas offices. Moreover, the British Council will find it more difficult to respond to the new opportunities for Britain overseas or to take advantage of any improvement in political relations with South America or the middle east. Equally, the council will not be able to open an office in Brunei where other countries have recognised the scope for educational consultancies.

I agree with those who argue that the council should constantly look to increase revenue. But that activity is not a substitute for regular Government income. It tends to increase activity in the country in which it is earned, but not to create a surplus for easy transfer elsewhere. Of £26·2 million earned in 1985-86 in teaching English, holding British examinations, and selling services, about £1·5 million is extra to the cost of doing the activity in the first place.

The council has found some venture capital — in addition to private sponsorship for the arts totalling £700,000—and has received income from the University of Cambridge local examinations syndicate for English language institutes in Malaysia and Japan. So far £25,000 firm has been raised and another £25,000 is hoped for towards the costs of opening an office in Brunei, which has regrettably had to be postponed. The council has also initiated a scheme for attracting and placing overseas students that is paid for by our universities and polytechnics. It obtains payment for services where possible.

All of that helps, but these are not sources or funds on which to plan a long-term strategy. Again, I hope that the Minister will urge the Treasury during this PESC round to recognise that the British Council is already lean and efficient. I have recently seen the vital role it plays in Ethiopia, where English is still a secondary teaching language. Britain has the sixth largest economy in the world, and arguably the five larger economies combined make less of a cultural impact than we do. English language, theatre, literature and poetry, joined now, not least, by British rock music, dominate the world.

Our cultural heritage is totally out of proportion to our economic power. Our publishing industry is totally out of proportion to the size of our population. The British Council is a crucial vehicle in promoting those strengths, and I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will be party to building from strength in the coming years.

I have never doubted that within the diplomatic service there is room for innovation and change, and that such changes should be clearly reflected in any PESC round. That applies not least with regard to commercial representation. The old days, when the Foreign Office provided an essentially political service and when its role was to create an atmosphere or a climate of trade, have now passed. The weakness of the British marketing effort became all too apparent. Overkill set in. The Foreign Office looked at everything with a far stronger commercial perception until Iran. Now a middle course has been struck, yet it is still very hard to persuade the new intake that it is better to be first secretary (commercial) than first secretary (chancery) in a major city.

The strongly political work of our mandarins overrides any glory there may be in commercial success. The job now is to spot opportunities and open doors. But the quality and experience of those vested with this responsibility is mixed and, I believe, rightly subject to assessment. That is no less true of our system of Government support for our export interests.

Let hon. Members consider a cricketing analogy. Whereas the French Government regard commercial assistance as a method of winning the game, and the Japanese put in six sides to field to ensure that the odds are stacked in their favour, British commercial practice is for the private sector to sit down in its PEP, BOTB, Foreign and Commonwealth Office and Department of Trade and Industry pavilions arguing at length about the rules of the game. Then when all else fails, it is too often the case that it is the poor commercial attaché abroad, the proverbial twelfth man, who is blamed. The need for a review of commercial assistance is considerable.

The Foreign Office will always embrace a web of international power threads, and spheres of influence. Nations will strive to safeguard their security and promote their interests. Those are the fundamental areas in which the diplomatic service must work. A delicate balance of power will be struck and the mandarins of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office will continue to manoeuvre men of outstanding intellectual ability around a defined world of diplomatic posts while doggedly implementing the perceived wisdom of the day for what constitutes British interests.

Some might say that the FCO will remain the world's greatest expert on every political system bar its own. I dispute that view but there is room for greater integration with other Government Departments, not least with the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. Commensurate with this assessment is the need to sustain a Vote strong enough to support commercial and political roles abroad. Constant paring of the diplomatic service will do as much damage to the morale and effectiveness of its resilient and outstanding staff as anything else.

Today British interests are constantly changing. We seek to achieve a peaceful and stable world, enriched by the very fragile fruits of democracy in which free trade and commercial objectives can flourish. Our greatest tool is our influence — difficult to define and difficult to measure; the ideal target for the Treasury hatchetman. Yet if we as Conservatives are to promote not only our own freedom but that of the free world we must seek a financial provision that is strong enough to support the Foreign Office. I am strongly of the conviction that that view is widely shared on both sides of the House.

At this point I should like very much to give way to my right hon. Friend the Member for Blackpool, South (Sir P. Blaker) who is the chairman of the Conservative foreign and commonwealth affairs back bench committee. My right hon. Friend hopes to speak for about 10 minutes and deal specifically with the diplomatic wing upon which I touched but upon which he will elaborate much more lucidly than I have been able to do in the short time available to me.

Sir Peter Blaker (Blackpool, South): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Lewisham, East (Mr. Moynihan) on having initiated this debate. I am extremely grateful to him for enabling me to say a few words specifically about the Foreign and Commonwealth Office as opposed to the important question that he has touched upon—the external services of the British Council.

We have one of the hardest working and most effective diplomatic services in the world. That is not simply my opinion. It is the opinion of other diplomatic services, of which I have seen a great deal, and of other Governments. As my hon. Friend has rightly pointed out, the continued effectiveness of the organs which fall under the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary is vital for freedom and prosperity.

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has already been run down far enough. In the interests of the United Kingdom, that process should stop. The FCO accounts for

[Sir Peter Blaker]

1·1 per cent. of the total number of civil servants and for 0·9 per cent. of the total cost of the Civil Service, so it cannot be said that the members of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office are more expensive per head than other civil servants. In 1984 the total number of staff in the FCO both at home and overseas was 6,722. FCO staff in the United Kingdom who are responsible for liaison with all our posts overseas amount to just a little more than the headquarters staff of Marks and Spencer and to half the total staff of Brent borough council. The trends in the diplomatic service have been steadily downwards.

As my right hon. and learned Friend said on 22 May in answer to a question, since 1979 the number of diplomatic staff has declined by over 17 per cent. The overall reduction, not just of diplomatic staff, since 1979 has been more than 14 per cent.—a very big fall. The trend in the FCO compared with the Civil Service as a whole is different. In the 1970s, under the Labour Government, Civil Service numbers as a whole increased by more than 50,000, while the FCO numbers continued to fall, as they have fallen in almost every year since 1969.

In view of this fall in numbers one would expect to find that the workload had diminished, but the opposite has been the case. The workload has gone up, for reasons that are outside our control. In 1965, the number of independent countries in the world was 124. The number is now 164. In 1968 the number of British visitors abroad was about 5 million a year. In 1983 it was 20 million a year. When they travel, many British visitors meet problems and expect consular help. Hon. Members know that when British visitors do not get the consular help they expect they hear about it, sometimes in very indignant terms. That is a burden which cannot be diminished. Indeed, it will continue to increase.

What about the trends in cost? The total FCO vote is tiny—£583 million. It may sound a great deal, but compared with the costs of other Departments it is very small indeed. It includes the British Council, the BBC external services and subscriptions to international organisations from which we cannot escape if we are members of those organisations. Properly speaking, the cost of the diplomatic service is just over half that amount. In the five years after 1978 the cut in spending in constant prices, was 9.4 per cent. For decades the FCO has had a system of self-inspection, a quality of work control system which other Departments do not have.

Another important point in recent years has concerned overseas risen costs, a point mentioned by my hon. Friend the Member for Lewisham, East. The Government have given some assurances about overseas risen costs in relation to the FCO Vote in general, but I do not regard those assurances as having gone far enough. I hope that my right hon. and hon. Friends in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office will press for a better and more satisfactory arrangement about overseas risen costs. When he winds up the debate, I hope that the Under-Secretary of State will say something on that subject.

If one looks at the hours worked in the FCO, one finds a system which I regard as totally unsatisfactory. In the front line Departments it is perfectly routine for officers to be working from 8.30 in the morning to 8.30 in the evening. I wonder whether Ministers have had an assessment made of the hours worked by the ordinary desk officer. I am not referring to the head of department or to the assistant head of department, who would undoubtedly work longer hours. My information is that it is normal for the desk officer to work those hours, with perhaps an hour off for lunch. That is not good in the interests of the country, and it is not fair to the officers concerned. Furthermore, it is bad for the effectiveness of our diplomatic service if officers regularly work such hours. In a crisis they work much longer hours than that. They do not complain, because they are devoted public servants. They regard their work as important, as indeed it is. It is also very interesting work. However, they are working hours which I regard as greatly excessive.

Hon. Members may ask why something is not done to cut the workload. Why do we not cut out our activities abroad? Why do we not cut many of the overseas posts? There are a number of limiting factors. One is that we are a permanent member of the United Nations Security Council. That position is in question in the United Nations. If we want to remain a permanent member of the Security Council, we must be careful about the extent to which our posts overseas should be reduced. If we cut our representation in whole areas of the world, our position as a permanent member of the Security Council will increasingly come into question. Membership of the European Community has imposed an enormous extra burden upon the personnel of the FCO. The newspapers are full of the stories of the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and other Ministers working through the night for several days in succession to reach an agreement — or often not reaching an agreement. However, they do not mention that his staff are not working the same hours as he is. When the meeting is over and the Minister goes home, his staff sit at their desks and write up the minutes. They do not get any sleep, while the Minister gets only a few hours sleep.

My hon. Friend mentioned commercial work, which is extremely important for our business and exports, as is consular work. There is no scope sensibly to reduce the efforts that we are putting into them. Throughout the world other countries see us as fulfilling a much more important world role in defence of freedom than we see ourselves as fulfilling. The House does not understand how important our world role is seen to be by other countries. It would be a great mistake for freedom, prosperity and solidarity with our friends throughout the world if we were further to cut the FCO.

I hope that my hon. Friend can give us some assurance that there will be no further cuts in addition to those which have already been announced, and assurances about risen costs. I am sure that he understands that it is not only my hon. Friend and I who feel strongly about the matter, but many Conservative Members.

11.30 am

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (Mr. Tim Renton): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Lewisham, East (Mr. Moynihan) on his success in the ballot. He has chosen a most suitable subject for debate, especially after his recent visit to five African countries. I thank him for his remarks about the civil servants who have given up their official holiday today to be in the Box.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Blackpool, South (Sir P. Blaker) mentioned the long hours worked by civil servants in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. The fact that they are present in the Box today is an instance of that. Last week, the administration in the FCO carried out a survey about long hours, and it is now examining the results. I thank my right hon. Friend for his remarks. My right hon. Friend and my hon. Friend both have a wealth of knowledge and experience of the FCO in particular, and foreign affairs in general. I share their view of the importance of all aspects of Britain's overseas policy.

I am interested in the tributes that my right hon. Friend and my hon. Friend paid to various aspects of our overseas work and to the FCO. They will agree that it has long been the custom to knock the Foreign Office for extravagance. Queen Victoria said:

"Her Majesty is much opposed to any increase of Embassies, indeed her Majesty thinks that the time for Ambassadors and their pretensions is past."

Such a view existed not only in the 19th century. It was reflected more recently, if less succinctly, in the 1977 report of the think tank, and the book "With Respect, Ambassador" by Simon Jenkins and Ann Sloman, which was published earlier this year. There is a tide in the affairs of men, and from the speeches this morning it appears that the tide is turning. I note the view of the Select Committee on Foreign Affairs in July 1984 that "the squeeze on diplomatic service manpower has probably gone far enough and additional significant reductions would only be made at the cost of expecting a reduced level of quality of service."

There is a clear feeling that Britain needs a well executed international policy, that we should maintain our international profile, play our full part in the western Alliance, and continue to participate actively in international efforts to tackle world problems. I endorse what my hon. Friend said about the overall importance of our overseas effort, our diplomatic service, the British Broadcasting Corportion external services and the British Council in fulfilling that purpose. I remind my right hon. Friend and my hon. Friend that the FCO's financial provision must be seen in the context of the Government's economic policy and the need to maintain tight control of Government expenditure. It must be in line with the Government's long-term endeavour to reduce public spending as a percentage of gross domestic product.

As my right hon. Friend and my hon. Friend know, the British Council receives a basic contribution from the two wings of the FCO, which amounts to £72 million. The Overseas Development Agency contributes a further £12 million for special activities. I pay tribute to the British Council for the major role that it plays in promoting understanding and appreciation of Britain overseas through cultural educational and technical co-operation. I congratulate it on its 50th anniversary, which it celebrates this year. Its record on English language teaching overseas has been outstanding. Last year it amounted to 500,000 hours, which is a slight increase on previous years. In 1984-85, 23,400 people came to Britain with British Council help, and there were 6·3 million book issues.

The resources of the British Council have declined in real terms in recent years. However, in the present financial year the British Council will receive from grant-in-aid about £6 million more than the original figure for this year. Moreover, the council is able to offset the substantial part of that decline by raising more revenue overseas. Its overseas receipts, much of which come from English language teaching, have risen substantially in recent years. I wish the council well in that regard.

I was particularly impressed by the English language teaching programme when I visited Spain recently. Although my hon. Friend referred to the fact that some British Council posts have had to close recently, there has been a spread of British institutes — as it were, subordinate posts of the council — throughout Spain, which are dedicated to teaching English. That is a good and natural development, because as Spain gets ready to join the European Community, many Spaniards will hope to learn English as their second language for use within the Community. That is the other side of the coin.

It is true that staff in the United Kingdom have been reduced from 1,884 to 1,593 during the past seven years. However, since 1982-83 there has been a gradual increase in locally engaged staff overseas. Overall, the future of the British Council looks bright.

I note my hon. Friend's words about the unique world reputation of the external services. It is fair and right to say that a recent poll showed them to be the most popular of all international world broadcasting services. Their grants-in-aid under Vote 3 are £91 million for the current year. There is also £18 million for the 1985-86 in Vote 1 for relay stations run by the FCO.

My hon. Friend referred to various cuts in specific services, which have taken place in recent years. However, there are 727·5 broadcasting hours overall per week in 36 languages, compared with 716 in 1982. The prescription committee at the Foreign Office is charged with regularly looking at the division of these hours between countries where broadcasts are most needed. If a service is cut, it is generally because it has been replaced by a new service, or by more hours in another country where it is judged to be more needed.

My hon. Friend referred to the Pashto service, which was started in 1981 with one and three quarter hours per week. Since then it has been doubled to nearly four hours. Similarly, the services in Nepali, Tamil and Turkish have been substantially increased in recent years. During the six years up to 1985-86, the BBC external services received an increase in real terms in its grants in aid of about 33 per cent.

My hon. Friend referred to the Perry report, which looks to the future. It sees where some economies can be made in the administration of the BBC external services, and it recommends that grants for external services should be determined at the same time and for the same period as the BBC licence fee. That is being considered, and a decision will depend on an acceptable arrangement among the Treasury, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the BBC.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Blackpool, South played a major part in getting the audibility programme under way. In 1981, £100 million was agreed for the programme. Work on the new relay station in Hong Kong was started in 1984, a year earlier than planned. We hope that the planning process at Orfordness for the new United Kingdom relay station can be brought to a speedy and satisfactory conclusion, and that it will have an important effect on increasing audibility, especially to Russia and to Eastern Europe. It goes without saying that I hope that the BBC will continue to be a source of unbiased news and comment, especially for those countries where freedom is denied. I am sure that the BBC is aware of its duty.

I agree with my hon. Friend the Member for Lewisham, East about commercial work. The resources devoted to it amount to about 32 per cent. of our front line manpower deployed overseas. That is the largest slice of any of the diplomatic service functions, and the main effort is concentrated on export promotion. We work closely with the British Overseas Trade Board, and it has been estimated by independent consultants that the BOTB's export intelligence service leads to £1 billion worth of additional exports a year. About 80 per cent. of its market information and export intelligence is received from diplomatic service posts, and that service reaches more than 20,000 exporters.

I agree with my hon. Friend about the need for flexibility. We are aware that our commercial work overseas is never likely to be perfect. We try constantly to listen to criticism and constructive advice, and consider how, as overseas markets develop, we can improve our service within the restraints of the resources available.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Blackpool, South was generous in his tributes to the hard work done at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office at home and abroad. I agree with some of the statistics that he produced. Since 1979, manpower in the diplomatic wing has been reduced by nearly 10 per cent. Yet the number of British business men visiting our posts abroad has increased by 20 per cent., the consular case load has increased by 40 per cent., and market information inquiries have also increased by 40 per cent. We maintain diplomatic and consular relations with 161 countries. My right hon. Friend said that we do so with one half of the staff of Brent council. My acquaintance with Brent council is not as great as his, but I am content to say that our total staff is about the same as the average British borough council.

Recently, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, due to the work of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State, has pulled off some remarkable achievements, especially in Hong Kong and Gibraltar.

My hon. Friend also mentioned overseas risen costs. He will be pleased to know that we have reached an agreement with the Treasury on the interpretation of the formula in Command 9367, which gives the Foreign and Commonwealth Office a reasonably secure basis for planning the use of the resources that Ministers allocate to it. As a recent memorandum sent to the Select Committee on Foreign Affairs states, full account will be taken of movements in overseas prices when the FCO's expenditure provisions are set.

At the beginning of my speech, I said that the tide was turning in the affairs of the Foreign Office. I would not say, to complete the quotation, that, if taken at the flood, this will lead on to fortune. Given the necessary restraints on public expenditure, the favourable tide now running for the British Council and the diplomatic wing will not lead to fortune in the material sense. But these and other related activities will prosper by increasing interest at home and extending British influence abroad. Those who work for us abroad will have great pleasure in reading the comments of my right hon. Friend and my hon. Friend, and I fully share their congratulations to members of the service on their hard work and achievements, often in difficult conditions.

Refugees (Hong Kong)

11.45 am

Mr. Paddy Ashdown (Yeovil): I am grateful for the opportunity to speak about the conditions in closed camps in Hong Kong and the policy that led to them.

One hesitates to talk about records in the House, because no doubt something similar has happened in the dim and distant past, but it must be unprecedented to have had three Adjournment debates on the same subject within about 14 days. It is also worth noting that those debates were raised by representatives of all the major parties. That must show the deep concern of hon. Members about the closed camp policy in Hong Kong.

I pay tribute to the hon. Members who raised the matter. The hon. Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley) did so in the context of problems suffered by the relatives of his constituents. Last week, the hon. Member for Ynys Môn (Mr. Best) raised broader aspects of the problem, presumably wearing his hat as the respected chairman of the British Committee for Refugees from Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia. The hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) has also taken a great interest in the subject and spoken about it on the Floor of the House. The hon. Member for Chislehurst (Mr. Sims) is here today, and will no doubt wish to catch your eye, Mr. Deputy Speaker, later.

I wish to discuss the specific British policy that led to the closed camps and the conditions inside the camps. If my tone is sharper than we have heard in previous debates on the subject, that is because the impressions that I gained when I visited the camps are with me still. With other hon. Members, I visited Hong Kong last year to assess for myself the problems relating to the future of the territory. During my stay, I visited Chi Ma Wan closed camp. I should tell the House that that visit left an indelible and powerful impression on me — an impression of some anger and shame. I was deeply shocked by the conditions in the closed camps.

As one who speaks Chinese, who has served in the forces in the far east and has a fair knowledge of conditions there, I am aware of general living conditions in poor countries such as Vietnam. However, despite that, I left Hong Kong appalled by the way in which the people in the closed camps were being treated, and ashamed that I, as a British Member of Parliament, was the person ultimately responsible for it.

I shall have some harsh words to say about conditions in the camps and about the policy that created and sustains them. I say at the outset, however, that the responsibility rests not with the Government of Hong Kong, but with the British Government. I have many reservations about the closed camp policy instituted by the Hong Kong Government, but I understand why they instituted it. I am also fully aware that the people of Hong Kong, as was clearly shown in the recent legislative council debate, believe that the closed camp policy was right and should continue. It is easy for us, living in the United Kingdom where the population density is 230 per sq km, to call for the camps to be abolished. If one lived in Hong Kong, where the density is more than 20 times higher — an average of 4,972 per sq km — one would see things differently.

Hon. Members may not know what an average of 4,972 people per sq km looks like, so let me give them a graphic illustration. Assume that this Chamber, together with the Public and Press Galleries was in Hong Kong's most crowded district, Sham Shui Po. It would then be the home for more than 70 people. Put another way, rather more than a tenth of the number of hon. Members who find it so uncomfortable to crowd into this Chamber to listen to an hour's Budget speech would make this same space the place they use to make their whole daily lives.

Given that level of overcrowding, it is scarcely surprising that Hong Kong does not feel able to offer refuge for all who come to its shores as a first point of asylum and it is scarcely remarkable that it had to institute a closed camp policy and, in the absence of international assistance, on a greater scale than we have seen, now wishes to see that policy continue.

It may be that the closed camps were a necessary temporary, emergency measure to start with, but we have allowed them to become permanent institutions. That is confirmed by the answer given to me by a Minister last Wednesday. It reveals that the population of the closed camps, now about 6,000, has remained static for six consecutive years and, at the present level of off-take, will still exist in 10 years'. For many in the camps, there is no hope of immediate release. The closed camps have become for them—and for us, if we were honest about it—not a temporary stopgap, but a permanent or semi-permanent fact of the tragedy of the Vietnamese refugees.

That is a disgrace and one for which the primary responsibility rests on the British Government, not the Hong Kong Government. It is the British Government who, far from showing the lead in taking refugees, have taken fewer than any other nation participating in the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees' resettlement programme. In 1984, we took only 17 refugees, one twentieth of those taken by the United States, one twelth of those taken by the Australians and one quarter of those taken by the Canadians. In 1983, Britain took on 2·4 per cent of resettled refugees, compared with 49 per cent. taken by the United States, 21 per cent. taken by Australia and 5 per cent.—more than double ours—taken by Sweden. Overall to date, the United States has taken 20 times as many Vietnamese refugees than Britain, France has taken five times as many, Australia has taken nearly four times as many, Canada has taken nearly three times as many, and even West Germany has taken more than we have. Why is it that Britain, which has most responsibility in this matter, has carried least of the burden?

Britain's refusal to shoulder the burden is now undermining the rest of the UNHCR programme. The United States Government said in evidence to the Home Affairs Select Committee:

"Absent of an effort to substantially increase the U.K. offtake from Hong Kong, the U.S. Government is unlikely to review its current policies and practice regarding acceptance of these refugees above the levels currently projected".

The Australian Government similarly stated in evidence to the Select Committee that they regard it as "essential" to share internationally the burden of resettling the refugees from Hong Kong, and that in view of this and the policies of the United States, it would seem that a renewed commitment by the United Kingdom to resettlement of Indo-Chinese refugees from Hong Kong would be a precondition for any co-ordinated international effort to address the Hong Kong situation.

Mr. Poul Hartling, United Nations Commissioner, has recently called on Britain to "take an initiative that would encourage other countries to take more."

The Select Committee on Home Affairs has made a similar plea and we, to use the words of the hon. Member for Ynys Môn,

"eagerly await the Government response"—[Official Report, 14 May 1984; Vol. 79, c. 299.]

Let there be no doubt that that response is long overdue. The Government's disgraceful tardiness in this matter has caused the sense of permanent incarceration, of hopelessness and despair which exists in the camps.

In that sense, the Government are also responsible for the problems which have occurred in the camps themselves. The Minister upbraided me for describing the situation in the camps as a "disgrace" on Wednesday. But I stick to that word and I hope to give it substance in this debate.

In fact, the term "closed camps" is little more than a slick euphemism. The camps are made up of tin huts, surrounded by high barbed wire reminiscent of a prisoner of war camp—it was that impression which struck me most powerfully and moved me most when I visited them. They are guarded day and night. They are administered, not by social workers, but by the prison service of the Hong Kong Government. Refugees do not have the right to go out without a pass; they are subject to being searched; their mail is censored; none of the refugees in these "closed camps" have any rights to recourse under British or Hong Kong law; they cannot take any question of ill-treatment or abuse to any court for a hearing. For those who are in any way disruptive, a punishment of up to 28 days' solitary confinement can be imposed on people who came to us as refugees fleeing from oppression.

It is quite untrue, as some have claimed, that the inmates of the closed camps are ill-fed and poorly housed. Their basic needs are reasonably well catered for; indeed, their physical conditions may be marginally better than some of Hong Kong's squatter population. But they are crowded together in cramped conditions, they are without their freedom, and many of them are without hope. Some have been in the camps for more than four years, many are desperate and a few are understandably furious at having ended up incarcerated in Hong Kong after having paid fortunes and after having seen some of their relatives and friends pay with their lives to escape from the tyranny in Vietnam.

The boat people are at the end of their tether. It is reported that there have been a number of suicides. During Christmas 1981, a violent riot broke out in one camp. In the spring of 1982 in another camp, refugees from North and South Vietnam fought each other in what a respected local paper described as "bloody battles".

The refugees on Hei Ling Chau began a hunger strike in July 1984 to remind the world of their existence—a representative from the UNHCR and of the Hong Kong Government went to the camp to persuade them to end their strke. They did so only after 200 of them had been hospitalised. That was a cry of despair and impotence to the rest of the world. But it did not even interest the media or the organisations formerly so ready to organise solidarity campaigns for the boat people.

Mrs. Elsie Elliott, CBE, a Hong Kong councillor and widely respected in Hong Kong as an authentic voice in local affairs, especially on human rights, has told me that she has evidence that drug abuse has gone up in the camps by over 500 per cent. in two years. I will read the House a letter that I recently received from Mrs. Elliott, describing those conditions:

"In late February, I interviewed about ten refugees who knew something of both open and closed camps, they themselves being in an open camp. I was introduced to them by a Government servant who wishes not to be named. He arranged a meeting place and an interpreter. There I learned about the increasing drug problem, the demoralisation of the young people, and the air of hopelessness.

At another meeting with European teachers from an open camp, I learned that the whole system is kept intact by a policy of intimidation. Any teacher or other outside worker at the camp is sacked if he/she makes a complaint. One of them was sacked for mentioning that the science laboratory in the school was only a showpiece for visitors, never used. I have asked him to write to you with any information he may have.

A few days ago, a Vietnamese who was recently resettled in Australia wrote imploring me to try to help the people in the camps, as any measures against drug abuse are weak and ineffective. He said that drug traffickers from outside were not being cracked down on, and the inmates take drugs, gamble and fight out of utter frustration.

On a TV interview a few days ago, Dr. Karl Stumpf, who is engaged on resettling refugees, did not deny my allegations when questioned about them. He did say that the Vietnamese are not more prone to crime than others, but being detained was frustrating. He also made the remarkable statement that the people in the camps here 'have to suffer' in an effort to stop other refugees coming.

I also met with a group of Catholic missionaries. They deplored the lack of human rights and said they would get wide support for the campaign to find a way to release the refugees".

In a report submitted to a meeting of Governments in 1984, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees clearly referred to the Hong Kong closed camps when he said:

"while it will thus be seen that there may be situations both with regard to individual asylum-seekers and to large scale influx, in which measures of detention may be justified, this is not the case were asylum-seekers are detained with the sole object of discouraging further arrivals. It has become evident that in certain countries the refugees are frequently confined in prison or under prison-like conditions for prolonged periods of time in accordance with a policy of so-called humane deterrence. Needless to say, practices of this kind—given their underlying motivation—are at variance with the principles of international protection".

The present United Nations High Commissioner, Mr. Poul Hartling, visited the newly opened Bowring closed camp a week or so ago. Despite the fact that conditions in Bowring are immeasurably better than in the older camps, the high commissioner still described them as offending human dignity.

Things are not getting better in the closed camps—Mrs. Elliot tells me that she thinks that they are getting worse. She quotes as an example the case of a 15-year-old boy who was put in solitary confinement for no more than answering back a camp official. She tells me that she has brought this incident — with others alleging sexual harassment, drug abuse and violence—to the attention of the Hong Kong authorities. She has been asked to supply independent evidence, but this she cannot do for fear of exposing the inmates. As she puts it:

"They are really terrified and there is always the threat that they are not going to get rehabilitated if they do not behave in the way they are told".

Surely, in the light of what has happened, there is now enough evidence to investigate these allegations more thoroughly than seems to have been done so far.

The real issue is one of morality. How do the Government justify putting people whose only crime is that they have escaped from oppression into what is effectively a prison? Whatever the excesses of the Vietnamese Government in oppressing their people and causing them to risk their lives to reach Hong Kong, is it not a disgrace on this Government and, indeed, on us as Members of Parliament that we should permit people who have no rights, who have been persecuted and who have turned to us for protection to suffer the indignities which are the daily lot of those in the closed camps of Hong Kong?

What do the Government intend to do about this stain on Britain's standing as a compassionate and civilised nation?

First, what do the Government intend to do about the resettlement? Will the Minister announce today that Britain will carry her share of the burden of resettling the refugees? Will he undertake the task of relaunching the UNHCR initiative with a commitment from Britain which will stimulate other nations to continue their programmes, so that those in the camps can have some hope for the future and we who are responsible for them can look forward to the day when closed camps are a thing of the past and a burden that we no longer have to carry on our consciences?

Secondly, what do the Government intend to do about the present conditions in the camps? The British Refugee Council recommends that if the policy has to continue sweeping reforms should be made. Husbands and wives separated by the closed camp policy should no longer be forced to live apart, those single men at present segregated in the special closed camps should be reintegrated, administration of the camps should be handed over to a more appropriate body than the correctional services department, which is the Hong Kong prison service, and the refugees should be given a far greater role in the running of services.

The British Refugee Council also recommends that voluntary agency involvement in the camps should be reviewed and non-evangelical agencies offered a greater role and that normal and expeditious use of postal services and adequate educational and training facilities should be provided. Those are sensible if minimal suggestions which in most cases are supported by the Select Committee. Will the Minister put them into practice?

Let there be no doubt that the fact of the closed camps and the conditions that have been allowed to prevail within them are the responsibility of the House and especially of the Government. It is an indictment of all of us that such conditions have been allowed to exist in our name for so long. What are the Government going to do about it?

12.4 pm

Mr. Roger Sims (Chislehurst): I am grateful to the hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Ashdown) for allowing me to take part in this debate. I join the hon. Gentleman and the Select Committee in expressing the hope that the closed camps will be closed down as soon as possible. I accept the general thrust of the hon. Gentleman's argument, but he will forgive me if I do not put the case in exactly the same terms.

We should remember, first, that we are not talking about immigrants — a subject which we debated yesterday—who have chosen of their own volition to leave their homelands. We are talking about people who have abandoned their possessions and fled their homes and countries because of the conditions there, often with no idea what has happened to the relatives they left behind. Many of these people simply got into boats to sail wherever wind and tide took them to escape the conditions in which they were living. All that they ask is that which we take for granted—freedom to be educated, to seek work and to find housing and freedom of speech and of worship.

The closed camp problem must be seen in context. In the past 10 years, 100,000 Vietnamese refugees have arrived in Hong Kong. Not one has been turned away. I visited Hong Kong when the problem first arose a few years ago. The procedure was as follows: the refugees were initially accommodated at the waterside; they were then taken to transit camps in Hong Kong, whence in due course they were settled abroad — in the United Kingdom, continental Europe, North America and south-east Asia, some 14,300 of them being accepted by Hong Kong itself.

Three years ago, the outflow reduced almost to a trickle although the inflow continued. There are still 11,200 refugees in Hong Kong. Let us not underestimate the heavy burden this has placed on the Hong Kong Government and people. Since 1979, the Hong Kong Government have spent 475 million Hong Kong dollars on running the centres and feeding the refugees, in addition to the sums contributed by voluntary agencies and the United Nations. Moreover, all this has taken place in a country in which, as the hon. Member for Yeovil graphically described, the population density can scarcely be imagined by people here.

We must also remember the point of view of the Hong Kong people. They see refugees from mainland China with whom they have family and cultural links being sent back, while the Vietnamese refugees are accepted without reserve. That is the situation in which the closed camps were established. The hon. Gentleman suggested that this happened six years ago, but I believe that it was only three years ago. The purpose was quite openly to deter the number of refugees coming into Hong Kong, and that has been the effect. The number of refugees coming in has declined sharply. The fact that some continue to arrive in Hong Kong knowing full well that they will have to live in closed camps in the conditions described by the hon. Member for Yeovil illustrates the repressive nature of the regime from which they have fled.

The closed camps are not ideal. Although they are not prisons, they are tantamount to prisons to the extent that entrance and exit is severely controlled and there are necessarily regulations within a closed community of that kind. I do not dispute the hon. Gentleman's quotations from the United Nations High Commissioner, but I believe that Mr. Hartling also made some complimentary remarks. Having visited the camps, he said that what he found was encouraging and that he appreciated the difficult circumstances in which the camps had to operate.

About half the refugees, of course, are in open camps where conditions are also far from ideal. They are described as transit camps because that was their original purpose. I must declare a personal interest. My son has just spent nine months working in one of those camps with the refugees. He saw the overcrowded conditions in which the refugees have to live. The refugees have no privacy. The children are bitten by rats as they sleep. Disease is inevitably transmitted. That is the best that can be done in the difficult circumstances existing in what was intended to be a transit centre.

For my son, we are not just talking about 11,000 refugees; we are talking about real people with names. We are talking about Nguyen Van Vinh and his son Nguyen Ba Vie, who have been in the camp since 1980. They have little prospect of being able to join the rest of their family in the United States. We are talking about people like Nguyen Van Luy, a 17-year-old who has been there for three years, unable to join a brother in Belgium.

I could cite many other cases. They suggest the only answer to the problem, which is resettlement. Shutting down the camps while taking no other action would not solve the problem. It would exacerbate it.

The United Kingdom has a good record in accepting refugees. I do not think it is entirely fair for the hon. Member for Yeovil to make comparisons with other countries without drawing attention to the different conditions in other countries in terms of the density of population, the availability of housing and so on.

I vividly recall the problems that arose when the previous wave of refugees arrived here. I was working closely with the then Home Secretary, Lord Whitelaw. We sought the co-operation of the local authorities in finding accommodation for the refugees.

A number of other countries have given strong indications that they are prepared to help to solve this international problem. However, they look to us. The United Kingdom has a special relationship with Hong Kong, and we must give the lead. If we agree to accept some of the refugees, other countries will follow.

One can draw a comparison with immigrants who wish voluntarily to leave their own country and come here. To whom have we the greater obligation—the immigrants, or the refugees who have nowhere else to go and face an uncertain future in the conditions that the hon. Gentleman has described?

The Government are considering the report of the Select Committee. I congratulate the Select Committee on the manner in which it reviewed the problem and put forward its proposals. Clearly one cannot expect an immediate response, but I hope that the relevant Government Departments are considering the recommendations closely and will take firm action. That is what we owe to the Government and the people of Hong Kong. That is what we owe to people such as Nguyen Van Vinh, Nguyen Ba Vie and Nguyen Van Luy in both the closed and the open camps in Hong Kong.

The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Mr. Richard Luce): There is no doubt about the importance of the whole problem of Vietnamese refugees, or about the difficulties that we face in connection with the need since the middle of 1982 to maintain closed camps in Hong Kong. I quite agree with the hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Ashdown) about the importance of these issues. I congratulate him on raising the matter in this debate. As he said, this is the third debate on the subject in three weeks. That shows how much strength of feeling there is in the House about the matter.

It is clear that the hon. Gentleman has a heart—and I hope that he will agree that we all have a heart. I hope that the hon. Gentleman also has a head. I feel that on this occasion he has allowed his heart to dominate his head to some extent. I do not deny for a moment that conditions in the closed camps are unsatisfactory. I have said on several occasions that the situation is unsatisfactory and we want to end it as soon as possible. However, we must see the issue against the reality of the background not only of Hong Kong's problems — which are major, as the hon. Gentleman acknowledged — but of the United Kingdom's problems. To a considerable extent, the Select Committee acknowledged and investigated those problems.

I also welcomed the remarks of my hon. Friend the Member for Chislehurst (Mr. Sims). My hon. Friend, too, spoke with strong feeling and on a personal basis. The fact that his son has worked in one of the camps adds weight to what he had to say.

The matter must be seen against the background of the Select Committee's report. The Government are studying the report with great care. The hon. Gentleman will not expect me to reply to those recommendations in an Adjournment debate — although he expressed the hope that I might. The Government are considering the recommendations with the greatest care and intend to reply as soon as possible. We are fully aware that it is a matter of urgency. I cannot therefore reply directly to the hon. Gentleman's challenge to say what the Government's reaction is to the report. However, I can pick up many of the points that the hon. Gentleman has made.

It would be wrong to examine the issue of the closed camps in Hong Kong without considering their root cause. Clearly, the problem derives from conditions in Vietnam, which are clearly totally and utterly oppressive. Vietnam has the third largest army in the world. It occupies another country — Cambodia. It has a terrible record on human rights; thousands of people are kept in re-education camps without charge or trial for years on end. Over a million refugees have left the country since 1975, and in the past year no fewer than 25,000 Vietnamese have fled by boat to various parts of the world. Those figures are a massive condemnation of what is happening in Vietnam today. That flow of refugees will stop only when that country adopts a more civilised policy towards human beings who live there. With the rest of the international community, we shall do what we can to persuade Vietnamese to improve their human rights policy.

I am glad that the hon. Member for Yeovil and my hon. Friend paid tribute to Hong Kong's achievements in this field. Hong Kong has given temporary asylum to over 100,000 refugees since 1975. In 1979, at the height of the crisis, over 68,000 boat people arrived in Hong Kong. None have been turned away. At his press conference in Hong Kong on 14 May, the United Nations High Commissioner, Mr. Hartling, said:

"We are very grateful to Hong Kong — to the authorities, the Government here and to the people because Hong Kong has given asylum and never, never refused to give asylum to refugees coming here and never forced them back against their will, and treated them well, but of course, they would like as we would like to see a solution — a durable solution, for these refugees."

The Government certainly share Mr. Hartling's views.

The closed camps are one of the sad aspects of the Indo-Chinese refugee problem. In an ideal world, there would be no refugee camps, closed or open. As I said in my evidence to the Select Committee on 4 February and reiterated in the debate on 14 May, the position of having 5,600 refugees in closed camps and an equal number in open camps is such that no Minister can say that it is satisfactory or desirable. It is most certainly not. Refugee situations are certainly not ideal. How can they be? There is no perfect solution. However, we must be realistic. I ask the House to try to understand the Hong Kong Government's position on the matter, and to see the position within the special geographical and political circumstances of the territory.

Moreover, I must ask the hon. Gentleman to take into account another factor, which I believe is of importance. Other countries in the region, for example Thailand and the Philippines, have, reluctantly, found it necessary to run restricted camps of the same kind as the camps that we described in Hong Kong as closed camps in which, in the same way, the inhabitants are, regrettably, not free to move as they wish, and not free to work. Therefore, we must acknowledge that other countries are faced with a similar problem. Hong Kong is not the only country that has to grapple with it.

What are the reasons for the closed camps? Doubts have been expressed as to whether Hong Kong was justified in introducing the closed camp policy. There is no doubt in my mind about that because the figures speak for themselves. In July 1982, the month when the policy was introduced, arrivals reached their highest level for three years. Resettlement possibilities were diminishing sharply. The Hong Kong Government were faced with the prospect of the numbers in the camps rising to unmanageable levels, as they had done in 1979.

It is important to understand why that was particularly alarming for Hong Kong. The hon. Gentleman fully understands it, but I should like to repeat the reason. Hong Kong is one of the most crowded places in the world. It has a population of over 5 million in a territory of only 400 square miles, much of it barren hillside and rocky islets. Its population density is 20 times that of the United Kingdom. It has acute problems resulting from the large influx of immigrants from China in recent years. It continues to absorb large numbers of legal immigrants from China — 27,700 in 1984. Illegal immigrants from China, however, are repatriated, although they often have family and cultural ties with the people of Hong Kong. That is an important point for the people of Hong Kong.

That is the context in which the people of Hong Kong see the Vietnamese problem. They therefore find it difficult to accept that the Vietnamese should be given what they regard as special treatment by being allowed to remain in the territory while awaiting resettlement. The closed camp policy was therefore introduced, and has been maintained with the full support of the people of Hong Kong. They felt that that was the only way to try to discourage the Vietnamese from setting out for Hong Kong.

The strength of Hong Kong feeling on the issue was demonstrated in the Adjournment debate of the Hong Kong Legislative Council on 15 May, as the hon. Gentleman may have noticed. A member of the council, Mrs. Selina Chow, said:

"The closed camp policy . . .came into force in July 1982 . . . Our treatment of Vietnamese refugees at the time was not in line with either policies of our other Asian countries, most of which had been operating closed camps . . . In the face of the only realistic options open to Hong Kong at the time regarding Vietnamese refugees, i.e. repatriation, refusal to land and the closed camps, the last was certainly the least inhumane".

Those are the comments of a very distinguished member of the Legislative Council.

The question is whether that policy has worked. Doubts have been expressed about that. We must look at the figures. In 1981, before the start of the policy, Hong Kong arrivals increased by 25 per cent. over the 1980 levels, whereas those for the region as a whole increased by only 5 per cent. In 1982, Hong Kong arrivals went down by only 7 per cent. compared with the regional decline of 41 per cent. However, in 1983, after the closed camps policy had been introduced, and by which time it was fully implemented, Hong Kong arrivals were 53 per cent. less than those for 1982 compared with a regional decline of 36 per cent. In 1984 the Hong Kong decrease was 39 per cent., and that for the region only 11 per cent. That is clear evidence that the deterrent is working. It is the only deterrent available.

What is the future of that policy? It is an important matter. I stress that we regard it as a temporary measure. It is our objective to see those closed camps terminated as soon as possible. However, the fact is that there are factors outside Her Majesty's or the Hong Kong Government's control, which must ultimately dictate how long the closed camps will need to remain in being—the rate of arrivals from Vietnam and the rate of departures to countries of resettlement, which were two issues raised by the hon. Gentleman.

I refer to departures. It is true that closed camp policy would not have been necessary if the resettlement prospects for refugees in Hong Kong had not deteriorated so much in 1981 and 1982. I fully acknowledge that many other countries, such as Canada, the United States and Australia, have taken a considerable number of refugees. We are extremely grateful for that. Here in Britain we have taken over 12,000 from Hong Kong and Hong Kong has itself absorbed over 14,000 Indo-Chinese refugees. Since mid-1982, when the closed camps were introduced, 4,600 members of those camps have been resettled. However, many more resettlement places will have to be provided if homes are to be found for all the refugees who are still in Hong Kong and other places of first asylum. The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, Mr. Poul Hartling, will be coming to London on 5 June, and both I and my hon. and learned Friend the Minister of State, Home Office, will be meeting him to discuss Hong Kong's problems. Resettlement will obviously be one of the subjects that we shall talk about.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Chislehurst said, Britain's record must be acknowledged. We do not have a long historic connection with the Indo-Chinese region, yet we have taken nearly 20,000 refugees over the past six years. The hon. Member for Yeovil will have read the Select Committee's report, which shows the many difficulties that we have had in helping those refugees settle in this country. That factor must be taken fully into account. Yet, despite all that, we have taken just under 20,000, we continue to take some of the boat people, and have taken 12,000 from Hong Kong.

With regard to conditions in the camps, I shall look carefully at what the hon. Gentleman said. Because I shall not be able to answer every point that he raised, I shall make sure that I write a note to him with further comments on some of the specific conditions. I understand people's concern that refugees should not be confined to camps. However, I must say that Her Majesty's Government and the Hong Kong Government attach great importance to ensuring that refugees are adequately cared for within the camps. Mr. Hartling said that he did not like the idea of closed camps, but that inside the Bowring camp, he "found the circumstances, the conditions, very encouraging."

He compared the situation of the children at the Bowring camp with that of some of the refugees in other countries, who he said were starving, sick and destitute and had tears in their eyes. His conclusion was that the Hong Kong authorities and the voluntary agencies, to which the hon. Gentleman referred, were doing a very good job, for which he was very grateful. That was also my reaction when I visited the Chi Ma Wan camp in 1983.

On 15 May, Mr. Alan Lee, a Member of the Legislative Council, said:

"Just recently I went back to the Vietnamese refugee camps and I can say with a clear conscience that the treatment these Vietnamese refugees are getting in Hong Kong is better than a lot of people living in Hong Kong who are genuine Hong Kong residents."

Mr. Ashdown rose——

Mr. Luce: If the hon. Gentleman will allow me, I should like to comment on some of his other points.

I understand what the hon. Gentleman says about overcrowding. I have seen the conditions for myself. The overall numbers of refugees are continuing to come down, albeit slowly. We want the pace to speed up. Overcrowding is beginning to be reduced. I ask the hon. Gentleman to compare such overcrowding in Hong Kong not with European standards but with Hong Kong standards. Some of the comments I have seen are a little unfair on the Hong Kong authorities. There has been an easing of the pressure, although the position is still not satisfactory.

We took careful account of the views expressed by the British Refugee Council. We have tried to do our best to implement some of its recommendations. We shall continue to listen carefully to any other representations, including those by the hon. Member for Yeovil, to ascertain whether we can improve and ease the conditions. That is certainly the priority of the Hong Kong Government. We have done a great deal in education and training—these aspects are improving all the time—to help people resettle in other countries. We certainly value the efforts of voluntary bodies.

I shall make a point of commenting later on the hon. Gentleman's views on the use of drugs in closed camps, because the remarks made were very wide of the mark. I shall give the hon. Gentleman a fuller comment on that.

I thank the hon. Member for Yeovil for raising this issue. I wish to re-emphasise that we do not want to maintain these camps any longer than absolutely necessary. We look forward to replying shortly to the Select Committee's report. It is a matter of priority for the Government to work towards a durable solution to this problem.

St. Luke's Hospice, Basildon

12.30 pm

Mr. David Amess (Basildon): There can be few hon. Members who have not at some time during their lives known someone who has died from cancer. It might have been a friend, a relative or a loved one. We know that cancer shows no respect for age or circumstances. It affects the young and old alike, the poor and the wealthy. When it strikes, the consequences can be devastating, not just for the person afflicted, but for those trying to give support.

The word "cancer" has such connotations that some people are even reluctant to use it. The very thought of it or the eventual diagnosis can strike terror in the hearts of the bravest people when they feel ill. I understand such reactions, for, while many people say that they do not fear death, I do not number among them.

Fortunately, as medical science advances, the treatment of cancer patients improves all the time. More lives are saved, but the treatment of cancer still occupies much of the time and resources of a substantial section of the medical profession. Despite the billions of pounds poured into research by Governments, the World Health Organisation and drug companies, cancer is still the second most common cause of premature death in developed countries.

I do not intend to go into the difficulties of clinical research, interpretation of clinical trial results, alternative medicine claims or the priorities governing treatment and new methods of prevention. These deserve an entire debate. I hope that my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State will say something about the Government's position in trying to find a cure for this disease, about the further plans that the Government might have and about the breakthroughs, if any, that have been achieved.

I wish to confine most of my remarks to the case of terminally ill patients, and especially to a project started in my constituency of Basildon—St. Luke's hospice. The three alternatives for the terminally ill are to remain at home, to enter an acute ward in a hospital or, if there is one in the area, to enter a hospice. Nowadays, the cancer care group operates in the home as a team involving the family, the GP, district nurse, social worker, therapist, health adviser and a religious figure such as a priest or chaplain. However, the strains placed on a family and the patient during the illness may lead to the breakdown of a family.

The deceased should be able to leave the fondest of memories behind. The range of emotions exhibited by cancer patients may leave nothing but discord, which is a sorry state in which to leave a family. Self-imposed isolation from the family, fear of dying, anger at other people's perceived interference, frustration at the dependence needed on others or depressed indifference may separately or together shatter a family, to say nothing of creating more pain for the patient.

It is difficult to express in words the heartbreak that is felt when people see their loved ones deteriorate before their eyes, sometimes within a short time and sometimes in a humiliating manner.

An acute ward in a hospital is an alternative. The modern cancer team in a hospital is well trained to care for the terminal patient. But on a busy acute ward, the amount of personal attention that can be given to each patient is bound to be limited. The number of consultants with knowledge of the use of drugs to avoid pain, rather than of drugs which temporarily alleviate pain, is limited, this being a highly specialised area.

Privacy is also difficult to find in many hospitals. Most people prefer to spend their last days nestled in the family circle, rather than in a hospital, no matter how efficient, kind and understanding the staff around them.

The hospice movement grew out of dissatisfaction with the standard of hospital care provided for the terminally ill. In the intervening years, the standard has improved enormously. Nevertheless, the hospice movement offers a halfway house between the immense difficulties of caring for a terminally ill patient at home and the efficient, but less personal, care provided by many hospitals.

Hospices provide the buildings and teams for the specialist care of the terminally ill. Hon. Members are aware of the immense sums required to build and maintain a separate specialist institution. Indeed, 82 hon. Members have the privilege of having hospices in their constituencies. They will be aware of the great assistance that these teams can give. St. Luke's hospice will be directed towards the laudable aim of controlling pain. The staff will have special training to enable them to do that.

Hon. Members will be aware that there is more to pain than physical pain. Although the hospice movement has pioneered the use of drugs with the minimum side effects to control pain, far more is involved. The knowledge of death through cancer brings fear with it—fear of pain, loss of self-control, sanity, dignity and independence, and fear of death itself.

Hospices not only stop pain, but have the trained staff to help with the spiritual and emotional needs which are evident at that time. It has been shown that emotional difficulties, especially of the kind generated in the family circle, create pain. The assistance given in this area adds a complementary dimension to the use of drugs, radio therapy, nerve blocks and so on. By removing the emotional pain, it is sometimes possible to reduce the amount of physical treatment that is needed. The patient can thus lead a fuller existence by being awake and alert in the last few weeks.

Hospice staff try to create an atmosphere in which the patient and the family can express their fears and hopes, sort out practical and emotional problems and use their time together for mutual benefit. Hospice support of families is vital. The guidance and counselling of an experienced team can be effective enough to ensure that patients spend their last few days in the companionship of their families.

As late as 1979, it was estimated that 28 per cent. of cancer patients died in severe pain. There is no need for that. We possess the knowledge to enable people to retain a high quality of life to the bitter end, and St. Luke's will help to perform that function in Basildon.

The project, inspired by a hard-working committee and, in particular, the Cox family, has resulted in children, women and men from all walks of life, and from different circumstances, joining together with the one selfless and compassionate aim of building a hospice, not as a memorial to the dead, but to help the living.

I am extremely fortunate to represent a constituency with such good community spirit and where blatant acts of generosity are evident, even though it is not an especially wealthy part of Essex. Nevertheless, the hurdles are enormous. Nearly £500,000 will have to be raised during three years. Basildon development corporation has allowed the freehold of the site at Fobbing Farm to be bought for the lowest figure that the district valuer would accept. It has tried to help as much as possible. The design team of architects, surveyor and engineer have offered their services at reduced rates, but the building will present a problem.

The cost includes an estimated £58,597 of VAT. If that tax could be lifted, the organising committee would be enormously relieved. I realise that this is not the Minister's responsibility, but will he have a word with the relevant Minister to see whether anything can be done? I am pleased that the building has a chance of being accepted for grade II listed status, which would give some relief from VAT and other advantages, although it would render the building subject to certain building controls.

The advantages to the National Health Service of a hospice are extensive. A significant number of beds in acute wards are saved and, by acting as community teams, hospices enable people to stay at home or in the hospice and give them help to enable them to face their last days with dignity and courage. Hospices are an impressive addition to health care. The quality and care is unquestioned, and the standards that they have set are high and compassionate. Good terminal care is a challenge to all with responsibility for the dying.

When Dame Cicely Saunders established St. Christopher's hospice in south London in the 1960s, it was in in-patient unit where patients could be cared for during the final weeks of their lives. Recently, however, hospice activity has been concentrated on supporting patients in the home. The in-patient unit is regarded as providing back-up support and, where necessary, intensive nursing care.

Hospices' main achievement in pain control has been the demonstration of the benefits of administering analgesics regularly before the patient's manifest need for them arises. The in-patient unit, the home care service and the symptom control team contribute to the work of a hospice. There were only 12 in-patient units in the United Kingdom in the mid-1960s. Their number has grown to nearly 70. There are also about 90 home care services and 11 symptom control teams. I am pleased to learn that other hospice facilities are being planned.

Patients in the terminal stages of cancer are often told that nothing more can be done. That is seldom true with advanced cancer. An interested and sympathetic doctor using a small number of well-established drugs can relieve pain in most cases. No cancer patient should be allowed to die suffering. Pain can be relieved entirely in the majority of cases and controlled satisfactorily in the rest. Terminal care should begin when any attempt to cure the disease is deemed inappropriate and all professional skills must be devoted to the relief of physical, emotional, social and spiritual distress.

No doubt the film about Bob Champion and his remarkable determination to beat the disease, and eventually to go on to win the Grand National, will inspire many fellow sufferers. His story provides a moving account of his emotional battles and has a fairy story ending. However, not everyone can be a Bob Champion, so hospices are essential.

I said earlier that a substantial amount of money was needed to finance the project. My constituents have set about their task in an enthusiastic, enterprising and original fashion. A few weeks ago, I was privileged to be present at a major fund-raising event in our town centre in aid of St. Luke's hospice. People bought bricks for £1 each to build the hospice and then formed a human chain to move them to the site where it will be built. The spirit of people was wonderful and the dedication service that evening was a joyous occasion.

I am proud to give whatever assistance I can to St. Luke's. It will be built with the minimum financial assistance that the Government might feel able to give, and fundamentally from the generosity and belief of the people of Basildon.

I am not really asking the Government for financial assistance. However, if the Minister has any suggestions about how the money can be raised, we would obviously be delighted to hear them. If he knows of any European fund to which we might be eligible to apply, that would be helpful. If there is anyone listening to the debate, or who hears about the project, who might be able to give us physical, financial or practical assistance, we would be delighted.

Whatever difficulties the organisers of the project face, everyone is determined that the hospice will be built quickly, inspired as they all are by the words of Dame Cecily Saunders:

"You matter to the last moment of life, and we will do all we can, not only to help you to die peacefully but to live until you die."

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security (Mr. John Patten): It was entirely characteristic of my hon. Friend the Member for Basildon (Mr. Amess) to end with that very moving quotation from Dame Cecily who did so much to get the hospice movement going in the 1960s. It has been an inspiration to all those involved — whether in the residential sphere or in the increasing area of activity concerned with helping people in their homes and counselling those who look after them.

My hon. Friend's speech was also characteristically lucid, and certainly very moving in parts. His interest in health affairs is already noted in the House. He has been the first to criticise—heartily supported by me—some of the scandalous suggestions and slander against the National Health Service in his area from the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson)—who is not in his place today—and the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms Harman). They have done a great deal to lower morale in that area, and by knocking the service they have caused great upset among the staff. I advise those who gratuitously look for publicity for cheap political ends to pick their targets with rather more sensitivity than that shown by the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras, as I shall tell him the next time that I speak from the Dispatch Box, and as, indeed, I have told him before.

My hon. Friend appreciates that a number of his points do not fall within my ministerial capacity. For example, the question of VAT on charities is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Chancellor. I know that it is a useful defence for Ministers to say that certain matters are not for them but their right hon. Friends, but I shall not say that about the EC. I think that I can give my hon. Friend some advice, even though it is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary.

The two EC funds that we considered as possibly able to provide help for the project do not, alas, appear to be applicable. Therefore, subject to any further advice from the European Parliament, I do not think that anything can be done there.

In the brief time available, I shall try to reply to the important points that have been raised. I shall do so on three levels. First, I shall comment on hospices, and the hospice movement nationally. Secondly, I shall try to answer some of the important questions that my hon. Friend asked about cancer. Thirdly, I shall say something about Basildon. My word, what spirit there seems to be in Basildon! What effort is being made by the local people! They have not gone cap in hand to anyone, but are determined to do everything themselves. I have some experience of that in my area of Oxford, where a hospice has been similarly helped and where similar spirit has been shown.

Those organising the appeal—the Cox family, and Mrs. Cox in particular, as well as all those who have given money and who have formed a human chain to shift bricks and so on—have demonstrated the strength of voluntary giving in this country, which links prople of all political parties at all times. Such giving existed before the NHS came into being and it has carried on since then. It is a compliment to Basildon that it should have approached the issue in that way.

I should not like to give hon. Members the impression that the NHS does not wish to take care of the terminally ill. Much of the initiative has come in the past from local voluntary groups. Indeed, in the health and social services, such groups have often proved to be the seed corn from which much bigger statutory services have developed. Although we welcome that process, we have been conscious from time to time that services have developed in an unplanned way. Whether funds are raised for a hospice, for a body scanner or for any of the other items that we learn about with such pleasure in the press, consideration must be given to the proper national planning and provision of health services. That is why I welcome the growing spirit of co-operation that has been seen in Basildon and in the country as a whole between the voluntary sector and local health authorities in order to ensure that the right services are provided at the right time with the money that has been raised. I am very pleased to see that going on in Basildon in just the right way.

We believe that adequate terminal care should be provided by every health authority. It can be provided in several different ways, but we would encourage every health authority to enter into a constructive partnership, where possible, in order to achieve that end. We certainly do not say that good terminal care should be available only in hospices.

I must return to a theme that has come up from time to time in our Adjournment debates when we have kept each other company at all times of the day and night. I refer to the feeling among some hon. Members that large hospitals cannot give sensitive care either in maternity wards or in wards for the terminally ill. I do not believe that that is so. Maternity wards in large hospitals can be homely and agreeable places that have devoted staff encouraging mothers-to-be. It would be inappropriate, to put it mildly, to suggest that our nurses, doctors and ancillary workers, who play such an important role in our NHS hospitals, cannot give the care and attention that the dying deserve. They often do so, and I am happy to say that many people write in to thank those involved.

We welcome the co-operation given by the hospice movement. We want to encourage it and to see it grow and develop in partnership with the NHS. But my right hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Health and I are convinced that with good guidelines and good staff training there is no reason why that same quality of care and attention cannot be given even in our largest, perhaps 1,000-bed, hospitals.

My hon. Friend alluded to support for cancer research. Alas, I am not able to report any further great developments on that front, but I remind my hon. Friend that the DHSS and the Department of Education and Science allocate substantial funds to the Medical Research Council, which in turn allocates an equally substantial amount directly for cancer research. The Medical Research Council is spending about £19 million on cancer research this year, the largest allocation of its funds to any area of research. Therefore, more money is going from the MRC, drawing upon the funds of the Department of Health and Social Security and the Department of Education and Science, to this area of research than to any other area.

The voluntary sector has a role to play in cancer research, a role which I do not wish to underestimate. This is another very good example of how the voluntary sector can support and supplement the health services. About half of the expenditure upon cancer research comes from non-Exchequer funds. The Imperial Cancer Research Fund and the Cancer Research Campaign are major contributors. They have provided £4 million and £19 million respectively for the research budget, a formidable amount of money. Our experience is shared with other western countries and with the United States where these problems are being tackled head on.

On the particular problems of services for the terminally ill in Basildon and Thurrock, the North-East Thames regional health authority shares our view about local NHS services for the terminally ill. In its strategic plan it says that every district health authority should establish medical and nursing staff training for the care of the dying. That is critical. The NHS has a formidable job to do here. It also says that it should set up, either independently or in collaboration with an adjacent district, a home care service which operates outside the hospital or hospice with a pain relief clinic. I have visited such clinics and know about the extraordinary work that is done there. It also proposes that small in-patient facilities should be allocated, either hospital-based from the acute sector or using the services of a voluntary hospice.

I welcome these proposals. It is clear that what is being done for those who, alas, are terminally ill will increasingly be done in the community. This does not mean that it will be a cheaper option. In staffing terms, it may be considerably more expensive. As my hon. Friend the Member for Basildon said with such crispness, the majority of those who are terminally ill would prefer, wherever possible to be in their own homes with their families. But their families need support from nursing staff, social workers and others to deal with the problems which sometimes arise during the last few weeks—resentment, fear and all the other emotions which my hon. Friend so clearly described. By the better training of hospital staff and the better development of community-based services we shall mount a much more concerted twin-pronged attack.

I am glad that in Basildon and Thurrock the health authority is actively looking at ways to improve its care of the terminally ill. For this purpose it has set up a working party. I understand that at its June meeting the authority will be considering a report from the working party. I have not seen the report, but I understand that it makes a number of recommendations about the development of these services. I am advised that it says something about encouraging voluntary activities and closer links with the hospice movement. I hope that June will be an important month in the development of these services in the Basildon and Thurrock area.

We acknowledge the major role played in the past by the hospice movement and the role that it will continue to play in the care of the terminally ill. We recognise that the NHS also has an important role to play in the planning of these services. We never want voluntary effort and funds to go astray, to be spent in an unnecessary or inappropriate way or to be wasted because of a lack of planning.

The boot is on both feet. The health authority must ensure that it is open to voluntary organisations, and must give them a role. Equally, voluntary organisations must ensure that they do not go off at a tangent: They must let health authorities know what they are doing and they must co-operate. In the past there have been criticisms of health authorities for not taking voluntary organisations into account. That must stop. If any hon. Member has a complaint about that, he should let us know because health authorities have a positive duty to take into account voluntary organisations' fund-raising activities in planning future developments. Nevertheless, it is for the authorities to decide how services should be provided.

Clearly, things are moving fast in Basildon. There is good co-operation between volunteers and the local health authority. I hope that it will not be long before the long-awaited plans come to fruition.

Homelessness (Young People)

1 pm

Mr. Alfred Morris (Manchester, Wythenshawe): I am very glad to have had parliamentary time allocated to me for this important debate. My concern to secure the debate derived from the ever more disturbing evidence of homelessness among young people in Manchester; from my work as a trustee of the Disabilities Study Unit which, under the leadership of Duncan Guthrie, has worked so hard to focus attention on this grave and growing problem; from my knowledge of its consequences for some of the most vulnerable young people as a trustee of Crisis at Christmas; and from the powerful submissions to right hon. and hon. Members of this House from such widely respected organisations as Shelter, CHAR and MIND.

As the House rises for the Whitsun recess — and families unite for a holiday weekend together—it is not inappropriate that we should be debating this major social problem here today. The Government stand accused of giving the problem of the young homeless—or, as they are known in other countries, "street children" and "street youth" — scant attention and of showing little understanding of the human suffering involved. As the House knows, the Government have not entirely overlooked the problem. They recently introduced new rules for board and lodging payments, which are expressly designed to make it more difficult, not to say impossible, for young people to move into areas where they believe that employment may be available to them. First, they were advised to get on their bikes and look for work. Now they are punished for doing so.

SHADES, an excellent youth advisory project deeply involved in seeking to assist homeless young people in Manchester, see and work to help young people from my own constituency. With an increasing number of other youngsters they end up in the inner city, homeless because there is simply no suitable housing provision for them in their own localities. Some make their way to London and, when the lure of the bright lights fades and they have to face the harsh realities of the London streets, the lucky ones make their way to Centrepoint, which works, with all too limited resources, in the centre of Soho, providing emergency night shelter facilities as well as hostel accommodation and a small number of flats. The less lucky ones arrive at the accepted meeting places of the young homeless; in cafes and bars and at street corners where, in the company of other young people in the same predicament, they often take the first steps to drug dependency, crime of all sorts, including prostitution, both male and female, as rent boys and rent girls, and the general despair of homelessness.

The plight of the youngsters is now made worse by having to move from area to area to retain benefit. Unable to return to any particular area for six months, they are, as my hon. Friend the Member for Houghton and Washington (Mr. Boyes) has said, almost driven into crime and prostitution. In this International Year of Youth, they become even more vulnerable to abuse. Young people who are handicapped, either physically or mentally, are the most vulnerable of all.

If anyone sees this as alarmist, they should reflect on the trial of Dennis Nilsen with its grim revelation of multiple murder. Even when the problem was less serious than it is today, Nilsen admitted he had no difficulty in picking up 22 young men where street youth congregate in London. They were lured to his flat and he murdered 15 of them. His young victims were unemployed, mostly homeless or at best living in squats and only too pleased at the prospect of a bed for the night. Recollection of the horror of that case, among others, must inform our judgment of the Government's decision to make it more difficult, not easier, for the young homeless to obtain safe lodgings.

Turning again to my own city, I am very strongly advised from Manchester—this is the view of the city's officers most directly concerned with their implementation — that the new regulations on board and lodging ceilings must be urgently reversed. One consequence of the regulations is that they will make young people in bed-and-breakfast accommodation homeless, and will therefore put them in the highest priority group on the rehousing list. This will put extra pressure on the local authority and have knock-on effects for other applicants.

Let me quote from the advice I have received from Manchester:

"The impact in some places will be horrific. Young single homeless people may well be competing with other priority groups, for example, the elderly and medical priority cases, for a limited supply of small-sized dwellings . . . . An ironic consequence of Manchester's humane and positive attitude could be to make the situation worse by making the city a centre to which young people will flock. At the same time, there is the danger of a backlash from other people on the rehousing list against the young people who are victims of the Government's new regulations."

All informed opinion believes that the Government are contributing further to the housing crisis and, because of the vulnerable age group on which they are picking, they could rapidly create major social tensions as well. The whole proposal is badly thought out. The levels of benefit are inadequate. They provide £55 for full board or £70 for hostels in Manchester, yet research carried out as long ago as June 1983 showed that £80 was a realistic figure for Greater Manchester. The Social Security Advisory Committee has admitted that the charges now payable are likely to create "a class of rootless young people unable to find accommodation in one place, unable to find a job, and obliged by benefit rules to move around the country constantly."

This is a case where the Government are returning to pre-Victorian values. The proposals are a re-enactment of the old poor law which allowed parishes to send "sturdy beggars" on their way. It is not the way that any Government should treat our young people.

Last October, in reply to a parliamentary question that I put to the Secretary of State for the Environment, he informed me that there was no information available on the numbers of homeless adolescents and young people in London and the other major conurbations. I was given a similar reply by the Under-Secretary of State for Scotland. Figures are still unavailable, and I must now press the Government to obtain them. It must be a very mistaken sense of economy that leaves the statutory and voluntary sectors with no figures from which to work. Of course, all who work in the area know—as I was told by Shelter yesterday—that the numbers are increasing, especially among youngsters, boys and girls alike, under 16 years of age. More and more of them sleep rough in the streets.

In a further parliamentary question, I asked whether the DHSS would support a study being mounted jointly by the Disabilities Study Unit and European Research on Consumer Affairs to collect information on the voluntary organisations concerned with "street children" and "street youth" in the countries of the European Economic Community. The aim was to learn more about their objectives, their modus operandi and their sources of funding. In reply, I was told that an application would be considered on its merits. But when Duncan Guthrie, as director of the Disabilities Study Unit, submitted a proposal to the DHSS he was told:

"This Department's responsibilities in the area of homelessness are concerned with special care and support needs rather than homelessness per se".

This could only have meant that the DHSS was not prepared to take steps to cure the disease, only to treat some of the symptoms. I am glad to say that the Disabilities Study Unit has now been able to raise funds, partly from voluntary grant-making bodies and partly from the EC, and that this important study can now be put in hand. Sadly, however, a great deal of time has been spent in seeking financial support which could otherwise have gone into constructive research.

I must ask the Minister whether he agrees that the present piecemeal approach to the problem of homelessness among young people is hampering other valuable work in this sector? The DHSS, the Department of Education and Science, the Department of the Environment, the Home Office and local authorities are all involved in different, but not very clearly differentiated, aspects of the problem.

The voluntary organisations are often at a loss to know which Government Department they should contact. They are often at a loss, too, to understand what the Government are expecting of the voluntary sector and in what areas Government, both central and local, are likely to provide a grant-in-aid.

Again, there are reports of important differences of opinion between the DHSS and the Department of the Environment. What exactly are the differences, and to what extent do they concern the new regulations? As the Minister must know, the Minister responsible for home affairs and the environment in the Scottish Office, speaking to the Shelter conference on young people's housing needs in Edinburgh on 26 October 1984, made a statement on homelessness in Scotland which many in the voluntary sector would like to see endorsed by the Department of the Environment Minister. Will the Minister, in replying to the debate, endorse his Scottish colleague's statement?

There are some other specific questions that I must put to the Minister. First, can he tell me what evidence, if any, has been given to adjudication officers on how to determine whether someone under 26 claiming a board and lodging allowance is so disabled that it is unreasonable to expect him to be in accommodation other than as a boarder? Secondly, will he look very urgently at the effect of the new board and lodging regulations on disabled claimants?

In Shelter's experience, much difficulty has been caused by the way that DHSS offices have sent out notices to claimants informing them that their benefit will be reduced unless they can show that they fit into an exceptional category, without the Department having any adequate information to make such an assessment. To put the onus on, for example, people who are mentally ill to show that they fit into an exceptional category is clearly highly unsatisfactory. I am sure that the Minister will agree with me on that.

Such people may not understand that they fall into the category of "mentally ill or disordered persons". Even if they do understand, they are likely to be reluctant to provide the DHSS with detailed evidence to prove the case. The implementation of the regulations raises important questions of privacy of information which I should like the Minister to address himself to when he replies.

MIND and CHAR have said in a joint statement:

"Government policies on board and lodging charges are creating even worse homelessness among single people, including those with mental health problems."

They also state—and I hope that the Minister will share my concern about their findings:

"Many people are forced to live in appallingly overcrowded conditions, often with poor sanitation, and certainly with little support or help if they have additional disabilities."

In other words, handicap piles on handicap for the young disabled people concerned.

A third specific question concerns the initiative of the Children's Society to make contact with the parents of the children of youngsters who have left home and to whom the society gives temporary shelter. The Minister will be familiar with this and will know that there are legal difficulties. The initiative puts the Children's Society in what has been called and I shall be grateful if the Minister will both comment on the initiative and say whether the Government have any plans to change the law to protect the society which, as he knows, wants to be helpful to both child and parent. How does he react to what has been achieved, and is there any possibility of state funding for this and other initiatives? I regard it as a bold and innovative action by a well-respected and responsible voluntary organisation.

The House is, of course, aware of the United Nations projected convention on the rights of the child. Since 1979, a working party has, at the request of the United Nations General Assembly, been drafting a text for the convention. The United Kingdom's contribution has been minimal and this country is not among those which have submitted either amendments or addenda for the working party's final meetings. The answer may be that the Departments concerned are already fully satisfied with the text as drafted. Is that so?

The Government's attitude to the convention contrasts sharply with that of the voluntary sector concerned with homeless youth. In Strasbourg recently, voluntary workers from this country drafted with members of the European Parliament a motion which, in less than 24 hours, had been accepted for tabling in the European Parliament and was subsequently debated there.

It is now 10 years since the DHSS published the report of the working party on homeless young people set up in the wake of that frightening television documentary, "Johnnie, Go Home!" What has happened in those 10 years? The number of homeless children and young people has increased dramatically and is still increasing. The Government should now set up an independent working party to look again at the position of homeless youth in our large cities. I hope that they will be pressed to do so from both sides of the House. Even the briefest look at Times square in New York shows what can happen when too little is done too late.

The time has come to call together in a working party all the voluntary organisations with an interest in the young homeless, and that working party should be enabled to use the best tools of scientific research to look at the problem, its causes and ways in which it can be solved.

The problem can be solved. To govern is to choose and the problem is basically one of priorities and resources. If nothing is done and if the DHSS continues to penalise young people for growing up — for that is what it amounts to when they are forced on to the streets because they are young, out of work and looking for independence —we could soon find ourselves in deeper crisis.

As I have said, this is the International Year of Youth and 1987 is the International Year of the Homeless. What preparations are the Government making for 1987? What plans are there to reduce the cruelty of homelessness among young people? This debate gives the Government an opportunity to show that they appreciate the increasingly widespread concern about the young homeless. I implore the Minister at least to give them some hope. What hope can he offer to the "street children" and "street youth" in Britain today?

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment (Sir George Young): The right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) has raised the subject of homelessness among young people. In doing so, he drew on his extensive background of personal knowledge and commitment and made a substantial case. This is a matter of public concern and it is right that the House should have the opportunity to review the present position.

I will begin by considering the situation in Manchester, which the right hon. Gentleman mentioned in his speech. I was interested to read the report of the director of housing entitled, "Strategy for housing single people in need", and I believe that that report has been adopted by the council. I was interested to see the proposals now coming forward from Manchester to try to deal with homelessness. At this stage, there is a problem about the cost of the submissions put forward. We have made it clear to the council that we have no objection to what it proposes to provide. It is simply a matter of the cost of the particular propositions before us. I believe that the strategy adopted by the council is correct.

It is interesting to note that on the general needs index Manchester did not score at all on the homelessness indicator in 1984-85 and scored only 0·5 on the weighted homelessness indicator for the current year out of a total weighted GNI score of 499. That may indicate that the problems of homelessness in Manchester are less severe than in other parts of the country.

I was also interested to see that the housing corporation in Manchester provided housing associations in the area with £665,000 last year for hostels, mainly for the single homeless, and that in the current year £654,000 is being made available for further hostel provision, with an additional £800,000 for hostels for the young homeless. It seems, therefore, that a substantial attack is being made on the problems of homelessness in Manchester.

Towards the end of his speech, the right hon. Gentleman made some interesting comments about the need for more research into the causes of homelessness. I believe that something is happening in our society causing people to leave home in greater numbers than before. This may be to do with the incidence of marital breakdown, or there may be other reasons. Certainly, we need greater insight into the causes of homelessness as well as to find better solutions.

The right hon. Gentleman also touched on what he described as the piecemeal approach of Government to the single homeless. He knows as well as I do, if not better, that Government Departments are based on services. They provide for education, social services, transport, health, and so on, and at any given time an individual member of the public may be looking to a number of Departments for help. As the right hon. Gentleman said, if the single homeless have drug problems that is a matter for the Home Office. If they are on supplementary benefit or if they are ill, it is a matter for the DHSS. Their housing needs are the concern of the Department of the Environment.

The right hon. Gentleman may have been implying that Government Departments should be rearranged so that there was for example, a Department for the single homeless, a Department for the elderly, and a Department for the disabled. That would create some difficult administrative problems as each Department tried to provide services for its client group in isolation, when the services required by all the client groups — such as hospitals or a supplementary benefit system—might be identical. I think that it would be better to retain the present system, with better co-ordination, than to appoint Ministers for individual client groups. I know that this is a sensitive subject, because the right hon. Gentleman has been the Minister with responsibilities for the disabled and appreciates better than anyone else the problems of trying to deal with a single client group within Whitehall or local government.

The right hon. Gentleman rightly said that the homelessness statistics that we collect from local authorities do not include any age breakdown. We are currently talking to the local authority associations about the possibility of including such a breakdown, so that we would know how many young people there were among the homeless. We may well wish to return to that point when our research project on how authorities record their statistics on activity under the Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977 has been completed. The project is due to start later in the year.

At the moment information on homelessness among young people is patchy. However, I would not deny that the evidence from all sides — advice agencies, local authorities, supplementary benefit figures and one's own constituency advice bureau — suggests a substantial increase in homelessness among young people and a disproportionate representation of ethnic minority groups. Given the importance of the home in providing a background of security in people's lives, and given the serious and lasting effects that homelessness can have on people's development, especially when those effects are felt at a young and impressionable age, that is certainly a situation that the Government are concerned about and are anxious to improve.

There are many reasons why a young person may become homeless. Often a combination of factors are involved. The decision to leave the parental home will not always be the result of some crisis or problems; moving away from parents and setting up independently is after all very much a part of growing up. But likewise so is learning to be realistic, and it is only reasonable to expect young people to take account of the availability of accommodation before deciding to leave home.

There are occasions when it is difficult or impossible for young people to remain in the parental home, and local authorities need carefully to consider such special circumstances when dealing with homeless young people. Research published by my Department in 1981 as "Single and Homeless" identified a number of important factors contributing to homelessness among young people. When asked why they had left their last settled base, 29 per cent. of those under 30 gave family break-up or marital dispute as a reason, and this was a particularly important explanation in the under-20 age group, in which the figure was 43 per cent. Disputes with parents accounted for 22 per cent. of those under 30. Other important reasons related to employment—nearly 20 per cent.—or entry to or discharge from an institution—12 per cent.

The right hon. Gentleman mentioned the new supplementary benefit board and lodging regulations that came into effect at the end of April. They have aroused widespread concern, especially the aspects that affect young people aged under 26. The right hon. Gentleman asked me a number of questions about adjudicators that would fall more appropriately to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services. I shall ask my right hon. Friend to write to the right hon. Gentleman.

In a lengthy debate on 2 April, my hon. Friend the Minister for Social Security explained the changes involved and the reasons for them. At the end of the debate, the House approved the changes. I do not wish to cover all the ground again now. The important point is that the DHSS is carefully monitoring the effects of the changes and Ministers are prepared to consider whether further changes should be made in the light of experience. I know that Shelter, CHAR and other voluntary bodies concerned with homelessness are also monitoring the position from the point of view of homelessness. My Deptartment will keep in close touch with the DHSS as experience of the new regime grows.

On the practical side, I commend what the voluntary bodies are doing. The right hon. Gentleman mentioned some in his speech. I commend what some local authorities are doing to inform existing supplementary benefit claimants in board and lodging of the effects of the new regulations, the accommodation options open to them and their rights under the 1977 Act. One must be clear that authorities that have a minimum duty under the Act to provide "advice and appropriate assistance" to homeless people should not interpret that simply as giving lists of bed and breakfast establishments with charges that are above the new ceilings for board and lodging payments. That would not count as appropriate advice or assistance.

With regard to investment in housing, the right hon. Gentleman knows that difficult decisions on priorities have to be made, in terms of what we can make available. However, on the homelessness factor, we already take into account in the capital allocations to local authorities and in the allocations to the Housing Corporation, the incidence of homelessness in a particular area. We are reviewing with the local authorities the possibility of altering the weighting—currently 10 per cent.—or the form of the homelessness indicator so that it reflects needs more fairly. As the right hon. Gentleman knows, we have also asked authorities to concentrate their available resources on those in the greatest housing need and, of course, that must include the homeless. Then it is up to the local authorities to decide how to use the resources that are available.

We have tried to help with the hostels initiative, which I hope the right hon. Gentleman knows about. That involved a major expansion in the provision by housing associations of small modern hostels, often providing care and support. Since May 1979 some 11,000 places have been approved. Young homeless people will certainly be among those who have benefited. Under the housing association grant arrangements, associations that provide accommodation in hostels, other forms of shared housing, and self-contained dwellings for renting are supported by my Department with capital and, when necessary, revenue finance.

We are sending a circular to local authorities next month advising them how to introduce better housing management measures, which will reduce the number of empty dwellings. It is a scandal that so many local authority dwellings remain empty while the numbers of homeless people increase. On 1 April 1984 more than 25,000 dwellings had been empty for over a year. We must have another blitz on that figure if we are to make progress with the numbers of homeless people.

We are also looking at several other initiatives. Perhaps more should be done to encourage people to transfer out of under-occupied houses to the smaller homes that might suit them better. Perhaps the Government or local authorities should take further steps to encourage householders to take in lodgers, either directly or through special local agencies. We are looking at several initiatives to encourage the private rented sector at this stage to see what might be done to get private resources into housing.

With regard to preventing the existing housing stock from deteriorating, we recently published a Green Paper on improvement grants. Last week my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I met some voluntary bodies concerned with homelessness including the Shelter Housing Aid Centre and CHAR. As a result, we are having another look at our policy on homelessness to see whether fresh initiatives might be introduced to tackle the problem mentioned by the right hon. Gentleman.

We reviewed the 1977 Act three years ago and decided against any extension. However, we monitor the position through the statistics that we collect and the information that comes in from a range of sources. I hope that local authorities will interpret sensitively their obligations under the Act. They can treat as vulnerable some of the young people about whom I know the right hon. Gentleman is concerned—those who are at risk of financial or sexual abuse. The Department's code of guidance encourages authorities to secure accommodation wherever possible for those groups of young people. I welcome the fact that some authorities at least feel able to do that or even more.

I know that I have not answered all the questions asked by the right hon. Gentleman, but I shall write to him. However, I hope that I have said enough to make it clear to him that we are seriously concerned about the increase in homelessness, particularly among young people. At the discussion last week the voluntary bodies made a number of useful points. We are taking a fresh look at this problem and are looking at a range of measures which I hope will relieve the situation described by the right hon. Gentleman.

Leasehold and Tenanted Properties

1.30 pm

Mr. Anthony Nelson (Chichester): I welcome the opportunity to raise a matter which I consider to be of considerable national importance. It is both timely and a happy coincidence that this is a housing matter. I hope that my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State will not feel that he is overworked this afternoon, but at least the two debates to which he is replying follow each other.

This debate is prompted by my growing anxiety over many years about the deteriorating fabric of dwellings and the liability that we shall be storing up for occupiers and taxpayers if we fail to devote the resources and attention that are required. It is appropriate, therefore, for me to ask the House to consider the whole issue of the maintenance and repair of leasehold and tenanted properties. Although I recognise that the problems of disrepair are not isolated in the private sector but apply also in the public sector, in the latter case the Government have done a great deal to assist local authorities' abilities to maintain the fabric of those dwellings. Substantial new efforts are needed in the private sector where the problems are greatest.

I am especially concerned about the leasehold and privated tenanted sector where the neglect of mansion blocks, the squalor of tenement flats and the impoverished conditions of their occupants are most marked.

I am fortunate to represent a beautiful rural constituency. I recognise that some of the problems to which I refer are most prevalent in our cities, but the conditions of leasehold and tenanted properties are current throughout the country and many of the problems to which I refer will be found in agricultural dwellings and smaller blocks of leasehold properties in towns and provinces and not just in the major cities. This is a matter of great national interest.

The problem was clearly brought to the attention of the public through the 1981 English house condition survey which revealed that, of a national total of 18 million dwellings, more than 3 million were in serious disrepair, unfit for habitation or lacked basic amenities. The worst conditions are in the private sector, especially the private rented sector where one in six dwellings are unfit for habitation, amounting to 370,000 dwellings.

An unquantifiable number of leasehold dwellings have become rundown, but the evidence is there to see in our city mansion blocks where, over the years, the deteriorating fabric and structure of those dwellings has not been assisted by a combination of a lack of private resources and the anomalies and artificialities of our property law. These properties are often occupied by old people, those on low incomes and those least able to help themselves.

We know that the number of very elderly people will rise significantly during the remaining years of this century. The quality of their housing stock will, therefore, become a more costly and pressing problem. We cannot afford to wait for that responsibility to arise. We must tackle it over a period of years, and we must start now. We know also that the worst living conditions are suffered in the oldest properties. Of the 1 million dwellings that are categorised as unfit for habitation, 88 per cent. were built before 1919. The average cost of repairs per dwelling is more than £7,000—a sum far in excess of owners' resources or their ability to raise through earnings and savings.

Few people in the very poorest housing stock can finance the necessary remedial work from savings. Even with grants or loans, a substantial sum must still be found. Curiously, a number of surveys, including the English house condition survey and the first report of the inquiry into British housing, chaired by the Duke of Edinburgh, have found that many owners are not alert to the need to carry out essential repairs and many make no complaint about living in the poorest housing conditions.

While some people become inured to the appalling housing conditions that they suffer, that should not be interpreted as meaning that the problem is more imagined than real, for many have no experience or hope of anything better, and for every resident who is content, there are a multitude who are not.

There is also the pressing and contentious issue of what to do about the increasingly dilapidated mansion blocks throughout the country, and particularly in London, where lessees and tenants have limited ability, even if they had the incentive, to maintain and repair the structure, common parts and fabric of these aging buildings.

Most mansion blocks were built at the turn of the century and are now badly in need of repair. Successive Rent Acts forced landlords away from letting and into selling long leases. Service charges used to be small, but the quadrupling of oil prices and the cost of repairs to lifts, roofs and common parts sent them soaring in the 1970s and they are now a considerable outgoing to most lessees and tenants, particularly in urban areas.

The problem is that neither lessees nor freeholders have the incentive to maintain these properties, partly because of our curious leasehold system, which gives the lessee an inadequate interest in the building as a whole, and because it has been easier and more profitable for many freeholders to exploit lessees, asset-strip what they can and sell before any legal obligation is placed on them.

Complaints about faceless offshore companies trading in the freeholds of blocks of flats with a complete disregard for the wishes or interests of lessees or tenants have abounded for years. Despite the welcome improvements in the rights and protection of residents in the Housing Act 1980, thousands of them are still vulnerable to the worst practices, and in the meantime prudent and necessary repair and maintenance work is left undone.

The consequences of that neglect will be a massive social and financial problem in the years ahead as increasing numbers of blocks become literally uninhabitable, even though the lessees may ostensibly own long leases on flats or tenants believe that they enjoy security of tenure.

However, the problems for lessees and tenants go beyond the structural conditions of the building. The Federation of Private Residents Associations in its submission to the Government committee that was set up to look into the management of blocks, complained about poor workmanship on repairs, inadequate accounting, lack of control over management fees, dishonesty, abuse of reserve funds, managing agents being elusive or in collusion with landlords and landlords disappearing or even thieving the reserve funds. The federation has called for tenants to be protected by setting up housing courts to hear disputes and by strengthening the powers of local council tenancy regulation officers. Its proposals deserve serious consideration by the Government.

Who is looking into these problems, which are not new but which have become more apparent in recent years with the coming together of the deterioration of properties built nearly a century ago, the steep rise in the cost of maintenance and the problems of people being unable to afford the high cost of reparation works?

I am pleased to say that the Government and a number of outside bodies have taken these problems seriously. Though more should be done, I pay tribute to the housing policies of the Government, which have been imaginative and radical. The Under-Secretary, who has been associated with the housing policies of the Administration for the last four years, has made an incisive, outstanding and sensitive contribution to the alleviation of the serious social problems to which I am calling attention.

From the Housing Act 1980, which extended new rights to tenants, to the Green Paper on a new approach to home improvements, from the partnership projects between the public and private sectors which the Government have encouraged to record expenditure on home improvement grants in the past six years, from the assistance readily provided to occupiers of defective housing to promotion and sponsorship of the voluntary housing movement, the Government have demonstrated that they care about people's housing conditions and are not prepared to sit back and ignore the plight of those who want to improve their lot.

I should like to draw attention to the inquiries on the Government committee on the management of mansion blocks—the Nugee committee—which comprises several eminent people who are responding to the Government's wish that there should be objective consideration of these problems and recommendations on how to tackle some of the worst practices in the private rented and private leasehold sectors.

I should like also to pay some respect to the forthcoming final report of the inquiry into British housing. The first report was a useful contribution to the discussion of these issues. I understand that the final report might be out in July. It is worthy of serious attention. I hope that Ministers will consider the recommendations of those important inquiries sympathetically and constructively. Failure to do so will have bitter social and political consequences. A substantial number of people live in such properties. They all have a vote, but, quite apart from that, we should take seriously their housing conditions and worries about maintenance costs.

Is a new English house condition survey being prepared? It is an important assessment of progress in, or the problems of, maintaining and improving the housing stock. Governments are sometimes too defensive and dismissive of the survey and I hope that the present Government will not be. A package of measures are necessary if we are to deal with the problems of leasehold and tenanted properties. The problems fall broadly into two categories—financial and legislative.

As for financial measures, we should consider Government expenditure on housing. Provision this year remains just over £3 billion, of which more than half is allocated for the housing investment programmes of local authorities. That is a significant budget, but I cannot avoid the implication of my remarks, which is that tackling these problems will require more resources or a diversion of planned resources. Doing that would have beneficial employment consequences.

I was unhappy about the changing of the rule about the amount of capital receipts which local authorities are allowed to spend on improvements and other matters. I am aware of the immediate economic constraints within which the Government must operate, but I hope that it will be possible to review the rule, because it has significant employment and housing implications.

Expenditure such as I have mentioned would be a good investment. Just as I said in last year's debate on the autumn statement, I regret the cut in this year's housing budget to pay for an increase of the same size in the social security programme. There is an almost exact transfer of resources from the capital side to the current side of the expenditure programme. That might alleviate immediate personal difficulty, but it will do nothing to add to the infrastructure and the quality of housing.

Home improvement grants are important. The Government have a creditable record on providing them, but they were right to review the system to provide greater continuity, simplicity and fairness in supply. This month's Green Paper on a new approach to home improvements offers means-tested automatic grants for unfit houses and discretionary loans for others in exchange for an equity in the property. It is a useful discussion document, and I agree with the proposal on mandatory grants.

However, as my hon. Friend knows, I have misgivings about equity loans, as they run counter to Conservative party policy of promoting whole personal ownership, would be costly and time-consuming to administer, and would not be popular with either householders or local authorities. They would be even less workable or in demand for leasehold or tenanted properties where the landlord has to consent to a percentage charge being taken on his interest.

The standard of improvement work also needs to be raised. The Director General of Fair Trading found in 1983 that there had been almost 27,000 complaints in one year about home improvement work. Local authorities should exercise tighter control over standards of work financed by them and should institute lists of recommended contractors.

There need to be changes in the Rent Acts. As far back as 1981, the Select Committee on the Environment concluded:

"policies designed to give landlords an incentive to improve their properties inside the existing legislative framework will only have a limited effect on the longer-term quality of the private rented stock. Only if rents rise substantially . . . is it likely that in the long term significant quantities of improved stock will be retained in this sector."

Two changes are called for. First, there should be an end to the phasing of registered rent increases. Rates of inflation are now much lower than in 1975, when phasing was introduced in the Housing Rents and Subsidies Act. Registered rents, based on a notional rent without regard to scarcity value, are still preferentially low and there is no longer a good case for continuing to phase increases.

While the security of tenure and registered rent regime for existing protected tenants should continue, future lettings should be free from those restrictions. The quantity of vacant property available and the high demand for private rentals are a terrible reflection on existing law. It is surely time to introduce legislation to end the Rent Acts regime for future tenancies while ensuring that that is not made retrospective to end existing tenancies, or used as a benchmark for hiking up fair rents.

There is a case for instituting freehold buy-outs for leaseholders. The best way to upgrade the structural repair of mansion blocks is to give the residents the incentive, interest and control to make it worth their while. If the Rent Acts are abandoned for future tenancies, there will be less reason for the present leasehold system, and people will either rent or own the properties in which they live.

As a first step, leaseholders should have a pre-emption right in law to enable them to have first refusal on the transfer of the freehold or head lease on the whole building. Such is the enormity of the problems to which I referred earlier that lessees should probably have the right to buy the freeholds of their mansion blocks, thereby assuming the control of and financial interest in improving the fabric of the building.

I know that the Government are reluctant to go that far, but the principle was breached with the leasehold enfranchisement legislation, and in other spheres the Government have recognised the benefits of housing co-operatives. Why not, then, respond more radically to the wishes and interests of the tens of thousands of people who want to assume full ownership of the properties in which they live, and thereby extend the life of those properties? It would mean the end for the many charlatans who have ripped off lessees for too long and have prejudicially affected tenants over the years while remaining anonymous and well-heeled themselves.

I hope that the Government will recognise on which side the political butter is spread and take action to stamp out the smart operators. It is a national problem that needs tackling by central Government. I hope that the measures that I have proposed will be taken on board by the Government and, in due course, will provide the basis on which there can be a genuine upgrading and a welcome improvement in the standard of our tenanted and leasehold properties.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment (Sir George Young): My hon. Friend the Member for Chichester (Mr. Nelson) has made a wide-ranging and reflective speech on housing. It is a compliment rather than a discourtesy if I say that in the 11 minutes left to me there is no way in which I can address myself to all the important issues that he raised.

Of course the Government are working on fresh initiatives on housing. My hon. Friend mentioned, in particular, the private rented sector. As I think he knows, we have carried out a review to see whether we can build on the initiatives that he referred to. We want to promote a healthier private rented sector and to see an improvement in the general state of repair of the privately rented stock. If the private rented sector is to make a proper contribution towards meeting housing needs, the landlords must be both willing and able to put more accommodation on the market and to keep what they have in a good state of repair.

I cannot say today what the outcome of our review is likely to be. The area is complex, and requires a lot of thought and consideration. However, the ideas developed by my hon. Friend will be fed into the decision-making process, and we shall pay close attention to his views. Next month, we hope to announce a fresh housing initiative to help those who live on the difficult-to-let estates — the local authority estates that are under-utilised and that have become almost impossible for some local authorities to cope with. We are certainly developing radical policies to tackle housing problems.

I shall deal briefly with the English house condition survey. My hon. Friend asked whether a new survey was being prepared, and what the Government's reaction to it would be. My hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Construction announced on 9 May that a new survey would go ahead in 1986. The preparatory work is already in hand, and the new survey will use a larger sample than its predecessors. The Government are in no way dismissive of the findings of such surveys. They are a valuable guide to the state of the nation's assets. My hon. Friend mentioned the Green Paper on home improvement policy. The results of the 1981 survey provided the starting point for the initiatives in that document.

My hon. Friend also mentioned that he represented a beautiful rural seat. I represent the other side of the political coin—an urban constituency that no one in his right mind would consider beautiful. However, it has many mansion blocks. Indeed, as I am acquiring a lease in a mansion block in my constituency, my ears pricked up when he reminded me of some of the problems that I might face. He was right to say that the problems of repair and maintenance, especially for the older mansion blocks, are becoming very real. Some are just due to the sheer age of the blocks. Many of the traditional mansion blocks in inner London date from Edwardian times or even earlier. Blocks of that age are, by their very nature, expensive to run, and the maintenance of the structure and the renewal of essential services, such as central heating and lifts, can place an enormous burden on those who have to pay for the work.

My hon. Friend also mentioned the break-up of blocks of flats formally let to rack-renting tenants, and the sale of the individual flats on long leases, which became such a feature of the property market in the 1960s in London and elsewhere. That, in turn, has brought other problems in its wake. But there are also well-built and well-managed blocks of flats where problems have, happily, not arisen. There is no a priori reason why they should, but we must recognise that as time goes on, the block may become more expensive to run, there will be a need to renew essential services, and the leases — typically 99-year leases—will have less unexpired time to run.

There is a whole variety of arrangements for dealing with the management of the block. Sometimes the landlord retains responsibility. In some cases management companies have been formed with no direct interest in the property, and in other cases the residents have formed their own management company. Problems have tended to arise not because of the form of the management arrangements, but because of the way that the original leases were drawn up, so that it is not clear who is responsible for what; or because particular covenants are no longer enforceable; or because on assignment of the lease, the chain of obligations has been inadvertently broken.

My hon. Friend rightly mentioned some landlords who are unscrupulous in their attitude to residents, or to the reserve funds and who do not care about the upkeep of their properties. I have great sympathy with residents who find themselves in such circumstances, and I deplore the activities of such landlords. That brings me to the Nugee committee that my hon. Friend mentioned.

In 1982, the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors set up a working party under Mr. J. N. C. James to identify the nature and extent of problems for landlords and tenants in the management of blocks of flats and to make recommendations as to codes of good practice and other steps which might be adopted in the interests of both landlords and tenants. The working party included nominations from the British Property Federation, the Federation of Private Residents Associations, the Law Society and the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors, although the members sat in their own right.

The publication of that report in 1983 was a step forward, which we very much welcomed. Some of its wide-ranging series of recommendations included giving tenants greater powers to help them to identify the name and address of their landlords; the appointment and role of managing agents; deficiencies in leases and the use of standard and model clauses; service charges, including insurance; and the creation and protection of sinking and reserve funds. Some of these were matters for the parties involved — for example, the working up of an agreed code of practice for the management of blocks — but others would involve legislation.

Before the Government could decide whether it would be right to alter the statutory relationship of landlords and tenants we needed more evidence, which is why we set up the Nugee committee in 1984.

My hon. Friend has drawn attention to the work of the committee and it has commanded much attention elsewhere. The committee invited evidence from people who had experienced problems and over 3,000 replies were received covering the whole range of issues, including the repair and maintenance of common parts of blocks and the level of service charges. A number of local authorities, the Federation of Private Residents Associations and other bodies have also submitted detailed evidence, much of which was documented. A number of residents associations in my constituency have also written to the committee. As a result of the mass of evidence that the committee has received, we shall have a much clearer picture than ever before of the nature, scale and incidence of problems that exist in this sector. The Government are very much looking forward to receiving the report which will be available later in the year. I shall ensure that a copy of the report is sent to my hon. Friend when it is published. We shall consider very carefully any recommendations for change that it makes.

My hon. Friend also referred to the Duke of Edinburgh's committee which I understand is to report towards the end of July. Having looked at the initial report, which was published in January, I think that it will be a radical report suggesting wide-ranging changes and that it will make many criticisms of Governments of both parties. I am sure that it will be the forum for a wide-ranging debate on housing policy. The Department will pay very close attention to its recommendations.

My hon. Friend referred to proposals put forward for a housing court to hear disputes in housing matters. We have given careful consideration to the representations received about that matter. We believe that the wide and complex issues raised can best be carried forward in the context of the full and systematic review of civil justice which my noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor announced on 10 February.

I turn to improvement grants, which my hon. Friend mentioned towards the end of his remarks. I welcomed what he had to say about our policy on home improvements. I noted his reservations about the proposal for equity loans that are contained in the Green Paper. As it is a Green Paper, we are very much open to suggestions about ways in which it can be improved or altered. Equity loans are a way to improve property, while saving grants for those who are living in homes that are below the fitness standard. As the Green Paper points out, grants are an outright gift. Therefore it is proper that they should be restricted to circumstances where such a generous form of help is really needed to get bad property improved.

My hon. Friend referred to the review of the home improvement policy. I welcomed what he said about mandatory grants as an element in our housing policy.

Perhaps I could write to my hon. Friend about some of the problems that he mentioned — for example, the problems facing elderly residents in blocks of flats — either tenants or those with long leases — and the problems that have arisen over the repair of common parts of blocks of flats. Perhaps I could also write to him about strata freeholds which have aroused interest in this country and might provide a way forward for dealing with some of the problems faced by those who hold long leases.

In conclusion, I hope that my hon. Friend's speech will receive a far wider audience than it has commanded this afternoon. He touched on nearly all the housing matters, into which my Department is looking, or on which it has legislated. He touched on some of the options that remain open to us in the remaining years of this Parliament, which we are actively examining. He dealt knowledgeably and sensitively with the problems of those in mansion blocks. When we receive the report of the Nugee committee, the Government hope to announce any initiative that may be needed to improve matters.

It has been a worthwhile debate, and I commend my hon. Friend for his perceptive speech, which one would have expected from an hon. Member who was for so long a parliamentary private secretary to the Minister for Housing and Construction.

Social Security Act 1975

2 pm

Mr. Chris Smith (Islington, South and Finsbury): I wish to raise the issue of the implementation or non-implementation of section 152(4) of the Social Security Act 1975. Before I deal in detail with the matter, I wish to make it clear that it is a pleasure to be sparring with the Under-Secretary of State on this issue. The last time that we met in the Chamber we were dealing with matters further afield—human rights in Turkey. I hope that his response to this debate will be a little more fruitful than his response on that occasion.

At first sight the matter may seem to be highly technical, but it is not merely a technical matter, because it relates to the national insurance contributions of many hundreds of people. Section 152(4) relates primarily to contributions that are paid by individual employees, but not then paid on by their employer to the Department of Health and Social Security. It relates to the means by which the Department can seek redress against those employers. It may be helpful if I sketch in the background.

The Social Security Act introduced a system under which the collection of national insurance was passed to the Inland Revenue under the PAYE system. Before 1975, everyone had a card which had to be stamped. Since then only the self-employed and non-employed have had such cards. Under the Act, responsibility for deducting and paying national insurance for employees was put squarely on the shoulders of the employer. If the contributions were either not deducted or not remitted because of negligence by the employer, he could be prosecuted.

Obviously, problems arise if a business has no assets. Ordinarily, the owners of the business would be liable, but the position of limited companies excludes that possibility. As non-payment of contributions can lead to a prosecution through the criminal or civil courts, section 152(4) allows for criminal prosecution of a limited company followed by civil proceedings against negligent directors.

In November 1984, Ministers made it clear that they wished to remove this provision from the Act. What is more, even before its removal has passed through the House, they have ceased to apply that section. I shall return to that point because it is important, but I shall deal first with the reasons which Ministers have advanced, and which doubtless will be advanced again this afternoon, for the repeal of that part of the Act.

The reasons are openly stated in the information that was sent out by Ministers to individual local offices of the DHSS. The reasons were twofold. The first was that other revenue collection departments did not have the facility of prosecution under this section and they wished to bring the DHSS into line with other departments. Secondly, they feared that the threat of action under the section would be a disincentive to directors striving to save their companies or to people willing to become directors of companies.

Those two reasons are unsound. Although other Departments do not enjoy those special powers, other measures are available to them, such as extensive powers to enter and search premises and seize records, which the DHSS does not possess. Those powers are much more daunting to directors of businesses in financial trouble. Indeed, many more staff are employed by Departments in those areas than were employed by the DHSS in following up action under section 152(4). Therefore, to have any effective counter to the possibility of deliberate negligence by employers in forwarding their employees' contributions, and to have any effective weapon, such power should rest with the DHSS. in the absence of the draconian powers granted to other Departments.

Another point that must be made about the disincentive to become directors is that action can be taken by the DHSS only when deductions made from employees' wages are not remitted with the appropriate employers' contributions, or where no deductions were made when they should have been. The latter case is extremely rare, except with regard to directors' liability to contributions. However, the fact that some employers deduct money from their employees' wages and then do not pass it on to the DHSS acts not just against the DHSS but against the employees. Furthermore, the DHSS can act only against negligent directors—those who were aware, or could reasonably be expected to have been aware, of the offence.

It should be remembered that, although section 152(4) may dissuade some from becoming directors, its removal allows directors to deduct contributions from their employees' wages and pocket the money by way of increased remuneration, knowing that they cannot be touched under social security law. A responsible director would not wish or intend to act in such a way. The argument that the threat of social security law prevents or discourages such people from becoming directors is nonsense. If they act within the law, take money from their employees and pay it to the DHSS in the proper, lawful manner, they have nothing to fear from the section. The two arguments that the Government have advanced, and which they will doubtless advance again today in favour of the removal of the section are groundless.

I should make some further points. First, and most important, the withholding of deductions must be regarded as theft or fraud or both, whether from the point of view of the DHSS or, more important, from the point of view of the employee. The deductions are a personal contribution credited to a personal account where details of contributions are recorded and used for calculating the individual's benefit position, including his pension rights. Therefore, if an employer does not pass on money contributed by himself and the employee, it acts to the detriment of the employee's pension record in the national insurance system.

Secondly, the general trend of DHSS policy towards companies and large contributions is becoming increasingly lenient, while individual directors and claimants alike are harshly treated. The priorities that the DHSS seems to attach to chasing the small fry while letting the big fry go loose, are wrong. Since April 1983, the authority to write off large amounts of arrears in any individual case can be given without reference outside the local office of the DHSS. Therefore, the decision can be taken locally by local managers.

Thirdly, while it is true that most cases of section 152(4) action arise in cases of liquidated companies, they are the most difficult to deal with because of the time lapse involved in getting to see records. In future, with this part of the legislation gone, directors will have plenty of time to distribute the assets of the company knowing that they may not be touched, and may even be in a position to blackmail the DHSS into writing off arrears with the threat of putting the company into liquidation. It will be much more difficult when this power is no longer on the statute book, to ensure that the DHSS can follow up money that is owed to it by employers under the national insurance system.

Recently, some figures were reported to me. Will the Minister tell me whether they are correct? They show that over the past year about £1 million was collected due to section 152(4) action taken by the DHSS. In addition, at the time that the DHSS officers were told by the Minister to stop taking action, the solicitors' office had a backlog of cases worth some £4 million.

The decision by Ministers to remove this power from the statute book was bad enough, but even worse has been the fact that since they made the announcement of their intention to stop this power, Ministers have been instructing the DHSS to stop taking action under section 152(4). That is presumptive of the decision that might be taken by the House of Commons on the future of the legislation. The removal of that section of the Social Security Act is only now being considered in the Committee on the Insolvency Bill. It is also strange that a Government who constantly advise the populace to maintain and uphold the law have unilaterally, without legislative backing, taken a decision to stop taking action that they are advised to take by the law in particular cases.

Only a few days ago the Prime Minister spoke in the House about local authorities that found themselves in an extremely difficult position because of legislation passed by this Government. The Prime Minister berated them for failing to observe the law to the letter. It is strange and ironic that in those circumstances, in this social security legislation concerning individual contributions to national insurance, the Government have seen fit to take unilateral action not to implement the law.

A clear instruction has been given by Ministers to local DHSS offices. The instruction from the DHSS to its local offices states baldly:

"When the decision was announced LOs were told to stop proceedings on current cases immediately and it will now be necessary to inform Courts, liquidators, receivers and directors."

Yet section 152(4) of the 1975 Act is still on the statute book. The law still stands and the Government have a duty to implement it, but they are deliberately and openly failing to do so. It will be interesting to hear what justification the Minister has to offer for the Government's failure to uphold the law.

The next time the Prime Minister stands at the Dispatch Box telling us that the law is sacrosanct and must be obeyed, she should consider the way in which Ministers at the DHSS are behaving. She might also consider the way in which the DHSS spends enormous amounts of time, effort and resources chasing small individual claimants suspected of defrauding the system in some way. Any fraud is inexcusable, but the extravagance of the DHSS in pursing the small malefactor stands in strange contrast with the way in which it is not just failing to pursue the big fish—the large contributors who, as employers, fail to pass on the contributions of individuals—but in so doing is abrogating legislation passed by the House and still on the statute book.

I shall listen with great interest to the Minister's attempts to justify the actions of the DHSS.

2.17 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security (Mr. Ray Whitney): As this is the last debate in this series before we enter our all too short Whitsun recess, I should normally, on the last day of term, approach it full of good will and charity. The hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith), however, referred to previous exchanges between us on the subject of human rights in Turkey and I must tell him that his comments on the impact of ceasing to implement section 152(4) of the Social Security Act 1975 were even more misguided than his comments on human rights in Turkey. There are three issues at stake but, sadly, the hon. Gentleman seems not to have understood any of them.

First, there is the need to protect the workers and their national insurance payments. Secondly, there is the absolute need for the DHSS to take all proper steps to ensure that contributions due under the national insurance system are paid and collected. There is also a third duty and responsibility on the Government which the Opposition entirely fail to appreciate. It is to bring about the conditions in which businesses can go on creating more and more jobs in our economy. In the past two years, no fewer than 613,000 more jobs have been created. We intend to go on improving the situation so that businesses can continue to create jobs. That was one of the most remarkable lacunae in the hon. Gentleman's speech today.

The history of the matter—not surprisingly, given the fact that it has been raised by an Opposition Member—dates back many years, to the situation that obtained in 1928. The National Health Insurance Act 1928 was introduced at a time when employees would lose their benefit rights and suffer financial hardship if their employer failed to stamp their cards despite having made the necessary deductions from wages.

In consequence of that intolerable situation, section 18 of that Act was introduced as a deterrent to such employers. They would know that they might become personally liable for outstanding debts if the contributions were not paid at the right time.

The provisions survived in the National Insurance (Contributions) Regulations 1948. In 1949, however, an important change was made, that restored the position of workers in such firms. Regulation 21 of the National Insurance (Contributions) Amendment (No. 2) Provisional Regulations of 1949 provided for unpaid contributions in respect of employees to be deemed as paid when the employee himself was in no way at fault for their non-payment and recovery of the contributions from the employer was not possible or was likely to be delayed.

The first essential point, therefore, was guaranteed as far back as 1949. Whatever may go wrong with the company or the employers, and however the directors may fail to meet their responsibilities, the rights of the worker are protected by that regulation of 1949. However, the effect of the 1928 legislation making action possible against employers remained on the statute book, eventually re-appearing as section 152(4) of the Social Security Act 1975. It came under careful scrutiny during the proceedings of the Cork committee on insolvency law and practice, whose report concentrated the mind of the Government upon the whole subject of insolvency practice and provoked many strong and well-founded representations about the effect of the application of section 152(4) in cases involving insolvent companies.

It became clear that the original justification based upon the interest of the worker disappeared with the impact of the regulation made in 1949. Given that no discretion was allowed under the law, action was taken indiscriminately under section 152(4) against the directors, regardless of the effort or finance that they had put into a company in an attempt to keep it viable. The section did not require the Department to prove the directors' culpability in running the company's affairs and therefore was clearly contrary to natural justice. Even more seriously, its use discouraged "company doctors" from stepping in to help companies in trouble, for fear that they might become personally liable for any outstanding national insurance debts.

The use of the section led to the premature winding-up of companies by directors who were rightly apprehensive that if they failed to save the company their own personal assets would be put at risk. In other words, what began as a well-meaning provision, and had ceased to be really necessary, came to work against the interests of workers themselves. Directors were under heavy pressure not to persevere with their efforts to save a company. The section added to the discouraging prospects of anyone contemplating setting up his own firm.

Therefore, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services called for a review of the operation of section 152(4) and came to the conclusion that, as soon as the parliamentary opportunity arose, he would endeavour to have that section repealed.

Apart from the factors that I have outlined, which are powerful in themselves, it was clear that, in terms of recovery of national insurance contributions, the Department of Health and Social Security was out of line with other revenue departments—the Inland Revenue and the department responsible for VAT. The DHSS was the only one that had the special powers contained in section 152(4), which was particularly incongruous because the other revenue departments were frequently pursuing much larger debts than the DHSS, but did not have the same powers to do so. Particularly important was the disincentive effect that it had, which my right hon. Friend quite properly took into consideration.

There is another point that the hon. Gentleman did not mention; perhaps he is not aware of it. Recently, the Inland Revenue introduced provisions that will allow it to pursue companies that fail to pay their monthly pay-as-you-earn and national insurance contribution liability within a very short period of their due date without having to visit the employer to quantify arrears. The hon. Gentleman mentioned that the Inland Revenue has that power. Now there is no requirement for such a visit. There is no doubt that those provisions will prevent large debts accruing and ensure that employers keep up to date with their payments. That reinforces all our other powerful reasons for seeking to repeal section 152(4) in that, by definition, the new arrangements will prevent the accrual of large debts.

I emphasise that the real need for the repeal is that we must intensify our efforts to regenerate the spirit of entrepreneurism in Britain, precisely because we need those jobs. I understand the reluctance of Opposition parties to adopt that approach. The results of their efforts over the years are what we are living with today. The clear disincentive under which directors in particular labour was definitely harmful and deleterious.

The hon. Gentleman made a good deal of play of the fact that we had not yet completed the repeal of section 152(4). However, under the legislation that is now on the statute book, the Secretary of State is not obliged to take action, and the problem that the hon. Gentleman sought to pose does not arise. The hon. Gentleman suggested a figure of £4 million. My information is that the figure is about half that. However, we are talking not about a total waiving of the liabilities but about a removal of the special privileges—the incongruous position that section 152(4) gave to the DHSS in the recovery of those liabilities. The decision to change was taken on the basis that the employee was already well protected, and had been since 1949. There is an urgent need to ensure that citizens are encouraged to set up companies and to rescue companies that are in trouble. It is in all our interests that that degree of enterprise is encouraged and that the Government should continue to do all that they can to lighten the burden and remove the obstacles to such enterprise. The repeal of section 152(4) is a good example of the positive spirit of job creation in which the Government are approaching this matter.

It being half-past Two o'clock, the motion for the Adjournment of the House lapsed, without Question put.

Cystic Fibrosis (Prescription Charges)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn—[Mr. Durant.]

2.30 pm

Mr. Ivan Lawrence (Burton): I am grateful for my good fortune in drawing this debate in the ballot, especially as I understand that I nearly did not. I am asking the Government to say, five and a half years after I last asked them—they did not say this the last time—that the time has now come to add the disease of cystic fibrosis to the list of medical conditions from which its unfortunate sufferers are exempt from the need to pay prescription charges in the years between 16 and 65 when they again qualify for exemption.

I declare a substantial personal interest and a far less substantial interest. I have a 16-year-old daughter who suffers from cystic fibrosis. I would therefore receive the benefit of any financial relief that the Government may give in this matter for as long after the age of 16 as my daughter is dependent on me. Since she is blossoming, it may be that my financial gain will be exceedingly modest.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security (Mr. John Patten): I am glad to hear that she is blossoming.

Mr. Lawrence: I thank my hon. Friend.

I should like to pay tribute to the Cystic Fibrosis Research Trust — the organisation that represents sufferers of cystic fibrosis and their parents. Adorned by the patronage of Her Royal Highness Princess Alexandra, the Honourable Mrs. Angus Ogilvie, the charity is dedicated to raising money to fund medical and scientific research projects—there are currently more than 50—in hospitals and universities all over the country into cystic fibrosis, its causes, treatments and, I hope, one day its cure. The trust is dedicated also to providing comfort, education and morale-boosting support to those whose sufferings may be greater than their children's — the parents—for cystic fibrosis, being a genetic disease, is inherited by the children from their parents, who usually have no idea that they are carriers of the recessive gene. The charity is an example of how much wonderful work can be done for the disabled without state aid.

Cystic fibrosis is a condition in which mucus glands secret abnormal amounts of mucus. This principally affects two areas of the body. First, the digestive system is affected by the mucus clogging up the flow of digestive enzymes, the pancreas does not function properly, or sometimes not at all, proteins and fats are not properly digested, and the child does not flourish. The treatment for that malfunction is for the child to follow an expensive, high-protein diet and to swallow several capsules—my own daughter needs 10—of powdered pig's pancreas with every meal. That more or less does the work that the human pancreas would have done had it been working properly.

Secondly, the lungs are affected. The abnormally thick mucus builds up in the bronchial tubes and tends to seal in bacterial and viral infections which, if not shifted, cause progressive deterioration, leading to lung failure and death. The treatment is usually in the form of physiotherapy for 20 minutes at least twice a day. The trust knows of one case where 12 hours a day is spent using physiotherapy and other cases where young students spend a major part of their school or college holidays getting their lungs cleared to go back to study when term starts. In addition, the disease requires the sufferers to take antibiotics and often the use of such artificial aids as decoagulating atomisers and mist tents at night.

It is obvious that the burden of care and extra responsibility falling on parents to keep their cystic children alive and enjoying as near a normal life as possible is considerable and that to relieve many of them of the additional worry of ever-inflating regular prescription payments, even if reduced by the season ticket facility, would be a highly desirable aim which hon. Members on both sides of the House would support.

If cystic fibrosis is not diagnosed and treated early, it is a killer. A generation ago it usually killed children in the first year of their lives. Now, as a result of work done by doctors, scientists, nurses and parents, with the help and guidance of the Cystic Fibrosis Research Trust, three-quarters of the children reach adulthood in reasonably good health. There is, therefore, even more need now for the medication to be made available on prescription than when I last asked the Government to do so.

It is believed that one in 20 of the population is a carrier of the recessive gene, that there is one in 625 chances of carriers marrying and a one in four chance of two carriers producing a cystic fibrosis child. There are known to be between 5,500 and 6,000 sufferers from cystic fibrosis in the United Kingdom, of whom 1,200 are adults, a number which, happily, increases by about 200 a year moving into adulthood.

What would be the likely cost of exempting cystic fibrosis sufferers from the cost of prescriptions? When I spoke five years ago on this subject, the pre-payment season ticket for prescriptions, the season ticket which reduces the cost over a period, was £4·50 for six months and £8 for 12 months. For what was then thought to be a total of 1,000 adults, the cost to the Government would have been £8,000 a year.

That was all I was asking for then, but the Government said no. Now the season ticket is £11 for four months and £30·50 for 12, so with, say, as many as 1,500 adults, the cost, if everyone claimed, would be £1,500 multiplied by £30·50, which is £45,750, still peanuts in a spending budget of many thousands of millions of pounds.

Once it is conceded—as the Minister will, I am sure, concede—that the cost of this concession would not be great, the case for it becomes particularly strong. I am not asking the Government to change the rules for granting exemption so as to accommodate cystic fibrosis, but merely to apply the existing rules. The rules are that the condition shall be a permanent and clearly identifiable condition, requiring continual medication, in most cases by replacement therapy.

As it cannot be denied that cystic fibrosis is permanent, that it is clearly identifiable, that it requires continuous medication and that it involves replacement therapy, one is left wondering why it was not put on the list, together with diabetes, Addison's disease, epilepsy and illnesses of the thyroid, pituitary and adrenaline glands, in 1968. The answer must be that in the 1960s it was difficult to diagnose the disease. Few doctors knew anything about it. There was then insufficient knowledge of the disease, and when the exemption list was drawn up few children were surviving past 16 years of age. In short, there was no demand for the measure.

Why, then, was it not added to the list subsequently? My hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, Acton (Sir G. Young), now the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, gave the answer when, as Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security, he replied to my debate in October 1979. He explained that any decision had to be by agreement with the medical profession, and went on:

"Speaking as a layman I have a great deal of sympathy with the call to add cystic fibrosis to the list, and I would hope that the medical profession; if it were asked, would agree that it seems to satisfy the normal criteria for inclusion. . .

What I have had to ponder over is whether I should ask the doctors to add cystic fibrosis to the list and I have seriously considered doing so, as I personally think that if as many CF patients had survived to adulthood when the list was originally drawn up, that condition might well have been included."

We were grateful for my hon. Friend's sympathy and hope that it has been transmitted to his successor. It will be a good start if it has.

My hon. Friend the Member for Acton continued:

"If one advanced the boundary a little further to include cystic fibrosis, one would also in justice have to conduct a more general review of the whole scheme, and probably put in those who have phenylketonuria or coeliac disease. Therefore, one has to take a slightly broader view of the exemptions than my hon. Friend would like. . . If I seek to add this condition to the list, can I really defend not going further? Should not I consider whether the list of exempt conditions is the best way of helping the chronic sick, and is it right to go on trying to improve the list as my hon. Friend would wish in a rather piecemeal way, instead of seeking an alternative, within the resource constraints imposed by our present financial circumstances, to help more of the chronic sick?"

The question "Should the boundaries be advanced?" arises, but, as cystic fibrosis is the commonest inherited disease, making the concession for other worthy diseases would hardly break the bank. Besides, one hopes that the restricted list of drugs which my hon. Friend the Minister is helping to introduce will be added to as deserving drugs which fulfil the Government criteria of being necessary and not otherwise clinically available present themselves, so the process of adding to lists is not an unheard of breach of principle which the Government do not indulge in.

My hon. Friend the Member for Acton continued:

"If I have decided to make no approach to the representatives of the medical profession at present it is because I feel that we must first see whether it is possible to work out some fairer way within our present financial constraints to help all the chronic sick with the costs of the drugs they need than this present method of listing specified medical conditions."

That was a kind and well-motivated intention. My answer must be that the Government have had five and a half years in which to work out and have not been able to do so. I do not blame them for that; it might not be possible. No better way has been found. My hon. Friend the Member for Acton continued:

"some fairer way within our present financial constraints to help all the chronically sick with the costs of the drugs they need"

"If we conclude that there is no better way than the present, I will return again to the request of my hon. Friend that we should consider, with the representatives of the medical profession, whether the list is fully up to date and whether there is a case for adding cystic fibrosis to it and perhaps some other similar conditions."—[Official Report, 25 October 1979; Vol. 972, c. 688-91.]

The situation has got worse and the hardship grows. The Cystic Fibrosis Research Trust, thousands of parents, senior paediatric consultants from all over the country and many of my parliamentary colleagues whose names I listed on 25 October 1979 are asking the Government to make this change after consultation with the medical profession.

[Mr. Lawrence]

Will my hon. Friend now return to this matter, as promised by his predecessor, and show once again that Conservative Government care by granting this request?

2.45 pm

Mr. Laurie Pavitt (Brent, South): One of the most comprehensive cases that I have ever heard in the House has just been presented by the hon. and learned Member for Burton (Mr. Lawrence). I hope that this time he will be successful.

I remind the Minister of the history of this matter. When Kenneth Robinson reintroduced prescription charges in the 1960s, the Government undertook to exempt acute illnesses. That has proved impossible because of the problem of identifying them precisely. Even Parkinson's disease is not exempted. I think that the hon. and learned Gentleman's case should be considered entirely on its merits and not turned down on the thin-end-of-the-wedge argument. He has made the case for a single drug, and it should be possible for cystic fibrosis to be listed. That would still give a total of only nine on the list. Because, in five years' time, I may raise a similar issue on an Adjournment debate, that is no reason why the hon. and learned Gentleman's case should be put out of court now.

With the growth of the application of chemotherapy to a number of diseases where previously drugs were not available, and as we can precisely identify a drug used, if the patient cannot be exempted will the Minister consider exempting the drug? The dispensing chemist would have permission to exempt a script for that drug. If such a new approach could be discussed with the British Medical Association, that would solve many problems in addition to that so effectively raised by the hon. Gentleman.

2.47 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security (Mr. John Patten): I agree with the hon. Member for Brent, South (Mr. Pavitt) about the effectiveness of the speech of my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Burton (Mr. Lawrence). In recent months I have become used to being exposed to lengthy sessions of his forensic debating style and eloquence. Anyone who sat in the Chamber during our debates on fluoridation will remember that.

Characteristically again today, my hon. and learned Friend, with his usual clarity and force and his knowledge based on experience as someone with a 16-year-old daughter with cystic fibrosis, has made a case for having those who suffer from that disease exempted from prescription charges. He reminded the House about his speech on 25 October 1979, which I have read with great care, and the undertakings given by the then Under-Secretary, my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, Acton (Sir G. Young)—that veteran of Adjournment debates.

I want to go over the history of our attitude towards those suffering from this and similar conditions, and then to answer my hon. and learned Friend's specific questions. When prescription charges were reintroduced in 1968 by the Labour Government, a list of specified medical conditions was drawn up as a means of exempting some of the chronically sick. Such a scheme could operate only with the full co-operation of general medical practitioners. Their representatives made it clear that they could agree to exemption only for readily identifiable medical conditions that called automatically for continuous life-long medication—in most cases replacement therapy.

My hon. and learned Friend believes—and the hon. Member for Brent, South supported him—that a caring Government should update that list and add a number of other conditions. That the Government care is self-evident because we are treating so many more patients in the NHS, both in hospitals and in general practice. We are employing many more nurses and midwives who do excellent work that is much appreciated by us all. We are employing many more doctors and spending more money. I mentioned money last, but it is by no means the least important factor. It is probably one of the most important factors because of the possible cost of extending the list.

I can appreciate the profession's insistence that only conditions about whose diagnosis, lifelong character and need for medication there can be no doubt should be included. I think that that is common ground. The hon. Member for Brent, South made the important point that medical science is advancing so quickly that diseases often have be reassessed, and there are earlier and better diagnoses.

A doctor would not wish to enter into a debate with a patient about whether his condition was severe or permanent enough to attract exemption. Yet such arguments would be inevitable if ill-defined or complex diseases were added to the list or conditions were added that were so variable in their prognosis or treatment that exemption would not always be justified. The doctor would have to make, and defend, difficult judgments between two patients at different stages of the same disease, and that could put at risk the important relationship between doctor and patient: a relationship where we tread rather delicately and tend to leave as much as possible, quite properly, to the medical profession's ethical views.

Cystic fibrosis was not included in the exempt list drawn up in 1968, but it has been looked at again since then. Indeed, the list was kept under review—to use that classic Civil Service and, alas, ministerial terminology. As my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Burton knows, it was last discussed with representatives of the medical profession as long ago as 1976, when cystic fibrosis was one of the conditions considered. But the General Medical Services Committee, representing the medical profession, did not at that stage come to an agreement over the addition of any conditions to the list.

Had sufferers in the run-up to 1968 enjoyed the life expectancy that they now enjoy, the illness might have been included. I am the first to admit that that is a very strong possibility. My hon. and learned Friend spoke very calmly but movingly about the problems from which many of those with cystic fibrosis and those who care for them suffer. The thought of 12 hours of physiotherapy is indeed daunting. But thanks to the advances made in treating and caring for such people, it is estimated that there are well over 1,000 young people with cystic fibrosis who are aged over 16, which is the age of my hon. and learned Friend's daughter.

Because his parents came to see me, I know of one undergraduate aged 18 who has cystic fibrosis, and who is going up to Exeter college, Oxford, next autumn to read mathematics. I understnd the problems facing his parents and other young sufferers who go to college. I do not need to describe the condition, as my hon. and learned Friend has described it all too well. It is, to put it mildly, understandable that the condition should cause great distress to those who suffer from it and to their parents, relatives and friends who strive to help them for the very long hours that are sometimes necessary.

We all want to do what we can to help, but the case for free prescriptions for that group of people must be seen, I am afraid, within the wider context of the whole range of services provided by the NHS, the resources availabe, and the resources that exist to improve those services. I am well on the way to accepting my hon. and learned Friend's point that cystic fibrosis deserves very strong consideration. Alas, however, I am not at all convinced of the argument that it could be considered in isolation.

Mr. Lawrence rose——

Mr. Patten: Before my hon. and learned Friend cross-questions me on that point, I should like to explain my reasons. However, I can see that my hon. and learned Friend is anxious for me to give way now, so I give way to him.

Mr. Lawrence: Will my hon. Friend at least give an undertaking to refer this issue to the medical authorities that last considered it in 1976? It was last given consideration by the medical profession an appallingly long time ago.

Mr. Patten: I shall consider that point and directly answer it when I answer my hon. and learned Friend's main question at about 2.59 pm.

To exempt the cost of treating about 1,000 patients with cystic fibrosis would be relatively small, but there are many other groups of people who understandably believe that they too should be included in the list. One could argue that it is obvious that certain other conditions should be included, but it is not quite as easy as that. There are people who are suffering from Parkinson's disease, multiple sclerosis, coeliac disease, schizophrenia, glaucoma and Crohn's disease—happily a disease which is not suffered by very many people. Hypertension and disease of the heart are also conditions that last for a long time and are on the increase in this country. That applies to cancer, too, despite all the research efforts.

I am not trying to muddy the waters. I am only trying to point out to my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Burton and the hon. Member for Brent, South that there is a whole host of conditions for which a very good case could be made. That is where the rub comes. [Interruption.] I shall not criticise the hon. Member for Brent, South for shouting at me from a sedentary position after I allowed him to intervene earlier, but that is uncharacteristic of him.

That is not the end of the list of illnesses for which requests for free prescriptions are made; I could give more. If the list were extended, it would, in fairness, have to be extended substantially beyond cystic fibrosis. That is where the rub comes. That is where the cost comes. We shall have to examine again the cost of a significant extension of the list.

I defend the Government against any charge that theirs is an uncaring approach. We are concerned to ensure that nobody should be deterred from obtaining the necessary medication, whatever the illness. To the best of my knowledge, nobody is deterred from getting the necessary medication because of his or her illness. There are wide-ranging exemptions. Seventy-two per cent. of all prescriptions dispensed — rather than 72 per cent. of people receiving prescriptions — are free of charge. In recent years that number has increased. There are also pre-payment certificate arrangements to which my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Burton referred. The wide-ranging exemption from prescription charges, affecting 72 per cent. of all prescriptions, as well as the pre-payment arrangements mean that less than one quarter of all prescription items attract a charge when they are dispensed. Only 22 per cent. of all prescription charges are met by those who need prescriptions.

I must remind the House of the arrangements for the exemption of those on low incomes which can be claimed by anybody over the age of 16. This is a very important provision in both this and similar contexts. Even if somebody is not exempt on medical, financial or age grounds, the purpose of a pre-payment certificate can lead to considerable savings where frequent medication is required.

In conclusion, I wish to answer the questions asked by my hon. and learned Friend in his speech and when he intervened a few moments ago. I deal first with his second question—the reference of these issues to the medical profession. The co-operation and agreement of the medical profession will be needed to make this work, but the impetus for the reconsideration of this policy will have to come from within my Department, not from an independent medical body. I have not tried to hide behind a medical screen and to place the responsibility upon the medical profession. I have been honest with the House and have said that there are wide financial and policy implications.

Secondly, my hon. and learned Friend asked whether the Government would consider this matter further. He may not have noticed that on 11 March 1985 my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services said that he would reconsider this issue. He gave that undertaking following his statement to the House on 11 March about National Health Service charges when he answered a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Chislehurst (Mr. Sims). That re-examination is taking place within my Department, and we hope that it will be completed before the end of this year.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at one minute to Three o'clock, pursuant to the resolution of the House of 16 May.

ENERGY

Atomic Energy Authority Special Constabulary

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the Atomic Energy Authority special constabulary standing orders in the Official Report.

Mr. Goodlad: It is not customary for standing orders issued to police forces to be published and I consider that it would not be prudent to make an exception in this case.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will state the annual cost of the Atomic Energy Authority special constabulary for each year since 1976.

Mr. Goodlad: The total expenditure on the Atomic Energy Authority constabulary since 1976 is as follows:

Date	£ million
1977-78	2·5
1978-79	2·8
1979-80	4·4
1980-81	6·2
1981-82	6·9
1982-83	7·7
1983-84	8·8
1984-85	*9·6

* Estimate.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many constables are currently employed under the Atomic Energy Authority (Special Constables) Act 1976.

Mr. Goodlad: The strength of the Atomic Energy Authority constabulary as at 1 April 1985 was 654. Officers of the Atomic Energy Authority constabulary are not employed under the Atomic Energy Authority (Special Constables) Act 1976. The constabulary exists by virtue of the Special Constables Act 1923 as applied by the Atomic Energy Authority Act 1954.

Atomic Energy Authority (Privatisation)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he intends privatising the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: As I told the House on 11 February in response to a question from the hon. Member for Midlothian (Mr. Eadie) at column 31, there are no plans to privatise the Atomic Energy Authority.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Written and Oral Questions

Mr. Deakins asked the Lord Privy Seal what is the latest estimate of the cost of answering written and oral questions, respectively; and what is the cost upper limit for providing answers in each category.

Mr. Biffen: The costs of individual questions vary considerably, but the current average cost is estimated at £41 for written answers and £67 for oral answers. Ministers may decline to give a substantive reply to a parliamentary question if they consider that the cost of providing that reply would be disproportionate to its value to Parliament and public. An advisory figure of £200 was introduced in 1982 as the level at which Ministers might consider whether the expense of a full reply was justified. It is for individual Ministers to decide particular cases; there is no upper level of cost which automatically disqualifies a question from answer.

Research Assistants (Passes)

Mr. Tracey asked the Lord Privy Seal how many temporary research assistant passes are at present issued to (a) United Kingdom nationals, (b) United States nationals and (c) other nationals.

Mr. Biffen: Of the 269 temporary research assistants' photo-identity passes on issue on 1 May 1985, 169 were issued to United Kingdom nationals, 91 to United States citizens and nine to other nationals.

Mr. Tracey asked the Lord Privy Seal how many temporary research assistant passes have been issued to (a) United Kingdom nationals, (b) United States nationals and (c) other nationals, since 1 May 1984.

Mr. Biffen: This information is not available, except at disproportionate cost.

Secretaries (Passes)

Mr. Tracey asked the Lord Privy Seal how many hon. Members' secretarial passes are at present issued to (a) United Kingdom nationals, (b) United States nationals and (c) other nationals.

Mr. Biffen: A total of 636 secretaries' photo-identity passes were on issue on 1 May 1985. Of these, 562 were permanent passes and all these were held by United Kingdom nationals. Of the remaining 74, who were issued with temporary passes, 58 were United Kingdom nationals, 11 were United States citizens and five were other nationals.

Mr. Tracey asked the Lord Privy Seal how many hon. Members' secretarial passes have been issued to (a) United Kingdom nationals, (b) United States nationals and (c) other nationals since 1 May 1984.

Mr. Biffen: This information is not available, except at disproportionate cost.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Asbestos

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any plans for removing asbestos from Northern Ireland Housing Executive property where it is discovered.

Mr. Chris Patten: This is a matter for the chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, who has advised me that, when improvement work is to be carried out to Executive dwellings, consideration is given as appropriate to the removal of any materials containing asbestos or their encapsulation (protection with a sheet of asbestos-free board or treatment with a suitable sealer). In addition to this general policy, asbestos in solid fuel room heaters is removed when planned maintenance is carried out and a programme for the replacement of all electric warm-air units containing asbestos is being drawn up.

Publications (Subsidisation)

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the publications subsidised from the public funds of Northern Ireland Departments, other public bodies and the Arts Council of Northern Ireland, respectively.

Dr. Boyson: This information is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Security

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) whether all the recommendations in regard to staffing levels and security measures outlined in the Baker report have been met;

(2) what are the numbers of maximum security prisoners in each prison in Northern Ireland; and how the staffing levels to deal with them compare with the staffing levels required for similar prisoners in Great Britain;

(3) what are the staffing requirements for each prison including the new prison in Northern Ireland; and what are the actual staffing levels for prison staff in each grade;

(4) what is the design capacity by modern standards for each prison in Northern Ireland, including the new prison; and what are the actual numbers in each prison at the present time;

(5) If he will publish in the Official Report a table to show the following information, for each year since 1 January 1982: (a) the value of goods produced by each prison workshop in each Northern Ireland prison, (b) the value of goods produced on a per capita basis in each case, (c) the average number of hours worked by each prisoner in each prison per week and the average for the United Kingdom as a whole, (d) the number of prisoners who did not work in each year in each prison in Northern Ireland and (e) the average number of prisoners who are in each prison in Northern Ireland;

(6) what have been the average hours worked in each week in each prison in Northern Ireland by civilian teachers and instructors in each of the years or financial years 1982 to date;

(7) how many civilians are employed as teachers and instructors at each prison in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Scott: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Employment and Trade Union Legislation

Mrs. Roe asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will take steps to introduce in Northern Ireland the provisions of the Employment Act 1982 and the Trade Union Act 1984.

Mr. Hurd: Following consultations with interested bodies, it is my intention to bring forward a proposal for legislation in Northern Ireland which will reflect the changes introduced in Great Britain by the Employment Act 1982. The application to Northern Ireland of the provisions of the Trade Union Act 1984 will be addressed in further discussions with interested bodies which will now get underway.

PRIME MINISTER

Former Prime Ministers (Pensions)

Mr. Rooker asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement outlining how the pension payable to former Prime Ministers is funded, detailing what part contributions play, how it takes account of length of service and cost of living changes and if it is based on salary as approved by the House.

The Prime Minister: Former Prime Ministers are awarded immediate non-contributory pensions, on leaving office, under section 26 of the Parliamentary and other Pensions Act 1972. Irrespective of the length of service, the amount of pension is 15/40ths of the Prime Minister's full salary as approved by both Houses of Parliament. The pensions are not funded in advance, but are paid directly out of the Consolidated Fund. They are increased annually in line with increases in the cost of living but may not exceed the amount that would be paid to the current Prime Minister if he or she were to leave office.

On assuming office, Prime Ministers cease to belong to the parliamentary pension scheme. They lose all the pension rights accrued to date, and the contributions they have paid become refundable with interest, and are repaid to them when they leave office.

The pensions of former Prime Ministers are withheld at any time while they draw a salary from public funds other than that paid to them as Members of Parliament.

EMPLOYMENT

Coppermill Lane Waterworks

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many visits have been made by the Health and Safety Executive each year since 1978 to the Coppermill lane waterworks of the Thames water authority.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Health and Safety Executive inspectors have visited the site on the following number of occasions each year since 1978.

	Visits
1978	1
1979	3
1980	3
1981	5

Hazardous Chemicals

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has recently received from the chairman of the Health and Safety Commission as to the adequacy of the staff of the Health and Safety Executive to undertake inspection work related to the storage of hazardous chemicals.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: None.

Construction Industry (West Midlands)

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give a quarterly breakdown of the number of workers employed in the construction industry in the west midlands for each quarter since 1979.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is as follows:

Employees in Employment

Earnings (Wales)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many workers in Wales now earn less than the Council of Europe's decency threshold.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The new earnings survey indicates that in April 1984 about 30 per cent. of full-time adult employees in Wales had gross weekly earnings for a full week of less than £108·3, the latter figures corresponding to 68 per cent. of the national average for all full-time adult employees. Although an advisory committee of the Council of Europe has suggested the figure of 68 per cent. of national full-time adult average earnings as significant in considering low pay, the figure has not been accepted or recognised by the United Kingdom or any other European country.

Wages Councils

Mr. Evans asked the Secretary of State for Employment if, pursuant to his answer of 7 May, Official Report, column 609, he will publish the evidence upon which he based his statement that in certain instances it can be demonstrated that wages councils keep down rather than put up wages.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I shall write to the hon. Member.

ILO Convention 26

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Employment what representations the International Labour Organisation has made to his Department concerning the Government's proposed de-ratification of International Labour Organisation Convention 26.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The International Labour Organisation has not made representations to this Department concerning the proposal to de-ratify International Labour Convention 26.

Information Technology Centres

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many information technology centres have earned revenue in excess of £10,000 during their third year of operation.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 26 April 1985, c. 589]: Final accounts from all sponsors are not now expected to be available until June or July, but current information shows that two information technology centres earned revenue in excess of £10,000 in their third year of operation. The large majority of centres have not yet completed their third year of operation.

The rules relating to revenue generation by information technology centres have recently been relaxed and this should provide a greater incentive for centres to generate income.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Swansea Prison

Mr. Williams asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will respond to the request from the hon. Member for Swansea, West for a meeting to discuss deaths at Swansea prison.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend has written today to the hon. Member.

Mrs. Nasdeen Shahid Ali

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now reconsider the deportation case of Mrs. Nasdeen Shahid Ali in view of the medical report received about her.

Mr. Waddington: Mrs. Nasdeen Shahid Ali's case has been fully considered in the light of medical reports on her condition,' on the basis of which I am advised that there is no reason to believe that her health would be at risk if she returned to Pakistan.

First Offences (Imprisonment)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each year since 1970 the number of (a) women and (b) men who have been sent to prison for first offences in respect of (i) shoplifting and (ii) domestic violence, respectively.

Mr. Mellor: The information on sentencing by type of offence published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales" (Chapter 7 of the issue of 1983, Cmnd. 9349, and Supplementary Tables, Vol. 1, Tables S1.1(A)-(E) — magistrates' courts and Vol. 2, Tables S2.1(A)-(E) — the Crown Court) does not distinguish first offenders from other offenders; nor are offences of domestic violence distinguishable from other offences of violence against the person. The results of a special study on the sentencing of first offenders in 1977 were published in tables 10.4 to 10.6 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1978" (Cmnd. 7670); corresponding information for other years could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Lancashire Police Force

Mr. Stan Thorne asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the establishment of the Lancashire police force on 28 February; what was the actual strength on the same date; to what factors he attributes the difference in the two figures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Shaw: The authorised establishment of the Lancashire constabulary is 3,158, an increase of 40 since May 1979. The strength of the force was 3,067 on 28 February 1985. Police manpower levels fluctuate from month to month because of different recruiting and wastage patterns, seasonal changes and other local reasons.

Metropolitan Police (Road Accidents)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many road accidents involving Metropolitan police vehicles on emergency calls have occurred in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The precise information requested is not readily available. In a very substantial mileage covered annually by Metropolitan police vehicles (amounting to some 50 million miles in 1984) the following are the numbers of accidents involving police vehicles responding, to an emergency call or pursuing a suspect vehicle where it was considered that the driving of the police vehicle was in some measure responsible for the accident.

	Answering emergency call	Pursuing suspect vehicle otherwise than in response to an emergency call	Total
1984	312	57	369

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have (a) been killed or (b) been injured as a result of road accidents involving Metropolitan police vehicles on emergency calls in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The number of people killed as a result of road accidents involving Metropolitan police vehicles engaged on emergency calls or pursuing suspect vehicles is as follows:

	Answering emergency calls	Pursuing suspect vehicles otherwise than in response to an emergency call	Total
1982	4	4	8
1984	0	5	5

The precise information requested is not readily available. The following figures relate to the number of accidents involving Metropolitan police vehicles where injury occurred:

	Answering emergency calls	Pursuing suspect vehicles otherwise than in response to an emergency call	Total
1984	36	7	43

London Football League Clubs (Police Services)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state the amounts due from each of the London Football League clubs to the Metropolitan police for police services provided for the seasons 1981-82, 1982-83, 1983-84 and 1984-85 to date.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that the information requested is as follows:

Amounts owed to the Metropolitan police as at 3 May 1985 for policing services during the seasons 1983-84 and 1984-85

Arsenal	—	4,135·03
Brentford	—	13,921·32
Charlton	—	2,372·30
Chelsea	—	19,022·90
Crystal Palace	21,911·79	34,931·55
Fulham	—	17,301·35
Millwall	—	7,862·82
Orient	—	4,002·98
Queens Park Rangers	—	3,583·23
Tottenham Hotspur	—	11,733·66
West Ham United	—	—
Wimbledon	—	2,488·68

No money is owed to the Metropolitan police for policing at football matches in the two proceeding seasons.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department who is responsible for determining the level of policing needed inside London Football League clubs; what criteria are applied; what discussions normally take place between the Metropolitan police and the individual clubs on the level of policing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The safety certificates issued by the GLC in respect of grounds designated under the Safety of Sports Ground Act 1975, require the holder of the certificate to "seek to arrange for and use its best endeavours to secure, at the holder's expense, the attendance at the stadium of the appropriate number of officers of the Metropolitan Police force, determined by agreement between the holder and the police".

For the 1984-85 season the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis has instructed senior officers to seek agreement with clubs on the number of police required both for normal games and for those likely to present special problems; but the certificates specify that in the absence of such agreement it is the decision of the commissioner that prevails. Where a ground is not designated under the Act, such agreement is sought with the club on an informal basis.

Holloway Prison

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many places there are in C1 wing of Holloway prison; and what has been the average monthly occupancy rate since January 1984.

Mr. Mellor: C1 unit, Holloway prison, holds a maximum of 46 inmates. The average monthly occupancy rate since January 1984 has been as follows:

	Average Numbers
January	31
February	30
March	28

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the total occupation and capacity of Holloway prison for each year since 1978 and for each month of 1985.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is as follows:

Refugees

Mr. Ernie Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when considering applications for indefinite leave to remain in the United Kingdom, which Government Departments are consulted.

Mr. Waddington: No routine inquiries of other Government Departments are made in connection with applications for indefinite leave to remain but other Departments are consulted if it appears they may have information which is relevant to a decision under the Immigration Rules in a particular case.

Mr. Ernie Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what circumstances refugees recognised in terms of the United Nations Convention on Refugees 1951 may be deported from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waddington: I would refer the hon. Member to articles 32 and 33 of the convention.

Mr. Ernie Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many refugees have been deported from the United Kingdom in each of the last 10 years; and on what grounds.

Mr. Waddington: I am not aware of any case in this period in which a person granted recognition as a refugee in the United Kingdom has subsequently been deported.

Mr. Ernie Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average period of time taken to deal with applications by refugees for indefinite leave to remain in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waddington: This information is not readily available, but I am arranging for it to be obtained, and I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Deportation

Mr. Ernie Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many deportation orders have been served during each of the last 10 years on the grounds of national security; and how many have been carried out in each of these years.

Mr. Waddington: Two orders were served and enforced in 1977 and six served and enforced in 1984 on these grounds.

Mr. Ernie Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many aliens with indefinite leave to remain in the United Kingdom have been deported during each of the last 10 years; and on what grounds.

Mr. Waddington: The information requested is not available. Such persons could only be deported under sections 3(5)(b), 3(5)(c) and 3(6) of the Immigration Act 1971. The total numbers of persons so deported in each year from 1973 to 1983 were published in table 20 of "Control of Immigration: Statistics, United Kingdom, 1983" (Cmnd. 9246); a large proportion of these would not have had indefinite leave to remain in the United Kingdom.

British Nationality

Mr. Ernie Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons have been deprived of British nationality within the last 10 years; and on what grounds.

Mr. Waddington: None.

Mr. Ernie Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the procedure for depriving persons of British nationality.

Mr. Waddington: The statutory procedure for deprivation of citizenship is laid down in section 40 of the British Nationality Act 1981.

Travel Documents

Mr. Ernie Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average period of time taken to deal with applications for the renewal of travel documents; and for what period travel documents are normally renewed.

Mr. Waddington: At present straightforward applications for the issue and renewal of travel documents are being delat with in about four weeks. Travel documents are normally renewed in line with the holder's leave to enter or remain in the United Kingdom. For those with indefinite leave to remain documents are issued with five years' validity to refugees and with two years' validity to others.

Sunday Trading

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his Department has carried out or sponsored any research into the economic consequences for Wales of the introduction of Sunday trading.

Mr. Mellor: The Institute for Fiscal Studies carried out an economic review of the likely effects of possible changes in the permitted trading hours of shops in England, Scotland and Wales which has been published as an appendix to the report of the Auld committee: "Late Night and Sunday Opening" (Cmnd. 9376). Specific research has not been sponsored separately for Wales alone.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his latest estimate of the implications for employment in Wales of the introduction of Sunday trading.

Mr. Mellor: I have no reason to suppose that the predictions of the Institute for Fiscal Studies for England and Wales as a whole should not apply other than in a proportionate manner to Wales.

Mr. Salah Najem

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what date after the shooting on 17 April 1984 Mr. Salah Najem was escorted from the Libyan People's Bureau under police supervision; on what date he is believed to have entered it; whether he is currently resident in the United Kingdom; and in what permitted capacity.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Great Ape (Experimentation)

Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what species of great ape are or have been used for the purpose of experimentation in the United Kingdom at any time during the past three years; and for what purpose.

Mr. Mellor [pursuant to his reply, 2 April 1985, c. 570]: The information collected centrally does not distinguish between types of primate. I understand, however, that no species of great ape—defined as a chimpanzee, a gorilla or an orang-utan—is currently in use in experimental work at any of the establishments which are the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend, and that no experiments involving the use of such species are known to us to have been conducted at such establishments at any time during the past three years.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Vosper Shiprepairers Ltd.

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made with regard to the proposed sale of Vosper Shiprepairers Ltd. of Southampton; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Vosper Shiprepairers is currently formalising a lease for an important part of its site. The company cannot be sold until this negotiation has been completed. Nevertheless, British Shipbuilders is in discussion with potential purchasers of the company and hopes to be able to complete the sale before too long.

Support for Software Products Scheme

Mr. McCusker asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much has been paid out in grants each year from the support for software products scheme; and what was the take-up in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Butcher: The information is as follows:

(a) From inception in 1972 to the relaunch of the scheme in 1982, £4·1 million was paid in grants. A further breakdown of the figures for this period would entail disproportionate costs.

Since the relaunch in 1982, figures are as follows:

1983-84	2,985,106
1984-85	8,249,004

* 1 to 30 April.

(b) Take-up of the scheme in Northern Ireland has been minimal with only one application received and one grant awarded. However, the Province's own scheme of assistance in research and development, set up by the Industrial Development Board and the local enterprise development unit, which operates along similar lines has had a substantial take up by the companies in the software sector.

Manufactured Imports

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the United Kingdom share of imports of manufactures into the European Economic Community 10 in each year since 1962 and for the latest 12 months or part year for which figures are available.

Mr. Channon: The annual figures are in the table. It is estimated that the share in the period January to September 1984 was about 7½ per cent.

Trade Statistics

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for European Economic Community countries and non-European Economic Community countries, United Kingdom imports as a percentage of United Kingdom manufacturing less exports for industrial headings 35, 3510.1, 3510.2, 353, 3634; 43, 431, 432, 433, 434, 435, 436, 438, 439, 45 less 451, 452, 453; 424, 481, 4811, 4831, 4833, 4954, 3452, 3453, 3454, 373, 4116, 346 and 415 for the years 1975, 1979 and the latest 12 months for which figures are available in each case.

Mr. Channon: The information could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for standard industrial category headings 3137, 3161, 3165, 3212, 324, 3244, 3245, 3254, 3255, 326, 327, 3281, 3283, 3288, 342 and 3432 the ratio of imports to home demand in 1975 and at the latest available date for the European Economic Community and the non-European Economic Community countries together with the relevant import figures.

Mr. Channon: The information could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for standard industrial category headings 2235, 224, 2245·2, 2471, 2479, 2489, 251, 2512, 2514, 2515, 2516, 2563, 2568, 2569, 259, 2591 and 2599 the ratio of imports to home demand in 1975 and at the latest available date for the European Economic Community and the non-European Economic Community countries together with the relevant import figures.

Mr. Channon: The information could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Telecommunications Advisory Committee (Scotland)

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the membership of the Advisory Committee for Scotland appointed by him under section 54 of the Telecommunications Act 1984.

Mr. Fletcher: The following people are currently members of the Advisory Committee on Telecommunications for Scotland.

Mr. G. C. C. Duncan—chairman
Mr. W. J. Brown
Mr. J. G. Watson
Mrs. P. M. N. Stewart
Mr. J. D. M. Hardie
Mrs. I. E. McGowran
Mr. W. J. Humphries
Mr. T. J. Ransley
Mr. D. G. Walker
Rev. A. S. Hutchison
Mr. E. Young
Mr. G. J. Richards
Dr. C. M. McLean
Mr. A. J. Paterson
Mrs. J. Forbes-Sempill

Steel Industry

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the number of employees in the steel industry at the latest date for which statistics are available and one, three, five and seven years earlier.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The following is the information requested:

Total Labour Force engaged on ECSC Steel Activities in United Kingdom

West Midlands (Inward Investment)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what emphasis he intends to place on the West Midlands region during the course of the campaign which he is initiating to encourage foreign firms to establish themselves in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Trippier: The "Britain Means Business" (BMB) campaign will promote overseas a single, united image of the whole of the United Kingdom with no geographical bias. The promotional efforts of the relevant public sector inward investment bodies and the private sector will be co-ordinated to achieve maximum success and benefit for the United Kingdom.

The west midlands, in common with all the other areas of the United Kingdom, has the opportunity to play a full and active part in the campaign's activities. On their behalf the West Midlands Industrial Development Association (WMIDA) is acting as co-sponsor at two events in the United States as well as being involved in other BMB activities.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list, region by region, the number of private enterprises which are contributing towards the sponsorship of the campaign which he is initiating to encourage foreign businesses to establish themselves in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Trippier: Fifteen private enterprises so far have agreed to contribute in cash or in kind to the "Britain Means Business" campaign. Most of these enterprises are in the banking or accountancy sectors and are based in London, although many have operational branches throughout Britain. Region by region, of the 15 enterprises, 13 are based in the south east of England, one in the west midlands and one in Scotland.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he intends to take any steps to seek to encourage his counterpart in the Japanese Government to persuade private companies in his country to consider establishing themselves in the west midlands.

Mr. Trippier: The Secretary of State made clear to Japanese Government and industry during his recent visit to Japan that the Government welcome Japanese companies whose investment will be of net benefit to the United Kingdom economy. The precise locations of those investments within the United Kingdom are for the companies themselves to decide.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what specific assistance he intends to give to the West Midlands Industrial Development Association to promote further investments and new industries in the West Midlands Region.

Mr. Trippier: For the period April 1985 to March 1986, up to £130,000 of grant aid will be made available to the West Midlands Industrial Development Association, towards promotional activities directed to attracting new industry, especially from overseas, to the west midlands.

Nuclear Reactor (Chile)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assistance he is giving to United Kingdom companies bidding for contracts for the Lo Aquerre reactor in Chile.

Mr. Channon: Assistance from my Department is available in the normal way in support of any British bids to refurbish the Lo Aquerre research reactor. Any transfer of nuclear materials to Chile would have to comply with the Government's general policy on the export of nuclear material as set out by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in her reply to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) on 28 January at columns 24-5.

Scott Lithgow

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether, in negotiations over the sale of Scott Lithgow, Trafalgar House was asked to give any indication of its employment projections for the years 1985, 1986, 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Butcher: At the time of sale Trafalgar House indicated that it expected employment to be about 2,000 initially, with subsequent levels depending on its ability to secure new orders.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consultations took place between his Department and Trafalgar House over the decision by Trafalgar House to seek several hundred redundancies at the Scott Lithgow yard.

Mr. Butcher: None.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether in his negotiations for the sale of Scott Lithgow, Trafalgar House was asked for a commitment to maintain manning levels at the yard.

Mr. Butcher: Trafalgar House was not asked for a commitment to maintain manning levels at the yard. When we returned the yard to the private sector we were giving it a second chance, not guaranteeing its future.

Official Receiver (Private Sector Accountants)

Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which firms of accountants have been sent an indication that his Department will accept private sector accountants on secondment for work under the Official Receiver.

Mr. Fletcher: Following a decision to apply to the insolvency service the practice of exchanges between private and public sector, a wide range of accountancy firms have been approached.

General Electric Company

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if a regional development grant and/or regional selective assistance was paid to the General Electric Company towards its recent £9 million investment programme.

Mr. Trippier: Information on regional development grants payments of £25,000 and over and regional selective assistance offers of £5,000 and over is published quarterly in British Business. It is not the usual practice, for reasons of commercial confidentiality, to give any further information about assistance to particular companies.

British Shipbuilders

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the establishments and yards divested by British Shipbuilders since 1979, the nature of the business undertaken in each of the facilities divested and the names of the firms acquiring those facilities.

Mr. Butcher: The following companies have been sold by British Shipbuilders since 1979:

Establishment	Nature of Business	Purchaser
R. Harris and Sons Ltd.	Builders	C. H. Pearce and Sons Ltd.
Henry Robb (LPG) Ltd.	Liquid Petroleum Gas Distributors	John Mitchell for Oils Ltd.
Clark and Standfield Ltd.	Dry Dock Designers and Consultants	Newshott Holdings Ltd.
Thames Services (Felixstowe) Ltd.	Shiprepairers	Union Cold Storage
Blackwall Engineering Ltd.	Engineers	Energy and Marine Industries Ltd.
Tyne Shiprepair Ltd.	Shiprepairers	Former Management
V. O. Offshore Ltd.	Designers and Consultants	John Brown Engineers and Constructors
Scott Lithgow Ltd.	Rig Builders	Trafalgar House PLC
Wallsend Slipway Engineers Ltd.	Engineers	Marske Machine Co. Ltd.
K. and L. Marine Equipment Ltd.	Engineers	Energy and Marine Industries Ltd.
Falmouth Shiprepair Ltd.	Shiprepairers	Cuehold Ltd.
Barclay Curle Ltd.	Marine Engineers	Mr. J. Wilson and Langham Industries Ltd.
Sunderland Forge Ltd.	Engineers	Energy and Marine Industries Ltd.
Brooke Marine Ltd.	Warship-builders	Former Management

In addition the following facilities were sold shortly after closure and were thereafter re-opened by the purchasers:

Establishment	Nature of Business	Purchaser
Robb Caledon (Dundee) Ltd.	Shipbuilders	Kestrel Marine Ltd.
Grangemouth Dockyard Ltd.	Shiprepairers	Former Management
Wolsingham Steel Ltd.	Iron Founders	Langham Industries Ltd.

There have also been numerous sales and leases of land following the closure of yards and other establishments. Some of these yards are now again used for industrial purposes and are providing employment.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in the preparation for the non-proliferation treaty review conference since his answer to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East (Mr. Strang), 19 March, Official Report, column 438.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 8 May at column 428.

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to discuss with Commonwealth countries the issues to be raised in the 1985 review conference of the non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Luce: We are keeping in touch with several Commonwealth countries, which are parties to the non-proliferation treaty, about the forthcoming review conference. We are also urging those members of the Commonwealth which are not parties to adhere to the treaty. In the past year, five have done so.

Sellafield

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the United Kingdom delegation to the non-proliferation treaty review conference in Geneva in September will be raising the matter of the current non-application of full physical inspection nuclear safeguards at the Windscale reprocessing plant at Sellafield.

Mr. Luce: We do not intend to raise this matter at the review conference. Although we have voluntarily offered to submit United Kingdom installations to International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards, our signature of the non-proliferation treaty, as a nuclear weapon state, did not require us to do so.

Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy towards the potential contribution of the advanced verification techniques set out in the threshold test ban treaty and the peaceful nuclear explosion treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics towards the establishment of verification measures for a comprehensive test ban treaty.

Mr. Luce: Any consideration of how to verify a comprehensive test ban would naturally have to take account of the provisions of existing treaties on nuclear testing. The problems involved in the verification of a total ban on nuclear testing, however, are more difficult than in the case of the limited constraints which currently exist.

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what factors prevent an immediate resumption of negotiations for a comprehensive test ban treaty.

Mr. Luce: It would be premature to resume negotiations while key technical problems, including those of verification and compliance, remain unresolved. We believe these should be discussed by the Geneva conference on disarmament and are working actively to get a nuclear test ban committee established there. We also play a full part in the work of the scientific experts group set up by the conference.

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what degree of precision Her Majesty's Government require in the scientific monitoring of underground nuclear tests as a prerequisite for agreeing to a comprehensive test ban treaty.

Mr. Luce: Considerable improvements in scientific monitoring techniques are required as a first step towards precluding, under a comprehensive test ban regime, a clandestine continuation of nuclear testing at levels sufficient to confer a significant military advantage. This is one of the verification issues which, along with other Western delegations, we have proposed should be the subject of substantive examination by the Geneva conference on disarmament, with a view to negotiation of a treaty.

El Salvador (Officer Training Facilities)

Mr. Terry Fields asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will cancel discussions with the El Salvadorean Government regarding training facilities for El Salvadorean officers.

Mr. Renton: No.

Gibraltar

Mr. Stanbrook asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if any progress has been made in discussions with the Spanish Government on any outstanding issue dependent upon further British concessions on the issue of sovereignty over Gibraltar.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: There have been useful discussions with Spain on a number of matters relating to Gibraltar. These have not affected our position on sovereignty: we stand by the commitments in the preamble to the 1969 Gibraltar constitution.

North Atlantic Assembly (Delegation)

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list in the Official Report the United Kingdom parliamentary delegation to the North Atlantic Assembly.

Mr. Rifkind: The following represent the United Kingdom at the North Atlantic Assembly:

Sir Patrick Wall MP (Leader)
Mr. Robert Banks MP
Mr. Julian Critchley MP
Sir Philip Goodhart MP
Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith MP
Mr. Robert McCrindle MP
Sir Julian Ridsdale MP
Mr. Peter Viggers MP
Sir Peter Emery MP
Earl of Kimberley
Earl de la Warr
Dr. David Clark MP
Mr. Patrick Duffy MP
Mr. Bruce George MP
Mr. Kevin McNamara MP
Lord Ardwick
The right hon. Lord Mayhew
Mr. John Cartwright MP

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Ethiopia and Sudan (Food Aid)

Mr. Bowen Wells asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs by what means he monitors how much cereal and other foodstuffs are delivered by the European Economic Community as a result of the decision taken at the Dublin summit.

Mr. Raison: The Commission compiles shipment plans for Community and member states' food aid in preparation for coordination meetings between the Commission and member states. There have been two such meetings since the Dublin Council, and a third will be held shortly. Between these meetings my staff are in regular contact with Commission officials over the rate of delivery of Community food aid. Statistics are also included in the Food and Agriculture Organisation's monthly reports of food aid deliveries to countries affected by famine.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Coal Industry Dispute (Prosecutions)

34. Mr. Maclennan asked the Attorney-General how many prosecutions arising from the miners' strike were awaiting trial on 1 May 1985.

The Attorney-General: Statistics of this nature supplied during the course of the dispute were compiled by the national reporting centre, which has now closed down. I am therefore unable to say exactly how many cases arising from the miners' strike were awaiting trial on 1 May 1985. The available figures, although not covering all courts, continue to show steady progress in the disposal of these cases.

ENVIRONMENT

Smith Houses

Miss Boothroyd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received about Smith houses since July 1984; and from whom such representations have been received.

Sir George Young: Since July 1984 my Department has received representations concerning Smith houses from six members of Parliament, two local authorities and nine home owners.

Faulty Sewers (Pollution)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information is available to him about the proportion of sewage leaking through faulty sewers; what are the risks from such leakage of pollution of water sources; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macfarlane: Flow volumes in sewers, which include rain water run-off, are not generally recorded and therefore no estimate of leakage from sewers can be made. As a rule, water sources are located well away from sewers as a precaution against contamination. Further protection is given by disinfection at water treatment works where water enters the public supply system, and by regular sampling and analysis. These precautions are generally effective and sewage contamination incidents are very rare.

Lesnes Abbey Site

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment which authority will have responsibility for the Lesnes Abbey site and surrounding parkland following the abolition of the Greater London council.

Mr. Macfarlane: Subject to the views of Parliament, my right hon. Friend proposes that the site of Lesnes Abbey will be transferred by order to the ownership of the London borough of Bexley on the abolition of the Greater London council.

Multi-occupied Dwellings

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last reviewed the safety and inspection procedures in respect of hostels, boarding, lodging or guest homes in multiple occupation; and when the next review is due.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend continues to review local authorities' powers in the light of representations which he receives. My Department is carrying out research which involves examining the condition of the HMO stock and local authorities' use of the existing legislation. My right hon. Friend wishes to see the outcome of this research before deciding whether further measures are necessary.

Listed Buildings

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation imposing a duty on inspectors responsible for the listing of buildings to notify owners of intended visits and of the possibility that the property may be listed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macfarlane: No. Unfortunately, there is a real danger that some owners would take advantage of prior notification to carry out works prejudicial to the special interest of a listable building. My Department takes all reasonable steps to explain to owners the implications of listing after a building has been added to the statutory list. Field workers carry identity cards to show to owners or occupiers in cases where internal inspection is necessary, and have been briefed to explain the nature of the survey as necessary.

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to provide an appeal procedure in relation to the listing of buildings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macfarlane: No. A building is listed if it is considered to be of special architectural or historic interest. This is a professional and technical assessment made according to principles of selection formulated in 1970 by the former Historic Buildings Council, agreed with my Department and consistently applied ever since. Those assessments depend entirely on the actual merits of particular buildings and an appeal procedure would not therefore be appropriate. There is, of course, a full right of appeal by an owner against the refusal of consent to alter, extend or demolish a listed building.

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the qualifications necessary for appointment as an inspector responsible for the listing of buildings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macfarlane: Appointment to the Historic Buildings Inspectorate of the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission for England currently requires a degree in architectural history or a related subject, together with evidence of relevant post-graduate research.

Right to Buy

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer of 22 April, Official Report, column 339, if he will list by local authority area the addresses of the 39 cases which have been decided and give his detailed reasons in each case for making or declining to make a determination under paragraph 5 of schedule 1 to the Housing Act 1980, as amended.

Sir George Young: In deciding whether or not to exclude a dwelling from the right to buy under paragraph 5 of schedule 1, my right hon. Friend must consider very detailed evidence, both as to the dwelling's physical characteristics and as to its letting history. A full statement of reasons for all the decisions taken since 26 August 1984 could be provided only with disproportionate effort and expense. I shall, however, write to the hon. Member.

Local Government (Finance)

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to ensure that where money has been awarded under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966, the local authorities are guaranteed a 100 per cent. disregard from rate capping of the money they allocate to maintain the projects in question.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Under rate limitation a limit is set on the rate an authority may raise to finance its spending; but selected authorities had the opportunity to seek re-determination of the expenditure levels on which their rate limits were to be based. No such re-determination were sought. My right hon. Friend will consider carefully the representations he has received from Southwark and other authorities that this expenditure should be disregarded for grant penalty purposes.

Nurseries

Ms Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the local authorities which have been granted money under the urban aid scheme for nursery schemes for each year since 1979, giving the number for each authority:

(2) if he will list the number of schemes approved for urban aid to local authorities for the provision of nurseries in each of the years from 1979 to 1983;

(3) if he will list the amounts of money granted to local authorities from urban aid for nurseries for each of the years from 1979 to 1983, expressed in terms of 1979 prices.

Sir George Young: Information is not available in the form requested. In 1984-85, however, a total of 398 nursery schemes costing around £13·8 million were funded under the urban programme in 90 local authorities. A list of these authorities, and the number of nursery schemees supported in each, is as follows:

Structure Plans

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will take note of alterations to structure plans in considering the reports of inspectors at public inquiries into local plans in the period between the submission of the alterations and his decision on those alterations.

Mr. Macfarlane: The inspector's report following a public local inquiry into a local plan is made to the local planning authority which prepared the plan, and not to my right hon. Friend.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the expected timescale for the submission of structure plan alterations in metropolitan counties following their proposed abolition.

Mr. Macfarlane: Under the proposals in the Local Government Bill, following abolition approved structure plans will continue in force in Greater London and the metropolitan county areas until they are replaced by the unitary development plans which, under the provisions of the Bill, each borough or district council will prepare. There will be no power to alter structure plans for those areas after the abolition date.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those counties for which he has accepted alterations to structure plans proposed by county councils and the dates concerned.

Mr. Macfarlane: Alterations to approved county structure plans were approved on the following dates:

Plan	Date
Warwickshire No. 1	August 1979
Warwickshire No. 2	August 1979
Teesside No. 1	December 1979
East Cleveland	December 1979
West Cleveland	December 1979

Northamptonshire	March 1983
Teesside No. 2	April 1983
Kent	December 1983
Hertfordshire	October 1984
South Wiltshire (transport)	December 1984
East Sussex No. 3	May 1985

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what research he has conducted into the accuracy of forecasting requirements for housing land in structure plans approved prior to December 1981.

Mr. Macfarlane: My Department has not carried out any research on the accuracy of forecasts of housing land requirements in structure plans generally. It monitors the adequacy of the provision carefully and has commissioned research on the assumptions underlying the provision of land for housing in structure plans for South-East England.

West Yorkshire Structure Plan

M. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding the obsolescence of the West Yorkshire structure plan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macfarlane: Representations have been received from the West Yorkshire county council, Leeds, Calderdale and Bradford metropolitan district councils, the South and West Yorkshire branch of the Council for the Protection of Rural England, the right hon. Member for Leeds, East (Mr. Healey), and the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Meadowcroft). These will be considered before my right hon. Friend takes a final decision on whether to invoke his powers under section 6(1) of the Local Government (Interim Provisions) Act 1984 to defer consideration of the submitted alterations to the West Yorkshire structure plan.

Rate Poundage

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current average rate poundage for industrial and commercial premises in England and Wales.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Based on information so far available, the latest estimate of the average non-domestic rate poundage in England and Wales in 1985-86 is 194p.

Rates (Agriculture)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy, in the context of the review of arrangements for financing local government services, as to the contribution to be made by the agricultural industry towards the cost of local government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Those in the agricultural industry contribute towards the cost of local government services as taxpayers through central Government grants, as ratepayers through rates on agricultural dwellings and as users through fees and charges. Agricultural land and buildings have been fully derated since 1929 and I have no plans to change that position.

Defective Housing

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will estimate the number of defective houses which each local authority may be required to purchase; and if he will estimate the cost of this commitment for each local authority in England,

(2) what assistance he is providing to enable local authorities to acquire houses which are regarded as seriously defective.

Sir George Young: I will answer these questions shortly.

Asbestos (Faslane)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of the asbestos-contaminated materials at the Faslane site will be transported by maritime transport to Greenock; and if these materials will be packaged or placed in containers.

Sir George Young: Of the lightly contaminated material agreed for removal at this stage, approximately 80 per cent. or some 2,400 cubic metres will be transported via Greenock. The material will be packaged in sealed polypropylene bags lined with polyethelene as approved by the Health and Safety Executive.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if the safety regulations governing the transportation of asbestos-contaminated materials from Faslane meet the standards laid down by the Health and Safety Executive.

Sir George Young: Yes.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if it is the responsibility of his officials or the transport contractors to determine the system of packaging and transportation of asbestos-contaminated materials from the Faslane site of the defunct British Shipbreaking Industries Ltd.

Sir George Young: Neither. While it is the responsibility of the contractor to devise a system of packaging and transport, this must be approved by the Health and Safety Executive, as in this case it has been.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if consultations took place with local authorities, trade unions and other interested parties concerning the transportation of asbestos-contaminated materials from the site formerly owned by British Shipbreaking Industries at Faslane.

Sir George Young: Yes.

Heat and Power Feasibility Studies (London)

Mr. Rost asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to give his consent, under the Local Government Interim Provisions Act 1984, to the Greater London council's application to spend up to £150,000 on further work by consultants on combined heat and power feasibility studies for London.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Consent was given on 10 May 1985.

Homeless Persons (West Midlands)

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has concerning the number of homeless people in the west midlands for each half year since 1979.

Sir George Young: The information is as follows:

Number of households accepted as homeless in the west midlands

	Half-year	Metropolitan districts	Non-metropolitan districts
	1st	2,380	870
	2nd	2,330	830
1980
	1st	2,540	1,000
1981
	1st	2,970	1,390
	2nd	3,280	1,330
1982
	1st	3,450	1,530
	1st	3,440	1,470
1984
	2nd	3,740	1,590

Note: The figures are not directly comparable for the whole period because the method of collecting the information changed in the second half of 1980 for non-metropolitan districts and in the second half of 1982 for metropolitan districts.

Home Improvement Exhibition (Upper Waiting Hall)

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what response has been made by Ministers to the invitation sent to his Department to pay an official visit to the home improvement exhibition in the Upper Waiting Hall; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The National Home Improvement Council invited my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Construction to open the exhibition on 14 May. My hon. Friend will be out of the country on that date. I also have long-standing commitments in the midlands on 14 May. My hon. Friend the Minister of State, Department of Trade and Industry, has kindly agreed to open the exhibition.

NATIONAL FINANCE

EC (Budget)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the reply of 15 March concerning the United Kingdom contribution to value added tax under the European Economic Community budget, Official Report, column 312, whether he will provide estimated figures for the United Kingdom for 1983 and 1984; and if he will include a further table extending the comparison to include customs, and so on, duties and his forecast for 1985.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The figures for 1 per cent. yield from the VAT base for the years 1980 to 1983 have been revised by the European Commission since my reply of 15 March. The new data for these years and the further information requested is set out in the following table.

I regret that note (iv) to the table supplied in my earlier reply contained a typographical error. The budget figure for the United Kingdom's 1 per cent. VAT base for 1983 should have read 2,926 million ecu.

	1980 mecu	1981 mecu	1982 mecu	1983 mecu	1984 mecu	1985 mecu

European Economic Community (10)	5,906	6,392	6,815	6,989	7,961	8,096

Notes:

(i) The figures for both the 1 per cent. yield from the harmonised VAT base and the duties and levies for 1980 to 1983 include the adjustments agreed with the Commission for the period up to 30 June 1984. For 1984 the duties and levies are latest Commission estimates. (Source: European Commission budget revenue estimates.)

(ii) The Civil Service strike of 1981 delayed collection of some VAT until 1982. This is the major factor behind the exceptional 1982 figure for the United Kingdom's 1 per cent. VAT base.

(iii) The figures for the 1 per cent. yield from the harmonised VAT base for 1984 are the budget estimate. (Source: Official Journal of the European Comunities—amending and supplementary budget No. 1.) Those for 1985 are the figures for own resources established in Council on 23 April 1985.

(iv) Greece joined the Community on 1 January 1981 but until 1 January 1986 will continue to make financial contributions linked to GNP in lieu of VAT. The table therefore uses Commission estimates of a 1 per cent. VAT base for Greece for the period 1981 to 1985.

(v) The outturn figures to 1983 for the 1 per cent. yield were converted at budget exchange rates, which vary significantly from year to year. Those for traditional own resources were converted at the rates of exchange specified in the EC Regulation 2891/77, and convert national payments into ecu rates on the basis of the appropriate exchange rate which applied for the month in which payments were made.

£1 Notes

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many new £1 notes have been put into circulation by each of the individual issuing banks in Northern Ireland and Scotland during the first three months of 1985.

Mr. Lawson: Responsibility for the issue of new £1 notes by each of the individual issuing banks in Northern Ireland and Scotland is a matter for the banks themselves. Records are not kept centrally of the number of new £1 notes issued by these banks.

Post-war Credits

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give publicity to the availability of post-war credits by publishing a list of the persons still holding the credits.

Mr. Moore: The Inland Revenue has records in respect of some 2·1 million potential claimants where credits remain unpaid. Extensive publicity was given in the national press on the general payment of post-war credits in 1972 and 1973, and again in 1978, and claims may still be accepted where claimants can produce one or more certificates. Publication of a list—even if practicable—would be a breach of confidentiality.

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much money is still held by the Exchequer in capital and interest terms in post-war credits awaiting claimants.

Mr. Moore: It is estimated that between £33 million and £34 million remains unpaid. Interest on this credit would amount to a little under £13 million.

£2·50 Note

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will now introduce a £2·50 note; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have nothing to add to the reply which I gave at column 553 on 10 January when my hon. Friend asked a similar question.

Customs and Excise

Mr. Haselhurst asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to privatise the bill of entry sections of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise.

Mr. Hayhoe: In a review of the work of the Customs and Excise Statistical Office it was recommended that an experienced marketing agent should be appointed to provide trade statistics to the private sector. This service is currently provided by the relatively small bill of entry section of the Customs and Excise Statistical Office. At present Customs and Excise is considering the best way to implement the recommendation and is consulting a number of firms which have expressed an interest in the project.

No firm decision has yet been taken on whether or how the recommendation will be implemented.

North Sea Oil (Revenue)

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what revenue has accrued to the Government from oil produced in the North sea north of latitude 55° 50′ in each year since production began.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the right hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Fiscal Adjustment

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing his most recent estimate of the scope for tax cuts, fiscal adjustment, between 1985 and 1988 and his most recent estimate of the proceeds from asset sales in the same period.

Mr. Moore: The 1985 Financial Statement and Budget Report gives the latest estimate of the fiscal adjustment up to the financial year 1988-89. It also shows estimated special sales of assets on the assumption that these will be the same in cash terms in 1988-89 as in the preceding two years.

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing the fiscal adjustment for each year from 1979 to date.

Mr. Moore: In the medium-term financial strategy, last updated in the 1985 Financial Statement and Budget Report, general Government revenues are projected on the assumption of constant tax rates and indexed allowances and thresholds. Given the Government's plans for public expenditure and their objectives for public borrowing, the fiscal adjustment represents the estimated future scope for lower taxation (or higher spending). It is not a meaningful concept for the past.

The estimated effects of the tax proposals and public expenditure measures in each Budget are shown in the corresponding Financial Statement and Budget Report.

Public Sector Assets (Sales)

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing (a) the annual proceeds from sales of public sector assets and (b) the impact on the public sector borrowing requirement of these asset sales, in both cases from 1979 to date.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Insolvency

Mr. Robert Sheldon asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the amount of revenue obtained from taxes in insolvency cases where the Inland Revenue makes use of its position as a preferential creditor.

Mr. Lawson [pursuant to his reply, 7 May 1985, c. 365]: It is estimated that between £14-20 million, of which PAYE would account for some £10-14 million, is collected annually by the Inland Revenue as a preferential debt.

EC (Budget)

Mr. George Robertson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans have prepared prepared by the European Community Council of Ministers for a contingency involving the effect on the European Community budget of currency fluctuations, or varied farm prices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 7 May 1985; c. 366]: The draft Community budget for 1985, recently established by the Council of Budget Ministers, includes provision to cover the expenditure consequences of the Commission's proposals for CAP prices and the consequences ofa revised assumption about likely exchange rates for the year as a whole. We have made it plain that the Council of Ministers and the Commission must keep agricultural and other expenditure within the budgetary provision now agreed.

SOCIAL SERVICES

NHS (Pay)

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will make a statement about the pay negotiations of National Health Service employees.

Mr. John Patten: Pay negotiations in the Whitley councils are continuing.

Doctors (Contracts)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on what factors he based his decision to recommend rewriting contracts of the 23,000 family doctors currently employed by the National Health Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have not made any decision about recommending changes to the contracts of general medical practitioners.

Dental Technicians

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many dental technicians (a) are employed by health authorities in England and (b) also undertake private contract work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: As at 30 September 1983 there were 646 (whole-time equivalents) dental technicians employed by health authorities in England. We do not hold information on the numbers undertaking private work.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people received supplementary benefit help with rent and rates, respectively, in the London borough of Waltham Forest in 1979-80, 1980-81, 1981-82 and 1982-83.

Mr. Whitney: It is estimated that in 1982-83 about 16,000 supplementary benefit recipients in the London borough of Waltham Forest were ratepayers, about 13,000 of these were tenants. The respective estimate for ratepayers in 1981-82 is about 14,000. I regret that information relating to earlier years, and to tenants in 1981-82, is not available.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the costs of meeting mortgage interest payments for claimants of supplementary benefit, other than the unemployed, breaking these down into one-parent families, the sick and disabled and pensioners, and showing how many persons in each category benefit.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

NHS Patients (Private Treatment)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many National Health Service patients have received private treatment paid for by the National Health Service in 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984, respectively; and how many of these patients were treated in (a) private hospitals and (b) on National Health Service property or using National Health Service facilities by National Health Service consultants doing private work.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: None. Health authorities are not empowered to pay for private treatment, although they may contract with independent hospitals to provide services for National Health Service patients. National Health Service patients do not, by definition, receive private treatment in National Health Service hospitals.

Dr. Charles Entwhistle

Mr. Beaumont-Dark asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the suspension since 1981 of Dr. Charles Entwhistle from Rubery hill hospital; and when he now expects the matter to be resolved.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

North-Western RHA (Resources)

Mr. Silvester asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much additional cash has been made available to the North-Western regional health authority for each year since 1978-79 as a result of redistribution of resources under the resources allocation working party formula.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Government have steadily increased spending on health services in real terms since 1979 and have been distributing most of that increase to regions such as the North- Western which had been deprived of their fair share of health resources in the past. The table shows the increases in the revenue spending of North- Western regional health authority over and above the general level of inflation for each year since 1978-79. The table also shows the region's progress towards its fair share of national revenue resources in line with the recommendation of the resources allocation working party.

	Revenue spending £ million net*	Growth in economic cost terms†	Region's distance from target allocation percentage	percentage
1978-79	380·3	—	−8·93
1979-80	460·5	3·7	−8·76
1980-81	599·9	9·8	−7·52
1981-82	675·3	2·4	−6·14
1982-83	725·9	0·6	−5·70
1983-84	764·6	0·7	−4·03
1984-85	808·0	1·1	−3·68
1985-86	849·8	—	−1·83

Hospitalisation Index

Mr. Silvester asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the hospitalisation index for all specialties for all health districts in England in rank order, taking the national average as 100.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We cannot give full national information of this kind yet but we are taking steps to ensure that we will soon be able to do so.

The set of performance indicators which we published in September 1983 contained, for five acute specialties, the gross admission rate per 1,000 population served in 1981 for each district health authority in England. A copy of the national summary is in the Library.

We will be issuing performance indicators for use on a micro-computer to all health authorities again in July 1985. One indicator will show the hospitalisation rate in 1983 for all residents of the district, wherever they were treated, for all acute specialties combined. The rate is calculated by standardising the resident population for its age and sex mix, and its morbidity.

Other performance indicators will provide crude hospitalisation rates for residents treated in their home district for mental handicap, mental illness and for elderly patients respectively.

Values for these performance indicators will be given for all health districts in England and will be ranked within the national perspective. The England average for each indicator will be shown alongside district values.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to his answer of 3 May to the hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe, Official Report, column 272, relating to attendance allowance, he will list (a) the number of applicants and (b) the success ratio for each area.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) on 26 March at columns 171-72.

Patients (Discharges)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many discharges of patients, after inpatient stays in National Health Service hospitals in England in each of the years 1973 to 1983, were of patients who had been re-admitted after having been previously discharged in the same year.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not have sufficient information centrally on re-admissions to answer this question.

Cremations (Form B)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to remove the present charge made by doctors for signing form B for cremations.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. Since cremation is a matter of choice we do not consider that the cost of certification should be borne by the taxpayer.

Organidin Syrup

Mr. Higgins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the equivalent on the National Health Service limited list of Organidin syrup.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I understand that a number of drugs on the selected list, such as ammonium chloride mixture BP, benzoin tincture compound BP and menthol and eucalyptus inhalation BP, have a similar therapeutic effect to that of Organidin syrup.

St. Mary's Hospital, Portsmouth

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will ensure that all possible help and expert advice will be given to the hospital authorities at St. Mary's hospital, Portsmouth, to investigate the outbreak of legionnaire's disease there.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The health authority has received expert help from the Public Health Laboratory Service and Porton Down, and in consultation with local medical advisers a decision was made to close seven wards and three operating theatres. There is no need for public alarm over these closures. The authority has acted responsibly in not taking any chances, and I have personally satisfied myself that the situation is being properly dealt with.

General Dental Service

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of the cost of the general dental service will be borne by charges in 1985-86.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The estimated percentage of the gross cost of the general dental service borne by dental charges, for England, will be 31·2 in 1985-86.

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the criteria on which the appeals committees will judge the right of a doctor to prescribe medicines which are listed in schedule 3A; what arrangements he has made to give this information to doctors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We are still awaiting the response of the General Medical Services Committee of the British Medical Association to the proposals for an appeals mechanism which I put to them on 16 April 1985. Our proposals include the provision of a statutory criterion for prescribing a schedule 3A drug. This would be that it is likely that a particular patient's health would otherwise be adversely affected.

The sub-committee of the family practitioner committee which considered applications to prescribe schedule 3A drugs would be given guidance on the sort of circumstances which would normally meet the criterion. These circumstances would include: that there were known contraindications to all the appropriate drugs on the selected list, because of a prior condition or the treatment for it; that the patient had an established adverse reaction or sensitivity to the available appropriate drugs; that a patient with a chronic or long-term condition had been stabilised with difficulty on a specific drug and changing to a different drug would entail real risks; and that a scheduled drug had a recognised and specific therapeutic effect, not achievable with any normally available drug that was clinically necessary in the case in question.

There is no question of a doctor being able to prescribe a scheduled drug simply because he or the patient preferred it.

Mr. Alexander Haddow

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what action he proposes to take following the ruling of the social security commissioner in the case of Mr. Alexander Haddow (Commission's file CSSB/154/84);

(2) if he will make immediate arrangements to repay moneys owing to the families of miners as a result of the ruling in the case of Mr. Alexander Haddow by the social security commissioners.

Mr. Newton: This commissioner's decision contains detailed and complex guidance on the interpretation of the relevant law and is still being studied in the Department and, I understand, in the office of the Chief Adjudication Officer. Future action will depend upon the results of this consideration, which will take a little time. I will write to the hon. Member in due course.

Coal Industry Dispute (Social Security Payments)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many miners or their families had money deducted from their social security payments as a result of the treatment of loans from local authorities as income; and what is the total sum involved;

(2) how many miners' families received no payment from his Department in at least one week of the miners' industrial dispute as a result of the treatment of loans from local authorities as income.

Mr. Newton: Separate records are not kept of the resources taken into account in the assessment of entitlement. I regret therefore that the information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Public Health Laboratory Service

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the public health laboratory service units, giving for each year since 1979 their revenue and capital budgets in constant terms, together with the establishment and number of staff in post in unit.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not hold information on these matters relating to individual PHLS units. I suggest that the hon. Member should seek it from the public health laboratory service board.

Legionnaire's Disease (Stafford)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when his Department was first informed of the outbreak of legionnaire's disease in Stafford; when they were informed that the hospital's own water system was the suspected source; and when he wrote to other hospital authorities to warn them to make checks of their own.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We were first informed that cases of legionnaire's disease had been positively identified in Stafford on 3 May. On the evening of 4 May we were informed that one possible source of the outbreak was the Stafford district general hospital's own water system. We sent out letters reminding district health authorities about the Department's existing guidance on reducing the chances of an outbreak occurring on 8 and 9 May.

Children Act

Mr. Tracey asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when the custodianship provisions of the Children Act 1975 will be brought into force.

Mr. John Patten: The custodianship provisions of the Children Act 1975 will be brought into force in England and Wales on 1 December 1985. When the orders are introduced, people who have been caring for children will be able to apply to the courts for legal custody. Custodians will have the parental rights and duties of a natural parent and will be able to make decisions about a child's day-to-day care and upbringing in the same way as a parent.

Three groups of people will be able to apply for custodianship orders: relatives, such as grandmothers; step-mothers, who will then be able to share with their partners the rights and duties of parents; foster parents. Those who have cared for a child for three years will be able to apply for a custodianship order without the consent of parents or local authority. After the application is made, the child cannot be taken away.

I am pleased that our proposals to introduce custodianship orders were welcomed by organisations representing children and families when we consulted them last year. These new measures will mean greater stability and security for children in the families in which they are being brought up. It will benefit children for whom adoption is not the answer but who need settled homes because their parents cannot care for them. Unlike adoption, custodianship does not mean that a child's legal ties with his own family are completely broken.

We shall present the commencement order and custodianship report regulations to Parliament at the end of May. At the same time we shall issue a circular of guidance, to explain the provisions, to local authorities and other interested bodies.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Olive Oil

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for 1973 and for each of the past five years the target, threshold and intervention prices for olive oil, the amount of production and consumption aid per tonne, the cost of each to the European Economic Community budget, and production, imports and exports of olive oil.

Mr. MacGregor: Most of this information can be obtained for recent years from the Commission's publication "The Agricultural Situation in the Community" report 1984. Similar information for earlier years is contained in previous reports. Copies of these are available in the Library of the House. The rates of production and consumption aid payable for olive oil, and estimated European Community production have been as follows (source: European Commission):

Production aid (ECU/tonne)	558·1	600·0	666·0	702·6	695·6

* On 13 March 1985 the consumption aid was reduced to 378·7 ECU/tonne.

The remainder of the information requested is not readily available.

Sheepmeat

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether there is any formal or informal agreement or understanding, express or implied, concerning the price at which New Zealand lamb is sold in the United Kingdom.

Mr. MacGregor: The price at which New Zealand lamb is sold in the United Kingdom is a matter for the commercial judgment of the New Zealand Meat Producers' Board.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report the institutional prices for sheepmeat in each of the past five years and the proposals for 1985 and 1986, the amount of the variable premium and clawback payments as a percentage of the guide price, the amount spent on the variable premium and the qualifying tonnage, the amount spent on the headage premium paid on breeding ewes, the amount spent on hill farming and so on subsidies for sheep production and the numbers of sheep and lambs.

Mr. MacGregor: Information on institutional prices is published by the EC Commission in "The Agricultural Situation in the Community" report for 1984 and earlier years. The Commission's proposals for 1985 and 1986 are set out in Commission document 4582/85 addenda I, II and corrigendum and III. The expenditure and population figures requested are set out in tables 28 and 3 of the "Annual Review of Agriculture 1985" and corresponding tables of earlier annual review White Papers. Copies of all these publications are available in the Library of the House.

Annual average rate of variable premium & clawback as percentage of the guide price	—	13	25	28	—
Certified weight of animals qualifying for variable premium ('000 tonnes)	103	220	226	234	—

* The 1980-81 marketing year lasted for only 24 weeks and no annual average figure can be quoted.
† To allow for comparison these marketing years have been standardised to a 52-week year commencing on the first Monday in April.
‡ The 1984-85 marketing year has not yet ended and figures cannot yet be calculated.

Seed Oil

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for the years 1973 and each of the past five years the threshold, target and intervention prices of rapeseed and sunflower seed, the subsidies to seedcrushers for the production of rapeseed oil, the world price and the levy on imports from third countries, the cost of support to the European Economic Community budget and the amount of seed and oil produced, imported and exported.

Mr. MacGregor: Most of this information can be obtained for recent years from the Commission's publication "The Agricultural Situation in the Community" report 1984. Similar information for earlier years is contained in previous reports. Copies of these are available in the Library of the House. There are no levies on imports or threshold prices for these products. The remaining information requested is not readily available.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for 1973 and each of the past five years the minimum and guide prices for soya beans and linseed, the level of aid for growing soya beans, the levy on imports, the cost to the European Economic Community budget of support for these products and production imports and exports of soya and linseed and the oils made therefrom.

Mr. MacGregor: Most of this information can be obtained for recent years from the Commission's publication "The Agricultural Situation in the Community" report 1984. Similar information for earlier years is contained in previous reports. Copies of these are available in the Library of the House. There are no levies on imports of these products. Estimated European Community production of soya beans and linseed in recent years has been as follows:

	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84
Soya beans ('000 tonnes)	19	24	31	86
Linseed ('000 tonnes)	55	47	62	44

Source: European Commission.

The remaining information is not readily available.

Peas and Beans

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for 1973 and each of the past five years the minimum and activating prices for dried field beans, dried peas and lupins, the guide price for peas and field beans, the amount of aid paid to processors for use in animal feed per tonne of beans and so on consumed, the guide prices for peas and beans, the relevant world prices, production, imports and exports of peas, beans and lupins and directly competing products and the cost of support to the European Economic Community budget.

Mr. MacGregor: Much of this information can be obtained from the Commission's publication "The Agricultural Situation in the Community" report 1984 and previous reports. Copies of these are available in the Library of the House. There was no Community aid scheme for any of these crops in 1973. The Community aid scheme for peas and field beans for human consumption was introduced for the 1982-83 marketing year, since when the guide prices have been as follows (ECU/tonne):

314·0	334·4	331·1

The aid scheme for lupins was introduced for the 1984-85 marketing year for which the activating price was set at 478·2 ECU per tonne and the minimum price at 317·9 ECU per tonne. The remainder of the information requested is not readily available.

Hill Farming

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his written reply dated 20 March 1984, Official Report, columns 413-4, concerning hill farming subsidies, whether he will publish in the Official Report a table distinguishing, where possible, between hill farming and other less favoured areas the total amount spent on premiums, compensatory allowances and so on for the production of sheep and cattle in 1984 by size of holding, together with the number of animals produced and the numbers qualifying for the different subsidies.

Mr. MacGregor: I regret that the information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Surpluses

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the Government's policy concerning price increases under the Common Agricultural Policy for products which are in structural surplus.

Mr. Jopling: The Government's objective is to maintain a restrictive pricing policy through the application of guarantee thresholds for products in or likely to be in surplus or on which expenditure is rising rapidly.

Pressure Stock Licences (Freezer Trawlers)

Mr. Wallace asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many pressure stock licences were held in respect of freezer trawlers on 1 April 1984 and 1 April 1985.

Mr. MacGregor: The number of freezer trawlers licensed to fish for pressure stocks on 1 April 1984 and 1 April 1985 was seven and three, respectively.

Northern Ireland Milk Quota

Mr. Hunter asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from the Ulster Farmers' Union about the level of Northern Ireland milk quota; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I have received representations from the Ulster Farmers' Union regarding the problems arising from the low uptake under the outgoers scheme in the Province. I appreciate these difficulties and am considering with my right hon. Friends ways in which we might help to alleviate the situation.

Agricultural Holdings Act

Mr. Hunter asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the workings of the Agricultural Holdings Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: The Agricultural Holdings Act 1984 came into effect less than a year ago. Its enactment has been widely welcomed by the industry as a whole, but it is still too early to make any firm assessment of its impact.

Annual Review White Paper

Mr. Gould asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report any revision to table 28 of the annual review White Paper, Cmnd. 9423, together with a separate figure for wheat in the first part of the table; and if he will break down the figures to show the amount spent in each country in the United Kingdom.

Mr. MacGregor: The final outturn for 1984-85 is not yet available, but this information, together with forecast expenditure for 1985-86, will be published towards the end of the year. Separate information about expenditure on wheat is not, however, readily available. Details of expenditure by the individual Agricultural Departments are contained in the annual Supply Estimates and appropriation accounts for MAFF, DAFS and the Welsh Office. The Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce operates on a United Kingdom basis, and for the majority of its expenditure it is not possible to break down the figures in table 28 of Cmnd. 9423 to show the amount spent in each country in the United Kingdom.

Farmers (Income)

Mr. Gould asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report the net farm income in 1984 of hill and upland cattle and sheep farms in England and Wales, respectively, together with the corresponding figure for lowland farms.

Mr. MacGregor: The latest figures of net farm incomes on hill and upland (less favoured area) cattle and sheep farms and on lowland cattle and sheep farms in England and Wales relate to the accounting year 1983-84. These figures are published in table 27 of the annual review of agriculture 1985 White Paper (Cmnd. 9423). Forecasts of probable percentage income changes between 1983-84 and 1984-85 are given in table 26 of the same White Paper.

Agricultural Land

Mr. Adley asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken recently to protect agricultural land from development pressures; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: The Government's policy is to ensure that, as far as possible, land of a higher agricultural quality is not taken for development where land of a lower quality is available and that the amount of land taken is no greater than is reasonably required.

My Department continues to play a key role in implementing this policy through its responses to consultations with local planning authorities on planning applications.

Sherry

Mr. John Townend asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has as to the number of people directly employed in the manufacture of British sherry, excluding selling and distribution.

Mrs. Fenner: I am advised by the chairman of the British Wine Producers Committee of the Wine and Spirit Association that 1,200 people are directly involved in the manufacture of British wine. A further 800 people are involved in allied activities, such as labelling, packaging and marketing, all of whom are reliant on the existence of this industry for their livelihood.

It is not possible to give an exact figure of those involved in the production of British sherry alone. British sherry accounts for approximately two thirds of the total production of British wine, but there is not necessarily a direct link between the volume of production and level of employment.

EC (Warehouses)

Mr. Hoyle asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all the European Economic Community warehouses and their locations in England; and if he will state the amount and what is being stored there.

Mr. Jopling: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

WALES

Broadleaved Woodlands

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list in the Official Report the names and locations of the broadleaved woodlands clearfelled under licence but not to be replanted in 1982-83, 1983-84 and 1984-85 in the Forestry Commission's north Wales and south Wales conservancies.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: This information is not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Labour Statistics

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the numbers of workers in part-time employment in Wales for each year since 1979.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Total figures for the number in part-time employment are not available except in the years when a Census of Employment is taken. Females, however, make up the bulk of part-timers and data is published by Department of Employment in the quarterly estimates of employees in employment. The available data is as follows:

	Females (thousands)	Total (thousands)
June 1978*	152	177
June 1979	165	†
June 1980	163	†
June 1981	159	†
September 1981*	156	181
June 1982	160	†
June 1983	171	†
June 1984	173	†

* Census of Employment figures: all other figures are quarterly estimates.

† Not available.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the average time taken by the Agriculture Department of the Welsh Office to pay out hill livestock compensatory allowances to farmers in less favoured areas in Wales, during the last four quarters; how this compares with corresponding quarters of the previous year; and if he will make a statement on complaints of delay in payment which have been made to him.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Hill livestock compensatory allowances have a common qualifying date of 1 January. Claims arrive at divisional offices in large numbers from that date. Records are not kept of the average time taken to pay individual claims but priority is always given to processing them for payment as soon as possible. The number of claims paid in the last four quarters compared with the previous four quarters was as follows:

	Number of claims paid	Amount paid £
April to June 1984	1,678	3,547,272
April to June 1983	2,005	3,891,153
July to September 1984	133	157,485
July to September 1983	118	153,656
October to December 1984	53	44,267
October to December 1983	50	46,881
January to March 1985	8,320	18,332,900
January to March 1984	8,878	20,202,451

This year, following the recent EC redefinition of the United Kingdom's less favoured areas, the number of farmers eligible to receive these allowances has increased and most of those who have not yet been paid are the first-time claimants in the new outer area. For these, eligibility has first to be determined and farmers concerned have been invited to supply details of their holdings for this purpose.

At a time when the divisional office staff have been under unprecedented pressure, the rate of throughput of claims which they have achieved is very creditable. At the same time I am aware of farmers' anxiety to receive their payments and divisional offices will do all they can to minimise delays on the remainder.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Departmental Committees of Inquiry

Mr. Eggar asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many departmental committees of inquiry he and his predecessors, including Ministers of Education, have commissioned since 1955; and what were the subjects the committees investigated, the dates they were established, who chaired them and the dates they reported.

Sir Keith Joseph: The information requested is listed as follows. The dates without brackets are those of commencement, where appropriate; the dates with brackets are those of reporting. Given the period of time involved I cannot guarantee that the list is complete.

Inter-authority Education Costs

Sir Hector Monro asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he is going to come to a conclusion over the formulation of an agreed procedure for the inter-authority cross-border reimbursement of costs for children's education.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Education and Science and for Scotland are currently considering the basis on which they might make a joint approach to the appropriate local authority associations in England and Scotland.

Adult Post-experience Courses (West Midlands)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will supplement the financing of universities and polytechnics in the West Midlands county to enable them to increase their involvement in post-experience courses for adults.

Sir Keith Joseph: The Department is already providing considerable support for the expansion of post-experience courses for adults in the west midlands through the professional, industrial and commercial updating programme (PICKUP). Eighty-two thousand pounds has been committed to the support of the Coventry consortium —a network of further and higher education institutions working in partnership with local employers on the design and provision of post-experience updating and retraining for adults. A further project supported by a grant of £50,000 involves Aston university and other institutions collaborating with local industry and commerce for the provision of foreign language and marketing training.

Within a new PICKUP initiative developing the capability of universities to provide post-exerience courses, support in principle has been given to proposals from Birmingham and Aston universities. Other projects within the scope of the PICKUP programme have also been approved for the west midlands, including a further development at Aston university on information technology updating via tutor-supported video courses. Other projects are also under consideration.

Students (Tuition Fees)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what costs students whose tuition fees are not presently being met by a local education authority are having to pay for their tuition in the current academic year at (a) undergraduate level and (b) post-graduate level.

Mr. Brooke: My right hon. Friend recommended the following fee levels for home students and for students from other European Community countries for the current academic year:

Post-graduate courses	1,569
First degree and diploma courses	500

Students who are classified as overseas students and began their courses on or after 1 September 1980 are expected to pay tuition fees that cover the full cost of the education provided. The actual fees are determined by the authorities and institutions concerned. The University Grants Committee has, however, recommended the following minimum fees for overseas students at British universities during the current academic year:

Arts courses	3,150
Science courses	4,150
Clinical courses in medicine, dentistry and veterinary science	7,650

The Council for Local Education Authorities has recommended a minimum fee of £3,180 for overseas students on advanced courses at maintained and assisted institutions during the current academic year.

Overseas students who began their courses before 1 September 1980 are still entitled to a subsidised rate of fee. Maximum fees for such students in the present academic year were specified in the Education (Fees & Awards) (Amendment) Regulations 1984 and are as follows:

Post-graduate courses	2,148
First-degree and other advanced courses	1,653

Student Numbers (West Midlands)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science which colleges of further and higher education have been closed or had their student numbers reduced in the West Midlands county in each single academic year since 1978-79.

Mr. Brooke: No colleges of further or higher education in the West Midlands county closed in the period 1978-84. None of the colleges in this area had reduced student numbers in each single academic year since 1978-79. However, three colleges experienced a steady decline in student numbers over this period interrupted by a rise in one year only. They were:

	Student numbers
	November 1979	*November 1984
Matthew Boulton technical college	7,600	6,700
Sutton Coldfield CFE	5,200	4,200
Coventry technical college	7,300	4,700

* Provisional figures.

Overall student numbers increased in the West Midlands county during this period. I shall write to the hon. Member giving details of annual enrolments at the institutions concerned.

Universities

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science on what basis he calculated the sum to be distributed amongst universities for expanding their programmes of continuing education; and what consideration he has given to raising that level of financing after April 1986.

Sir Keith Joseph: Within the total sums available to institutions of further and higher education under the Department's programme for the development of professional, industrial and commercial updating (PICKUP), I decided that an initial sum of £200,000 should be made available for the period April 1985 to March 1986 to promote: either the establishment of a suitable organisation capable of mobilizing the resources of all relevant departments and faculties for the development of PICKUP provision (in universities currently undertaking little PICKUP work); or the expansion of post-experience activities in identified priority areas (in universities already deploying resources on PICKUP-type work).

Decisions on support in future years will depend on the results of the first year's funding, but I am encouraged by the commitment which universities have shown so far in response to this new initiative.

Foreign Language Teaching

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science which bodies he intends to consult while compiling information to produce his proposed policy statement on the teaching of foreign languages in secondary schools.

Mr. Dunn: The Department consulted widely on its paper "Foreign Languages in the School Curriculum", issued in 1983; those bodies invited to comment are listed below. My right hon. Friend's policy statement on foreign language teaching in schools will be issued in the light of his consultation and such further consultation as is necessary.

EC (School Visits)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to meet education ministers of European Community member states to discuss collective financial support for promoting cultural and educational links through more visits to different countries arranged for school pupils.

Mr. Brooke: My right hon. Friend plans to meet other European Community Education Ministers on 3 June but the promotion of school pupil links and exchanges is not among the items on the agenda. The Ministers are awaiting proposals from the Commission on exchanges; and the ad hoc committee on people's Europe set up by the Fontainebleau summit in 1984 is also expected to make recommendations in this area later in the year.

Advanced Supplementary Level Examination

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what response he has had to the letters which he has sent to the chairman of the Secondary Examinations Council and the convenor of the General Certificate of Education boards about the newly proposed advanced supplementary level examination.

Mr. Dunn: The chairman of the Secondary Examinations Council has written to my right hon. Friend informing him that the council stands ready to consult the GCE boards on this matter. The GCE boards have not yet responded.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science on what basis Her Majesty's Government assessed the grant to examination boards for developing new syllabuses under the advanced supplementary level examination system.

Mr. Dunn: The Government's offer to the GCE boards is intended as a substantial contribution towards the cost of developing the new syllabuses and consulting widely on them.

Burnham Committee Teachers' Panel

Mr. Guy Barnett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will place in the Library copies of any correspondence he has received requesting a review of the composition of the Burnham Committee teachers' panel.

Sir Keith Joseph: No. It is for those who wrote to me to decide whether or not to make their views known publicly.

Drug Abuse

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has about the present arrangements for specific education about the dangers of hard drugs in primary and secondary schools, colleges of further education, polytechnics and universities; what specific allocation of central funds is made for this purpose; and how this compares with the provision in 1980.

Sir Keith Joseph: I receive advice on present arrangements from Her Majesty's Inspectorate based on its observations, and expect to obtain comprehensive information by the end of the year through a project funded by the Department and being undertaken through the education management information exchange. There was no specific allocation of funds in 1980 and action is primarily a matter for local authorities and institutions.

The Department has, however, recently commissioned, at a cost of £86,000, the development of suitable new teaching materials, mainly for use in schools and colleges, and has in preparation a booklet containing advice and information for use by teachers and others in the education service. I am currently considering with the local authorities how best to encourage further action.

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the present arrangements for information on the dangers of hard drugs to be given to trainee teachers and for in-service training for qualified teachers; what specific allocation of central funds is made for this purpose; and how this compares with the provision in 1980.

Mr. Dunn: Responsibility for making information available to intending teachers about drug misuse and for providing training for serving teachers on the subject rests mainly with teacher training institutions and local education authorities respectively. Regional courses concerned with drug misuse and arranged in consultation with the Department will be eligible for central funding under the Department's programme for supporting regional in-service training courses. In 1985-86 some £350,000 will be available for the regional course programme as a whole.

The Department is also funding a range of research and development work intended to enhance teachers' awareness of the dangers of drug misuse and to offer them appropriate guidance. In particular my right hon. Friend announced on 27 February his intention to issue a booklet to teachers on the problems of drug misuse and his approval for a project by the Health Education Council for the preparation of suitable curriculum material for use by both teachers and teacher traineers. There was no specific allocation of central funds for work in this field in 1980.

Full-time Education (Statistics)

Mr. Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the number of people undertaking full-time education in (a) schools, (b) universities and (c) other colleges of further higher education, during each of the last 10 years.

Sir Keith Joseph: The information requested is as follows:

In full-time education—England only

Thousands

	School	Further education*	Universities*	Total
1974-75	9,056	321	195	9,572
1975-76	9,104	378	204	9,686
1976-77	9,099	476	212	9,787
1977-78	9,007	472	220	9,699
1978-79	8,900	475	226	9,601
1979-80	8,737	472	230	9,439
1980-81	8,518	483	234	9,235
1981-82	8,286	532	235	9,053
1982-83	8,041	573	231	8,845
1983-84	7,849	575	228	8,652

* Full-time and sandwich but excluding private education outside school.

Expenditure

Mr. Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will state the amount of (a) central Government and (b) local authority spending during each of the last 10 years, together with the percentage change in real terms over each previous year, under the following headings: (i) education, (ii) schools and (iii) universities.

Sir Keith Joseph: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Education Act 1981 (Appeals)

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many members of staff in his Department work on appeals under the Education Act 1981.

Mr. Dunn: These appeals form part of the regular work of 16 people in the Division dealing with special education.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the average length of time between a parent appealing to him under (a) section 5(6) and (b) section 8(6) of the Education Act 1981 and the announcement of the result of the appeal.

Mr. Dunn: The average for all appeals received since the Act came into force in 1983 is (a) section 5(6): 19 weeks, (b) section 8(6): 18 weeks. The latter figure includes two instances where the parents withdrew the appeal and later renewed it. The average, excluding those cases, is 17 weeks.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Ethiopia and Sudan

40. Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what provision the Government are making to improve the land transport of emergency relief supplies in Ethiopia and the Sudan.

Mr. Raison: In Ethiopia we have provided lorries, Land Rovers, mobile workshops, spare parts, including engines and tyres, and other equipment to help improve the distribution of relief supplies by surface routes. In the Sudan we are providing funds for trucks, fuel and a logistics team. We have also provided £218,000 towards fuel costs for distributing our bilateral food aid.

41. Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total value of British aid to sub-Saharan Africa during 1984-85.

Mr. Raison: Figures for 1984-85 are not yet available, but in the calendar year 1984 direct British aid to sub-Saharan Africa came to £248 million. This does not include what we channelled through the European Community and other multilateral agencies.

Chile

42. Dame Judith Hart asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will provide further emergency aid to Caritas to assist the relief of those made homeless by the earthquake in Chile.

Mr. Raison: We continue to monitor the situation but have no plans for further emergency assistance.

SCOTLAND

Elderly Persons (Assaults)

Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of assaults on the elderly in Scotland in the last two years involved young people aged under 21 years.

Mr. Ancram: The information collected by the Scottish Home and Health Department does not include the ages of victims of crimes such as assault.

Environmental Health

Mr. McKelvey asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he contemplates in connection with the law on environmental health following the judgment in the case of Kilmarnock and Loudoun District Council v. Yuill and Dodds.

Mr. Ancram: I understand that the district council has lodged an appeal with the Court of Session against the judgment in this case. In these circumstances, it would not be appropriate for me to comment.

Law Reform (Parent and Child) (Scotland) Bill

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will be prepared to support in principle the proposed Law Reform (Parent and Child) (Scotland) Bill.

Mr. Ancram: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Sea Fisheries Offences and Salmon Poaching

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total of fines imposed for sea fisheries offences between 31 January 1984 and 31 January 1985; and what was the total of fines imposed for salmon poaching during the same period.

Mr. Ancram: Information collected by the Scottish Home and Health Department shows that a total of £39,315 in fines was imposed for sea fisheries offences in the months February to December 1984. The corresponding figure for salmon and freshwater fisheries offences is £38,550; it is not possible to identify the total for salmon poaching within this total. Figures for January 1985 are not yet available.

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many convictions there have been in Scotland for offences connected with violations of the Sea Fisheries Acts and Regulations between 31 January 1984 and 31 January 1985; and how many convictions there have been during the same period for offences connected with salmon poaching.

Mr. Ancram: The number of persons against whom a sea fisheries offence was proved in the 11 months from February 1984 to December 1984 was 37. The corresponding figure for salmon and freshwater fisheries offences was 403; it is not possible to say how many of these offences were for salmon poaching. Figures for January 1985 are not yet available.

Children (Education Costs)

Sir Hector Monro asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he is going to come to a conclusion over the formulation of an agreed procedure for the inter-authority cross-border reimbursement of costs for children's education.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I refer to the reply which my hon. Friend has received today to his identical question to the Secretary of State for Education and Science.

Broadleaved Woodlands

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list in the Official Report the names and locations of the broadleaved woodlands clearfelled under licence and not replanted in 1982-83, 1983-84 and 1984-85 in the Forestry Commission's north Scotland conservancy;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report the names and locations of the broadleaved woodlands clearfelled under licence and not replanted in 1982-83, 1983-84 and 1984-85 in the Forestry Commission's east Scotland conservancy;

(3) if he will list in the Official Report the names and locations of the broadleaved woodlands clearfelled under licence and not replanted in 1982-83, 1983-84 and 1984-85 in the Forestry Commission's west Scotland conservancy;

(4) if he will list in the Official Report the names and locations of the broadleaved woodlands clearfelled under licence and not replanted in 1982-83, 1983-84 and 1984-85 in the Forestry Commission's south Scotland conservancy.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his reply, 9 May 1985, c. 491]: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Shipbuilding Industry

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many jobs in the shipbuilding industry have been lost since June 1979 in (a) Scotland, (b) Strathclyde region and (c) the Greenock travel-to-work area.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

DEFENCE

Greenham common and Molesworth (Byelaw Offences)

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many people have been arrested at Royal Air Force Greenham common and Royal Air Force Molesworth for offences under the Military Lands Act byelaws; what is the maximum period any such person has been detained following arrest; how many such persons have been photographed after they had indicated their unwillingness to be photographed; and what steps have been taken to provide suitable premises and training for his Department's police officers, including his Department's criminal investigation department officers, to ensure that the judges' rules are followed after arrests for byelaw offences.

Mr. Lee: Byelaws at RAF Greenham common and RAF Molesworth came into operation on 1 April 1985. By 30 April 139 persons at Greenham common and 18 at Molesworth had been arrested by Ministry of Defence police officers for offences against the byelaws. Information about the maximum time for which any such offender has been detained could not be provided without disproportionate effort, but it is in the police interest to deal with every case as quickly as possible.

It is not possible to state how many persons have been photographed who have indicated an unwillingness to be photographed, because there is no statutory requirement for such a record to be kept.

Temporary accommodation has been provided at RAF Greenham common and RAF Molesworth so that the questionning of suspected offenders can be carried out separately from the normal work of the establishments. This accommodation is considered to be adequate for the purpose.

Ministry of Defence police detective officers attend appropriate courses run by Home Office police forces. All officers, both detective and uniformed, are required to be conversant with the Judges' Rules and the fact that an officer's actions may subsequently be questioned in court ensures that the rules are applied to the letter.

Type 23 Frigate

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the closing date for tender of the type 23 frigate announced recently.

Mr. Lee: The closing date for the tenders has yet to be determined.

Rosyth Dockyard

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether Trafalgar House has indicated to his Department its interest in managing Rosyth dockyard.

Mr. Butler: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement to the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown) on 26 February 1985 at column 164.

Asbestos

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Defence if the transportation of asbestos-contaminated materials from Faslane will be supervised or monitored by officials from his Department.

Mr. Stanley: No. The property Services Agency acts on our behalf on these matters.

Oberon (Refitting)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how much is to be charged to the cost of refitting the Oberon submarine at Humber Ship Repairers as a result of work done at Plymouth on propeller shafts; (2) on what basis he proposes to charge to the cost of refitting the Oberon submarine at Humber Ship Repairers the cost of seconding his Department's personnel; and how much he estimates the sums involved will be.

Mr. Lee: The cost of equipment and manpower provided in aid of the commercial refit of HMS Otter will be charged to the project at full cost. The cost of the work done at Devonport dockyard on propellor shafts was just under £85,000. It is too early to estimate the final manpower bill for technical guidance and overseeing.

Royal Dockyards

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of printing and publishing his open government document and consultative paper on the royal dockyards.

Mr. Lee: About £37,000, which is just under £1·00 per copy distributed.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has consulted the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation on his proposals to introduce private operators on a franchise basis into the royal dockyards.

Mr. Butler: Arrangements for the management of the royal dockyards are a matter for national decision, but we believe our NATO allies would welcome measures aimed at enhancing efficiency and the availability of warships for their primary roles.

"Crown Jewels"

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department received any request for information from Mr. Peter Greig in connection with the article he published in "Granta 15", spring 1985, concerning the contents of the document known as the "Crown Jewels."

Mr. Stanley: Not so far as I am aware.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL FOR SCOTLAND

Mr. Steven Owen

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for East Lothian on 15 February, Official Report, column 315, if he will now make a statement about the detention of Mr. Steven Owen of Musselburgh for three days in police custody awaiting court proceedings arising from a parking ticket.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: In accordance with the undertaking which I gave in my answer of 15 February 1985, I have written to the hon. Member with a full account of the circumstances surrounding this case.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. McKelvey asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland if he will list the responsibilities exercised by the Lord Advocate and himself for which he answers parliamentary questions.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: The responsibilities exercised by the Lord Advocate and myself in respect of which I answer parliamentary questions extend to all the ministerial functions exercised by us or on our behalf. These are:

1. Functions exercised through the Crown Office, principally the investigation and prosecution of crime in Scotland, the responsibility in relation thereto for Crown counsel and the procurator fiscal service and the investigation of sudden deaths and fatal accidents. The Lord Advocate is not however responsible for policy or administration in relation to the police, criminal statistics or the treatment of offenders, which are responsibilities of the Secretary of State for Scotland;
2. Functions exercised through the Lord Advocate's Department, principally in relation to the Scottish parliamentary draftsmen;
3. Functions exercised through the Scottish courts administration, principally relating to
   (a) certain subjects connected with the administration of justice, as set out by the then Prime Minister on 21 December 1972 at columns 455-457. These subjects include: the jurisdiction and the procedure of the Scottish courts in civil proceedings; the law relating to the enforcement of the judgements of Scottish courts in civil matters (including diligence); the law of evidence; and the law relating to prescription and the limitation of actions;
   (b) the Scottish Law Commission;
   (c) the Council on Tribunals and its Scottish committee;
   (d) rules regulating procedure before certain statutory inquiries and tribunals.

Mr. McKelvey asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland if he will list the subjects about which he has transferred questions for oral answer from himself to the Secretary of State for Scotland in the current Session of Parliament.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: In the current Session of Parliament, questions have been transferred from myself on the following subjects:

increased competition among lawyers; changes in the law relating to illegitimacy and parent and child; damage to the salmon industry; action in connection with the law on environmental health; and statistics on legal aid, assaults on the elderly, convictions and fines in salmon and sea fisheries offences.

These questions have been transferred to the Secretary of State for Scotland.

TRANSPORT

London Regional Transport

12. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with the chairman of London Regional Transport about the phasing-out of guards on London Regional Transport Underground services.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. Friend and I meet the chairman of London Regional Transport regularly to discuss a number of issues, including LRT's proposals for improvements in efficiency.

24. Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he is satisfied with the current performance of London Regional Transport against the objectives he set.

Mrs. Chalker: London Regional Transport has made good progress towards the objectives which my right hon. Friend set it last July. It expects to exceed the target reduction of 2½ per cent. in unit costs this year. Separate subsidiary companies have been established for LRT's bus, underground and bus engineering activities, and the first batch of bus routes have been put out to tender. New liaison arrangements with British Rail have been established and a new unit to improve facilities for disabled people has been set up.

Tolls

13. Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation to abolish the payment of tolls on road bridges and tunnels.

Mr. Ridley: The Government's policy is generally that esturial crossings should be paid for by users because of the exceptional savings in time and money which these expensive facilities make possible.

European Community (Shipping Cabotage)

14. Mr. Sayeed asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to meet his European Economic Community colleagues to discuss the liberalisation of shipping cabotage in the European Community.

Mr. Ridley: The Commission has tabled a draft regulation which would liberalise cabotage, together with other types of shipping service. This is an important initiative upon which the Council should act. As well as discussions in Council, I shall take every opportunity to raise this matter in bilateral discussions with the Transport Ministers of other member states.

Pedestrians and Cyclists (Accidents)

15. Sir William van Straubenzee asked the Secretary of State for Transport to what he attributes the increase in 1984 in numbers of pedestrians and cyclists hit by cars and light vans.

Mrs. Chalker: We shall be exploring all possible explanations once fuller information on casualties in 1984 becomes available.

European Community (Shipping Policy)

16. Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Transport what progress is being made towards agreeing a common European Economic Community shipping policy.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Commission has proposed that the Council should adopt six draft legal instruments, which would liberalise the internal shipping market and permit member states to act in concert in countering protectionism and unfair competition from outside the Community. I hope that the Council will give a high priority to these proposals and that the Presidency will arrange for them to be discussed at an early date. I believe the time is ripe, if not overdue, for the Community to eliminate the protectionism that exists within the EC and, having set its own house in order, to use its collective economic and political 'muscle' to resist the illiberal shipping policies of third countries.

Rural Areas (Subsidies)

17. Mr. Parris asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy concerning subsidy to public transport in rural areas.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Government broadly endorse the present overall level of subsidy paid in shire counties to bus operations, about £96 million in 1984-85. They propose, under the provisions of the Transport Bill, to make in addition transitional grants to bus operators in rural areas, some £20 million the first year, and to provide a £1 million annual grant to the Development Commission to help encourage innovative forms of transport in rural areas.

A650 Airedale Route

18. Mr. Waller asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects construction work on the A650 Airedale route to begin.

Mrs. Chalker: I hope to make a start on the Kildwick to Beechcliffe section early next year, subject to the satisfactory conclusion of the outstanding statutory procedures.

M1 Motorway

19. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to improve the condition of the M1 and the various contraflow systems in operation during the rest of 1985.

Mrs. Chalker: This year we are carrying out six major repair jobs on the M1, renewing about 15 route miles. We continually review the efficiency of our contraflow arrangements to keep traffic flowing and improve safety standards for both road users and road workers.

Untaxed Vehicles

20. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the numbers of untaxed vehicles used or parked on the roads; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: According to the most recent survey of vehicle excise duty evasion carried out last year the number of unlicensed vehicles in use on the road at any one time is estimated to be 1·1 million. The best estimate of revenue lost through evasion is just over 4 per cent.

West German Waters (Cabotage)

21. Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make representations to the West German Government seeking the extension of the rights of cabotage in West German waters to British registered ships.

Mr. Ridley: I am seeking talks with Dr. Dollinger as soon as possible, and shipping cabotage is one of the main issues I shall be raising. The present position, under which the United Kingdom cabotage trade is open to all and many EC countries' trades are closed to British vessels is inequitable and unacceptable. I want to make this point to Dr. Dollinger and to enlist German support for the draft Council regulation which would eliminate the anomaly by liberalising all cabotage trades within the Community.

British Rail (Electrification)

22. Mr. Maclean asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) route miles and (b) track miles of newly-electrified railway have been energised in the current year to date; and what is now the current total of route miles and track miles of electrified railway operated by British Rail.

Mr. David Mitchell: British Rail has electrified 26 route miles and about 50 track miles so far this year. I am glad to say that electric services are being introduced today between Colchester and Ipswich and between Dalston and North Woolwich. BR now has 2,356 route miles and some 6,215 track miles of electrified railway.

Cars (Lead-free Petrol)

25. Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received about the timetable for equipping new cars with the capacity to run on lead-free petrol.

Mrs. Chalker: Over the last nine months my department has participated in many discussions with interested organisations. The line we should take on the relevant EC directives on lead in petrol and vehicle emissions is under consideration in the Council of Ministers. The Lead in Petrol Directive, which has now been agreed, provides for 95 octane unleaded petrol to be generally available from October 1989.

The general view amongst those we have consulted is that the Vehicle Emissions Directive — on which agreement is expected this Summer — should enable member states to require all new cars with petrol engines registered from that date to be capable of running on unleaded petrol. That will put us in a position to settle arrangements with the vehicle manufacturers to phase out old models and bring in new ones — designed for the new petrol — over as short a period as is practicable around the second half of 1989.

British Rail (Investment)

23. Mr. Hayes asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the value of British Rail's investment proposals which he has approved in the current year to date.

Mr. David Mitchell: Since the beginning of 1985, I have approved three investment proposals from British Rail, worth £96·5 million altogether — 240 medium-weight diesel multiple units, worth £60 million; 25 class 87 electric locomotives, worth £24 million; and the new Windsor link line, in Manchester, worth £12·5 million.

Europe (Air Service Deregulation)

26. Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will report on progress being made to achieve air service deregulation in Europe.

Mr. Michael Spicer: We have secured liberal new arrangements for air services between the United Kingdom and the Netherlands, the Federal Republic of Germany, and Luxembourg. I am seeking to build on these in discussions with other European countries, starting with Italy, Switzerland, France, Spain and the Scandinavian countries, and to persuade the EC Council of Ministers to adopt a liberal air transport policy.

Transport Bill

27. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Transport what further representations he has received regarding the Transport Bill.

Mr. David Mitchell: Since the publication of the Transport Bill at the end of January, we have received around 1,000 letters and petitions about various aspects of the policy.

Air Traffic Control

28. Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps are presently being undertaken by the British Airports Authority to improve air traffic control systems to cope with the increased number of inward and outward flights resulting from the growth in tourism.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Air traffic control services in the United Kingdom, including aerodrome navigation services at the BAA airports, are provided by the National Air Traffic Services, a partnership between the Civil Aviation Authority and the Ministry of Defence. I am satisfied that the services provided are adequate to meet peak demand and will continue to be so in the future.

All-purpose Trunk Roads

29. Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he is satisfied with the current condition of all-purpose trunk roads.

Mrs. Chalker: There is a backlog of repairs which we aim to reduce as fast as available resources allow.

North Circular Road

Mr. Portillo asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the statistics for the number of fatal road accidents over the last three years for which figures are available on that stretch of the north circular road known as Telford road.

Mrs. Chalker: No fatal accidents have been recorded in police reports for this stretch of road in the years 1982, 1983, or 1984.

Vehicle Parking Restrictions

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the organisations which have asked him to implement section 7 of the Road Traffic Act 1974 in the interests of pedestrian safety.

Mrs. Chalker: In the last three years I have received representations from

Colchester Council of Voluntary Service
Copgrove Area Residents Association
East Saltney Community Council
Headstone Ratepayers Association

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Transport why he has not so far implemented section 7 of the Road Traffic Act 1974.

Mrs. Chalker: Because of the difficulties local authorities and the police have seen in undertaking the necessary preparatory and enforcement work.

Midlands Link Motorways

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Transport when the repairs to the parapet walls and rails of the midlands link motorways will be concluded; and how many claims he has received for extra time from contractors.

Mrs. Chalker: It is anticipated that it will take a further two years to complete the programme of parapet rail repairs on the midlands link motorways. Two claims for extra time have been made by the contractor working on Oldbury viaduct.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the reply of 28 March, Official Report column 287, if the holding down bolts of the central reservation barrier of the Oldbury viaduct on the midlands link motorway have been checked.

Mrs. Chalker: I will answer this question shortly.

Motorway Repairs (Grout)

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the reply of 28 March, Official Report, column 287, if he will give details of the change in specification for grout in motorway repair contracts; and if all tenderers were informed of the change.

Mrs. Chalker: The moisture absorption rate was marginally varied from 5 per cent to 7½ per cent. This change was made during the course of the current contract and therefore the contractor was fully aware of the change.

"Highway Code"

Mrs. Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Transport how often the "Highway Code" has been revised since 1955; and when the next revision is expected.

Mrs. Chalker: The Highway Code was revised in 1959, 1969 and 1978. Since 1982 there has been some updating to reflect legislative changes. I am at present considering the timing of the next full revision.

Docks (London and Liverpool)

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the annual increment in basic wages expressed as a percentage paid to registered dockworkers in (a) the Port of London Authority and (b) the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board in each of the last five years.

Mr. David Mitchell: The information requested is as follows:

Percentage on basic wage

Year	*PLA	MHDC†
1980	10·9	18·0
1981	7·3	14·0
1982	4·3	10·0
1983	3·2	9·1
1984	4·0	7·4

* For a grade 1 registered dock worker, the figures for 1983 and 1984 exclude the consolidation of some pay elements into the basic rate as part of an agreement made after mediation.

† The annual increase in the company's wage bill in respect of registered dock workers was about two thirds of these figures.

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the number of hours of overtime worked by registered dockworkers in (a) the Port of London Authority and (b) the Mersey Docks and Harbour Company in each of the last five years.

Mr. David Mitchell: We do not have this information about the Port of London Authority. The average numbers of hours of overtime per week worked by the registered dock workers employed by the Mersey Docks and Harbour Company were:

	Hours
1980	2·0
1981	1·7
1982	2·0
1984	2·5

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the cost to the Port of London Authority of working days lost in stoppages in 1983.

Mr. David Mitchell: We do not have information on this for 1983.

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the number of working days lost in stoppages in the Port of London Authority in 1984 and the cost thereof to the authority.

Mr. David Mitchell: The PLA has estimated some 40,800 man days, mainly due to two national dock strikes, at a loss of some £1·25 million revenue.

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the number of working days lost in stoppages in the Mersey Docks and Harbour Company in 1984 and the cost thereof to the company.

Mr. David Mitchell: The company has estimated 48,200 man days for all employees, due almost entirely to two national dock strikes, at a cost of some £4 million loss of revenue and £2 million profit.

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the trading profit or loss of (a) the Port of London Authority and (b) the Mersey Docks and Harbour Company in each of the years 1979 to 1984 after interest payable.

Mr. David Mitchell: The information requested is as follows:

Profit/(loss)—£ million

	PLA	MDHC
1979	(7·25)	(7·46)
1980	(12·51)	(6·25)
1981	(7·16)	(6·72)
1982	(3·32)	(14·22)
1983	(1·46)	7·47
1984	*	0·81

* Not yet published.

Note: The figures for the MDHC and for the PLA in 1983 are after depreciation, interest and exceptional items and before taxation. Up to and including 1982 the PLA's accounts were constructed on a different basis. The figures quoted exclude certain restructuring items. Copies of the PLA's annual reports and accounts are in the Library.

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) in what year he expects the Mersey Docks and Harbour Company to be able to trade profitably without the benefit of any financial assistance from the central Government;

(2) in what year he expects the Port of London Authority to be able to trade profitably without the benefit of any financial assistance from the central Government.

Mr. David Mitchell: That will depend primarily on how quickly they can match their work forces to the requirements of present and future patterns of trade.

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many acres of derelict or unused land are currently in the ownership of (a) the Port of London Authority and (b) the Mersey Docks and Harbour Company; and how many acres have been sold in each of the last five years;

(2) what information he has as to the amount of money (a) the Port of London Authority and (b) the Mersey Docks and Harbour Company have received in each of the last five years from the sale or other disposal of land and buildings.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Mersey Docks and Harbour Company is actively discussing with private developers the possible development of some 150 acres of land for non-operational purposes. Amounts of land disposed of, and proceeds from sales, which by judicial decision are paid to the company's stockholders, are as follows:

Year	Acres	Proceeds £'000
1980	5·2	*118
1981	439·11	*3,600
1983	1·75	26
1982	43·0	*245
1984	Nil	Nil

* Includes advance payments for sales, and for vesting in the Merseyside Development Corporation, where the final prices have not yet been determined.

Land owned by the PLA that is not in part-operational use is either in occupation or under negotiation for development. The amounts of land sold by the PLA and its proceeds from such sales, are as follows:

Year	Acres	Proceeds £ million
1980	51	0·53
1981	57	0·74
1982	8	0·02
1983	11	0·20

In addition, large areas of land were vested in and sold by agreement to the London Docklands Development Corporation in 1981 and 1983 respectively. The final prices to be paid have still to be settled, but the PLA has received on account some £14 million.

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current average gross pay of a registered dockworker in (a) the Port of London Authority and (b) the Mersey Docks and Harbour Company.

Mr. David Mitchell: The current average gross weekly pay of a registered dockworker in the PLA is £190 and in the MDHC £189. The average gross weekly pay of registered dock workers in the industry as a whole in the first quarter of 1985 was £246·31.

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what steps he has taken to satisfy himself of progress by the Mersey Docks and Harbour Company towards eliminating restrictive working practices; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what steps he has taken to satisfy himself of progress by the Port of London Authority towards eliminating restrictive working practices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I and my officials keep in close touch with both undertakings. As I said in my answer to my hon. Friend on 8 May at column 397, both have reported significant productivity improvements in many of their operations. However, I do not consider it appropriate to make detailed inquiries about matters which are within the two undertakings' day-to-day management responsibilities.

Roads Programme

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he is satisfied with progress on the execution of the motorway and trunk road building programme in the last financial year.

Mr. Ridley: We made excellent progress on the national road construction programme in 1984-85. Fifteen main contracts were finished early and 16 others were ahead of schedule. Expenditure at £806 million matched the provision.

Consultants

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all of the consultants employed in connection with the Transport Bill and "Buses" White Paper, the nature of projects for which they were employed and the cost to his Department.

Mr. Ridley [pursuant to the reply, 30 April 1985, c. 94]: Professor M. E. Beesley, Dr. S. Glaister and Mr. M. Buchanan have been employed as consultants in the preparation of the "Buses" White Paper and subsequently; Dr. Glaister has also done work for the Department on the mathematical modelling of bus service provision. Messrs. Steer, Davies and Gleave, in association with Messrs. Thornton Baker, have been conducting a study of tendering arrangements for subsidised services, and Messrs. Buchanans is conducting a study of bus stations and bus stops. In accordance with previous practice the Department has employed, on a consultancy basis, an adviser on the bus industry. For six months in 1984 the adviser was Mr. F. P. Groves, and subsequently it has been Mr. G. G. Hilditch. The total cost to the Department of this work, and a very small commission by Cooper Lybrand on NBC, has been £137,662. In addition the Department's transport and road research laboratory has a continuing programme of research on a range of topics, some concerning the bus industry, and from time to time employs consultants.

WALES

Dental Technicians

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many dental technicians (a) are employed by health authorities in Wales, and (b) also undertake private contract work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: As at 30 September 1983 there were 34 (whole-time equivalents) dental technicians employed by health authorities in Wales. Information is not held on the numbers undertaking private work.

Educational Finance

Sir Raymond Gower asked the Secretary of State for Wales what evidence has been furnished to him of shortages of school books and equipment due to inadequacy of capitation allowances and in relation to how many schools.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: Such shortages have been noted in reports by Her Majesty's Inspectorate, and in the large volume of correspondence dealing with education matters the Department has received. School capitation allowances are determined by the local education authorities from within the resources available to them. In real terms, the level of local authority current expenditure on education, excluding school meals and milk, has remained virtually constant for a number of years, while the number of pupils in schools has declined markedly. A school by school analysis of the correspondence could be made only at disproportionate cost.

ENERGY

Yorkshire Electricity Board

Mr. Fox asked the Secretary of State for Energy what progress has been made by the Yorkshire electricity board in following up the report on the board by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, published in September 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have now received the second response of the Yorkshire electricity board to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report published in September 1983 (Cmnd. 9014). This describes progress on steps taken by the board to meet the commission's conclusions. I am placing copies of the board's response in the Library of the House.

The board has responded positively to many of the MMC's recommendations and significant progress has been made since my statement to the House on 28 February 1984 concerning the YEB's initial response.

The commission's central conclusions dealt with the board's role in setting key medium-term objectives and the need for quantified goals based on those objectives to be delegated throughout the organisation. I am disappointed that in certain areas the board felt unable to include in its response specific proposals for action in response to the commission's recommendations. I shall, in particular, take a close interest in the board's progress in setting and achieving quantified cost-reduction objectives as recommended by the commission. The new chairman of the board has informed me that he is in the process of making organisational and other changes with this aim in view. I have asked him to report his progress to me not later than the end of June this year.

While I note that the board has decided not to establish an audit committee, I am pleased to see that it is taking steps to increase the participation of the non-executive members in the formulation of such objectives and in the consideration of strategic questions. I also welcome the fact that the board's decision to reduce the number of YEB areas from seven to four will facilitate the devolution of responsibility and objectives to appropriate managerial levels.

The role of non-executive members is an issue which is relevant throughout the industry and my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary has recently offered guidance on this to all non-executive board members. Copies of this guidance have been placed in the library.

In my statement on 28 February 1984 I indicated my intention of following the board's progress in responding to the commission's conclusions on its manpower plan (conclusions 3 and 33) and the varying costs of maintenance in the different board areas (conclusion 26). I note that a severance scheme has now been introduced in relation to the reorganisation which will enhance the board's ability to achieve the optimum rate of staff rundown and that the board is continuing to carry through a detailed analysis of comparative maintenance costs. The scope for further progress in both these spheres should be improved by the board's initiative in reducing the number of areas.

In conclusion 36 of the report the commission proposed separate and fully detailed profit and loss accounts for both the appliance retailing and contracting activities. In agreement with the Electricity Council I announced last July measures applying to all area boards, including revised cost allocation guidelines, separate accounts and financial objectives, which fully meet the commission's concern and should help to demonstrate that the boards are competing profitably and fairly in those activities. The issue of supply security standards (raised in conclusion 20) also has industry-wide implications and is presently under review by the Electricity Council.

I should like to take this opportunity to convey the Government's thanks to the MMC for its thorough and stimulating investigation. Its findings have clearly been of considerable use to the Yorkshire board in helping it reduce costs and increase efficiency, and have also been of benefit throughout the industry.

ENVIRONMENT

Rating

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies his Department has made of the effect of rate levels upon investment and employment.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Department commissioned a study by the department of land economy of the university of Cambridge on the general effects of non-domestic rates on the location of employment in England and Wales over the period 1974 to 1981 and the report was published by the authors on 6 March 1985.

Copies of the report, and of a letter I have sent asking for the comments of interested bodies, are in the library. The Department is also aware of cases in which extreme rate levels and increases in rates have deterred individual firms from investing or from creating employment in the areas affected.

RAF Molesworth

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what contracts have been awarded to which companies to work on Molesworth base; and if he will list the companies and value of contracts awarded to them and the date the contract was awarded.

Sir George Young: A contract for the erection of a perimeter fence, value £3·25 million was awarded to Tarmac Construction Ltd. on 15 January 1985 and a further contract for the provision of temporary administrative and domestic accommodation, value £2·07 million, was awarded to the same firm on 5 February 1985.

Greater London Council

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether he will describe the financial provisions and the amounts allocated in those provisions to support the specialist services provided by the central computer services department within the Greater London council;

(2) whether he will describe the financial provisions and the amounts allocated in those provisions to support the specialist services provided by the supplies department within the Greater London council;

(3) whether he will describe the financial provisions and the amounts allocated in those provisions to support the specialist services provided by scientific and technical services within the Greater London council;

(4) whether he will describe the financial provisions and the amounts allocated in those provisions to support the specialist services provided by the intelligence and information services within the Greater London council.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Financial provision for these services is a matter for the GLC.

Housing Defects

Miss Boothroyd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money is expected to be made available to local authorities under section 12 of the Housing Defects Act 1984 in the current and next financial years, respectively.

Sir George Young: As my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Construction indicated to the hon. Lady in his replies to her of 10 May, at column 523-24, no designations under section 12 of the Act have yet been made. As Exchequer contributions to local authorities are made in response to claims submitted after the end of the financial year in which the authority incurred the cost, no contributions will be paid in 1985-86. I cannot yet estimate what contributions might be payable in 1986-87.

Pesticides

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the lowest known concentration in parts per million of any particular health risk arising from traces of atrazine, simazine, lindane or dieldrin pesticides in water.

Mr. Macfarlane: In 1984 WHO set drinking water guidelines values of 0·0003 parts per million for dieldrin and 0·03 parts per million for lindane. No guideline values have been set for triazine herbicides, which include atrazine and simazine, but it has been calculated from available data that concentrations found in drinking water have a safety factor of the order of several thousand.

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the aerial transport of organo-chlorine pesticides in the context of inputs of these and other substances into the North sea following the report commissioned by his Department from the Institute of Offshore Engineering at Heriot-Watt university; and what further research is planned on this matter.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Institute of Offshore Engineering examined the available information on this subject as part of a wider review for the Department of the literature on inputs of contaminants to the North sea. The review is available, at cost, from the university. It quotes estimates made by the Netherlands Organisation for Applied Scientific Research (TNO) of 10-100 tonnes annually of HCH (alpha and gamma), 10-160 tonnes of PCBs and 2-25 tonnes each of DDT (and its metabolites), and of the "drins" (aldrin, dieldrin, endrin). These estimates are tentative, being based on very few measurements, but are probably the best available. The United Kingdom therefore referred to them in preparing for the North sea conference in Bremen last year and similar estimates for HCH and for PCBs were quoted in the paper on the "Quality Status of the North Sea" which synthesised the scientific contributions made by the participating states. A working group has been set up by the Paris commission to examine the whole question of atmospheric inputs to the sea and is considering research into the methodology and accuracy of the estimated inputs. The United Kingdom is participating actively in this group.

Acid Deposition

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the estimated annual cost of repairs and maintenance to buildings as a result of deposited acidity in the United Kingdom;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report those historic or listed buildings known to his Department as being deleteriously affected by acid deposition;

(3) if he will list the cathedrals and similar buildings in the United Kingdom known to his Department to have stained glass windows with damage attributable to acid deposition.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: As I said in answer to the hon. Member for Knowsley, North (Mr. Kilroy-Silk) on 14 March, at column 214, acid deposition is not the sole cause of environmental acidification, and the damage that it causes cannot readily be distinguished from other forms of damage. It is not, therefore, possible to estimate the annual cost of repairs and maintenance resulting from such deposition. My Department has a substantial programme of monitoring and research, and I expect reports within the next 16 months which should help in defining the scale of the problem and in elucidating its causes.

Vehicle Emissions (Control)

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the percentage reduction (a) NOx (nitrogen oxides), (b) hydrocarbons and (c) atmospheric ozone likely to be achieved by the introduction of vehicle emission control in the United Kingdom by the years 1995, 2005 and 2010, respectively.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: Gaseous emissions from vehicles have been controlled in the United Kingdom since the early 1970s, and the progressive tightening of standards since then will continue to have an effect well into the 1990s. But because the European Community has still to reach final agreement on the limit values to be included in a new directive on vehicle emissions coming into effect in the late 1980s and early 1990s, it is not possible to predict what further emission controls might come into force in the United Kingdom, or to estimate what the overall effects on individual pollutants might be.

Alkaline Aggregate Reaction

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the annual cost of damage to concrete structures in the United Kingdom as a result of alkaline aggregate reaction.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: No reliable estimate is available of the annual cost of damage to concrete structures in the United Kingdom as a result of alkali-aggregate reaction. To obtain such an estimate would require a survey of all concrete structures.

Low Sulphur Cement

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the percentage of cement employed in the construction industry which is low sulphur cement.

Sir George Young: The percentage of sulphate-resisting Portland cement used by the construction industry in 1984 was 5·9 per cent. of the total 12·7 million tonnes of cement used.

Local Authorities (Block Grant)

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from local authorities regarding the non-policing costs of the recent miners' dispute arising from local authorities fulfilling their statutory obligations under child care, school meals and milk, and social security and housing benefit regulations; and if he will disregard such costs for the purposes of block grant penalties.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: I have received a number of representations from local authorities and their associations for such expenditure to be disregarded for grant penalty purposes, which I shall consider carefully before I take further decisions on grant abatement for 1984-85.

Land Reclamation

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what study his Department has made of the wildlife benefits to be accrued from the cessation of drainage and subsequent withdrawal of land protected by sea defences and brought into agricultural use by land reclamation since 1955, adjacent to coastlines; and if he will make any such research available in the Library.

Mr. Macfarlane: My Department has not carried out any such study. The Nature Conservancy Council is currently investigating the effects on wildlife of land reclamation over the past 10 years. The first results of this research are not expected to be available until some time in 1986.

Asbestos-contaminated Material (Faslane)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated cost of the transportation of asbestos-contaminated material from the site at Faslane to its destination.

Sir George Young: A contract to remove some 3,000 cubic metres of asbestos-contaminated waste from Faslane has been let for the sum of £630,500, of which approximately two thirds is attributable to the cost of transporting the material.

Defective Housing

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the number of defective houses which each local authority may be required to purchase; and if he will estimate the cost of this commitment for each local authority in England.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 13 May 1985, c. 26]: In 1983 local authorities estimated that there were 16,500 prefabricated reinforced concrete (PRC) dwellings in private ownership in the United Kingdom of the types designated now by my right hon. Friend. My Department has estimated that the total cost of assistance to owners under the Act over a number of years will be in the region of £170 million to £250 million at current prices. The proportion of owners assisted through repurchase, rather than by reinstatement grant, cannot be forecast reliably at this stage, and the costs to each authority of repurchase therefore cannot yet be estimated.

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what assistance he is providing to enable local authorities to acquire houses which are regarded as seriously defective.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 13 May 1985, c. 26]: Local housing authorities which repurchase defective dwellings designated by my right hon. Friend under section 1 of the Housing Defects Act 1984 will generally be assisted by way of an Exchequer contribution of 75 per cent. of the difference between the cost to them of the acquisition and the defective value of the property. Where the dwelling was sold by another public authority, the contribution will be 100 per cent. of the difference.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Silk

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has recently held discussions or received representations from any companies or trade associations concerning restrictions on the import of Chinese silk; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: I have recently received representations from one company concerning restrictions on the import of Chinese silk. Its letter was forwarded to me by my hon. Friend, to whom I replied on 27 March 1985. My officials have been in contact with companies during the administration of the 1985 Chinese silk quota and have informed the Silk Association of Great Britain of the arrangements for the administration of the 1985 chinese silk quota.

Privatisation Programme (Fees and Commissions)

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the fees and commissions which will be paid to City institutions in respect of the forthcoming sale of shares in British Aerospace; and on what basis those fees and commissions will be calculated.

Mr. Butcher: The following commissions will be paid to City institutions, all calculated on the basis of the fully paid offer price of 375p per share:

Underwriters: 0·3 per cent.

Brokers to the offer: 0·125 per cent.

Priority applicants: 1·5 per cent. on shares placed firm, 1·25 per cent. on the balance of their applications.

The total cost of these commissions to the Government will be approximately £6,583,000 (plus VAT=£7,570,000).

Lazard Brothers and Co., Ltd. will also receive a fee for their work as financial advisers to the Government.

Stockbrokers, licensed dealers, members of the National Association of Securities Dealers and Investment Managers, and exempted dealers will be eligible for commission on applications submitted by them on behalf of members of the public, to the extent accepted, at the rate of 1¼ per cent. of the offer price.

It will not be possible to estimate the amount of these commissions until all applications have been examined.

Steelworkers (Shotton)

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he intends publishing data obtained by his Department on the post-redundancy experiences of Shotton steelworkers.

Mr. Butcher: I do not intend to publish individual records provided in confidence. The only aggregate data held in the Department of Trade and Industry concerns total payments made to redundant Shotton steelworkers according to the different categories of benefit provided under the iron and steel employees' readaptation benefits scheme. This information is available and is set out below. Bearing in mind that many of the 7,977 recipients have received more than one category of benefit during their period of entitlement, I think that this information should be treated with caution as a guide to post-redundancy experiences.

Early Pensions	4,344,110
Make-up of earnings in new employment	5,448,048
Scheme unemployment benefit	13,439,437
Training support	5,219,491

Ford Motor Company (Body Panels)

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) whether, in the light of the recent report of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, the Ford Motor Company Ltd. has agreed to give undertakings to the Office of Fair Trading concerning the manufacture by other companies of replacement car body panels; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he expects the Director General of Fair Trading to complete his current discussions with the Ford Motor Company Ltd. in connection with the manufacture of replacement car body panels.

Mr. Fletcher: I shall make a statement on the position when discussions with Ford are concluded.

PRIME MINISTER

Social Security Reviews

Q8. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government will make it their policy not to act on the reports of the four social security review teams until the proposed Treasury Green Paper on personal taxation has been published.

The Prime Minister: The Government hope to publish their proposals for the future of social security in a Green Paper soon after the Whitsun recess, and the Green Paper on personal taxation later in the year. These proposals will be consistent.

East Clwyd (Industry)

Q34. Dr. Marek asked the Prime Minister what special measures she intends to take to attract industry to East Clwyd as a result of the proposed closure of Courtaulds' works in the area.

The Prime Minister: East Clwyd has been and continues to be an attractive location for companies. Since 1983 the Welsh Office has had 33 acceptances of regional selective assistance in the Wrexham travel-to-work area alone promising nearly 1,400 new jobs and safeguarding 1,200 existing jobs with an investment of £7 million. Recent major inward investment decisions to locate in Wrexham have been taken by the Japanese companies, Sharp and Brother. Other parts of Clwyd have also been successful in attracting new investment, most recently illustrated by Data Magnetic Ltd's decision announced on 1 May to locate its thin film disc facility on the Deeside industrial park, creating 250 new jobs. Proposals by the county council and the borough councils most directly affected by Courtaulds' proposed closures are being considered by the Welsh Office.

Sri Lanka (Samanala Wewa Dam)

Q59. Mr. Michael Morris asked the Prime Minister when she expects to be in a position to respond to the President of Sri Lanka's request that Her Majesty's Government support the Samanala Wewa dam scheme.

The Prime Minister: I told the President when I met him last month that a decision about this request would be made after my return to London. I expect to be able to give him our response shortly.

Nationalised Industries

Q24. Mr. Eggar asked the Prime Minister if she will take further steps to introduce competition and private capital into the existing nationalised industries.

The Prime Minister: The Government remain committed to privatisation as a major element in its strategy to promote efficiency, increase incentives and widen ownership. We will continue to look for opportunities to advance this. Transferring state businesses into private ownership increases business efficiency, whether through competition or in other ways; allows for employees to take a direct stake in the companies in which they work, leading to major changes in attitudes; and gives everyone the opportunity to own a real share in the nation's assets. The long-term significance of these changes cannot be over-estimated.

General Belgrano

Q112. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister if she will place before the Foreign Affairs Committee Sir Brian Tovey's report on matters relating to the sinking of the General Belgrano; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have seen suggestions in press stories that reference to such a report was made in the papers which were shown to the Foreign Affairs Committee on 6 March. It was agreed between the Government and the Committee's Chairman that, following that occasion, there would be no further disclosure of material. I repeat that the indications that the Belgrano was a threat to the task force were clear and unequivocal.

Engagements

Mr. Parry asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 14 May.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 14 May.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others including one with the President of the Cameroon. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I hope to have an audience of Her Majesty the Queen.

Nurses (Pay)

Mr. Pavitt asked the Prime Minister if she has now replied to the letter from the General Secretary of the Royal College of Nursing about the pay of nurses; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Yes; in my reply of 7 May I told the General Secretary of the Royal College of Nursing that the Review Body report on nurses pay is now being considered by Ministers, together with other review body reports, and that an announcement will be made in due course.

TRANSPORT

Accident Statistics

Mr. Portillo asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether three-lane single carriageway road sections display worse accident statistics than two-lane single-carriageway and duel carriageway sections; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Personal injury accident rates on roads with rural characteristics, having speed limits over 40 mph and excluding accidents at junctions, depend on a number of factors in addition to road markings (and road width). However, on average, the rates for good three-lane single carriageways are about the same as those for good two-lane carriageways of the same overall width and characteristics; typical rates for these types of carriageways are about 0·20 accidents per million vehicle kilometres compared with 0·11 for new purpose-built dual carriageways. But, the sample of three-lane carriageways on which this statement is based is necessarily small because since the early 1960s the Department has not marked single carriageways in three lanes except in two cases. The first includes lengths of road having good alignment and exhibiting good long-term accident rates. The second case is that of "climbing lanes" where the two uphill lanes are given priority and the marking system involves the use of double white lines to maintain safety.

There is relatively little three-lane single carriageway trunk road with urban characteristics having speed limits of 40 mph or less.

Motorway Service Stations

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions a franchise has been withdrawn from any company, or companies, during the life of the motorway system as a whole, since the franchise system came into operation.

Mr. Ridley: None.

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many types of franchise exist in relation to service stations on the M62 motorway between Liverpool and Kingston upon Hull; and if he will indicate the names and geographical locations of the company or companies involved and their responsibilities to retain continuation of their franchise.

Mr. Ridley: There are four motorway service areas on the M62. Each is operated under the terms of a 50-year lease from the Secretary of State. The service areas and their operators are:

Service Area	Operators
Burtonwood, near Warrington.	Trusthouse Forte Catering Limited, Dunstable,, Bedfordshire.
Birch, near Bury.	Granada Motorway Services Limited, Dunstable, Bedfordshire.
Hartshead Moor, near Brighouse.	Welcome Break Limited, Chiswick, London W4.
Ferrybridge, near Knottingley.	Granada Motorway Services Limited.

The terms of the leases are fairly standard. I sent a copy to the right hon. Member on 8 May 1985.

Oil Tankers (Minch)

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Transport what studies his Department has made of the environmental consequences for United Kingdom shores and coastal waters of collisions or accidental spillage from crude oil-carrying tankers in the Minch.

Mr. David Mitchell: I refer to my answer given on 3 April, at column 628.

British Rail (Catering)

Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has had any recent discussions with the chairman of British Rail in relation to the catering facilities available on trains and the possibility of these services being carried out by private contractors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: BR is making train and station catering a priority in applying its new criteria for competitive supply of services. In particular it is examining the costing and tendering arrangements necessary to facilitate competition in this area. The board is keeping us informed on progress.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Farmers (Income)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year since 1955 the net income of farmers compared to the amount paid out to farmers from public funds directly and indirectly.

Mr. MacGregor: Details of the net income of farmers and of public expenditure on national grant schemes and subsidies and since 1972-73 under the CAP are contained in the "Annual Review of Agriculture" White Paper series and the departmental "Net Income Calculation Historical Series Booklet"; both of which are available in the Library of the House.

Milk

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the output of milk in each European Economic Community country in each of the past five years compared wih 1970, 1960 and 1957.

Mr. MacGregor: The table shows whole milk production from all milk animals in each European Community country in the years 1960, 1970 and 1979 to 1983 inclusive. 1984 figures are not yet available and 1957 figures are not available on a comparable basis.

Fungicides

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 21 February, Official Report, column 582, concerning economically significant resistant strains in relation to fungicides, what is the economic cost of fungicide resistance to benomyl, carbondazim and thiophonate methyl, respectively; and what are the alternative chemicals in each case.

Mrs. Fenner: I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he anticipates announcing overall milk quotas for the current financial year.

Mr. MacGregor: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply which my right hon. Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Forth) on 7 May 1985, at column 321.

Beef

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for 1973 and each of the past five years the common guide and intervention prices for adult bovine animals, the amount bought for intervention, the amount of surplus production and the total cost to the European Economic Community budget, together with the cost of the United Kingdom beef variable premium scheme and any other arrangements for subventions to beef farmers.

Mr. MacGregor: Information on institutional prices, production and consumption and expenditure through the Community budget is published by the EC Commission in "The Agricultural situation in the Community" report 1984 for the three most recent years for which data are available and in previous reports for earlier years. Copies are available in the Library of the House. In addition to expenditure through the Community budget, United Kingdom exchequer expenditure on the beef variable premium, suckler cow premium and hill low schemes was as follows:

	1973	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984
Beef variable premium	—	45·0	19·6	7·0	73·9	86·8

Hill low compensatory allowances	—	18·5	28·2	29·1	29·0	28·9

Quantities of beef bought into intervention were as follows:

Broadleaved Woodlands

Dr. Cunningham asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list in the Official Report the names and locations of the broadleaved woodlands clearfelled under licence for conversion to agriculture in 1982-83, 1983-84 and 1984-85 in the Forestry Commission's south-west England conservancy.

Mrs. Fenner: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Hedgerows

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the miles of hedgerows in England and Wales (a) removed and (b) planted, respectively, for each year since 1975.

Mrs. Fenner: The information on which to base such estimates is not currently available. We do, however, hope to be able to make some estimates of the amount of hedgerow planting and removal in recent years from my Department's current survey of environmental topics on farms.

Straw Burning

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the extent of hedgerow and tree damage in Worcestershire from straw burning in 1983 and 1984, respectively.

Mrs. Fenner: My Department does not keep detailed statistics of damage to hedgerows and trees, but I understand that there was a general improvement in burning practices in that county in 1984.

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to regulate the practice of straw burning in 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: The Government will again be drawing the attention of the farming community to the need to observe relevant local byelaws and to adopt good standards of practice in line with the policy adopted for the 1984 harvest, which generated a substantially lower volume of complaints than in 1983.

Animals (Slaughter)

Mr. Greg Knight asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will now introduce legislation to ensure that stunning and sticking of an animal is performed consecutively with no intervening delay, when the operation is being done single-handedly; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: This matter is the subject of a recommendation by the Farm Animal Welfare Council in its report on the welfare of livestock (red meat animals) at the time of slaughter. The Government are considering the council's recommendations.

Pesticides

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to publish the reviews carried out by the Advisory Committee on Pesticides of aminotriazole, chlorbromuron, ethylene dibromide and ethylene dichloride.

Mrs. Fenner: All of these compounds were reviewed by the Advisory Committee on Pesticides during 1984 and information on them will be contained in the committee's joint annual report, which is to be published this year.

Land Reclamation

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the annual and 10-yearly cost of maintaining the drainage and sea defences of land reclaimed adjacent to coastlines respectively, since 1955; and if he will estimate the net cost to the United Kingdom on an annual basis of such land including agricultural support grant aid.

Mrs. Fenner: Information on which to make these estimates is not available.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Namibia

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on recent events in Namibia.

Mr. Rifkind: We do not recognise the new interim administrative arrangements for Namibia announced by the South African Government in April. They do not affect South Africa's responsibility to implement the United Nations plan, nor do they have any bearing on the negotiations currently underway towards achieving Namibian independence on the basis of that plan.

United Nations

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the cost of the United Kingdom's membership of the United Nations for the year 1984-85 and the projected cost for the year 1985-86; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: The United Kingdom's contribution to the United Nations regular budget in the financial year 1984-85, at our assessed rate of 4·67 per cent., was £23,342,619. In addition, the United Kingdom contributes voluntarily to many United Nations programmes and agencies such as the United Nations Children Fund or the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control, and pays assessed contributions to the regular budgets of the specialised agencies of the United Nations system such as the Food and Agriculture Organisation or the World Health Organisation. Our regular budget contribution for 1986-87 cannot yet be accurately determined: the budget for the biennium 1986-87 will be settled at the United Nations General Assembly later this year. But we are urging that the new budget should involve no real growth and that our assessed rate of contribution in the next biennium should be similar to the present rate.

Gibraltar Airfield

Mr. Stanbrook asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Spanish Government regarding their restriction on the use of Gibraltar airfield by British military aircraft; what is the nature of the restrictions; and when they were imposed.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: We have made clear to the Spanish Government our view that it would be right for them to make similar arrangements for military aircraft as those recently announced for civil aircraft. The Spanish Government originally introduced a prohibited airspace zone in the Algeciras region in April 1967, the limits of which are set out in document No. 22 in Cmnd. 3325, "Further Documents on Gibraltar, October 1966-June 1967".

Mr. Stanbrook asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reason has been given to him by the Spanish Government for not lifting all restrictions on aircraft using Gibraltar airfield.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: As I informed my hon. Friend on 7 May, at column 320, discussions are continuing with the Spanish authorities. It would be usual for these to remain confidential until concluded.

Immigration Offices

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he intends to open an immigration office in Mirpur.

Mr. Renton: I visited Mirpur in January and have considered the matter carefully in the light of a number of representations and a recommendation in the Commission for Racial Equality report. The journey from Mirpur to Islamabad takes only two to three hours by road; there is a regular and inexpensive bus service. I do not believe that there is any justification for opening an immigration office in Mirpur, particularly in view of the limited resources available to us for overseas representation.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he intends to open an immigration office in Sylhet.

Mr. Renton: In the light of various representations and a recommendation in the Commission for Racial Equality report, I have considered the matter carefully, particularly since my visit to Bangladesh in January. Applicants come from the large Syhlet district, not only from Sylhet town, and Dhaka is more convenient than Sylhet town for many of them. The journey from Sylhet to Dhaka is not expensive and there are good road, rail and air links. The problem for most applicants is getting from their village to Sylhet and not from Sylhet to Dhaka. Operational problems relating to the opening of the office would be formidable and I cannot accept that the expenditure on such a project would be justified.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Blind Person's Allowance

Mr. Freeman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the figures for the last available financial year of the number of taxpayers claiming blind person's allowance and the estimated cost to the Exchequer of such relief.

Mr. Moore: It is estimated that about 30,000 blind people will benefit from the blind person's tax allowance in 1985-86, at a revenue cost of £3 million.

EC (Agriculture Expenditure)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish a table in the Official Report showing what the maximum level of spending under the European Economic Community budget would be for agriculture, assuming that total spending under the budget reaches the new maximum under the value added tax contribution, that the outturn for the current year is the same as the agreed provision for agriculture to the extent that this is relevant and that value added tax and other collections are the same as budgeted for in the current year, apart from the percentage increase from 1 per cent. to 1·4 per cent.

Mr. Ian Stewart: In accordance with article 4 of the Council conclusions on budget discipline the financial guideline for agriculture which will first apply for 1986 is calculated by reference to agricultural expenditure in 1984 and 1985 and to the rate of growth of the own resources base. The Commission has calculated, on the basis of provisional estimates of these variables, that the financial guideline for 1986 will be 20·65 billion ecu. This figure will be subject to some change as revised estimates and then outturn data become available.

The financial guideline figure is not affected by the proposed increase in the VAT ceiling from 1 to 1·4 per cent. because, in accordance with article 2 of the Council conclusions on budget discipline, the increase in the own resources base is assessed on a comparable basis from one year to the next.

Exchange Rate

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the change in the real exchange rate of the £ sterling based on (a) gross domestic product deflators and (b) relative export prices since the fourth quarter of 1976 against the US dollar, the Japanese yen and each of the European Economic Community Six currencies for the latest period for which figures are available; and if he will include figures comparing the current nominal exchange rate with the average rate for the latest period.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The percentage changes between the fourth quarter of 1976, when sterling's nominal exchange rates were exceptionally low against these currencies, and the fourth quarter of 1984, were as follows:

	Real		Nominal
	Based on GDP deflators	Based on relative wholesale export prices
Dollar/Sterling	−6·2	−8·5	−26·3
Yen/Sterling	+7·6	+3·1	−38·3
Deutschemark/Sterling	+48·1	+38·6	−6·6
French franc/Sterling	+37·3	+37·2	+36·7
Belgian franc*/Sterling	+87·8	+73·8	+23·0
Italian lira/Sterling	+5·7	+25·4	+61·4
Dutch guilder/Sterling	+37·6	+44·0	+0·8

*The Luxembourg franc has the same external value as the Belgian franc.

Civil Service (Dispersal)

Mr. Wilson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the numbers of Civil Service and related public service jobs in Aberdeen, Dundee, Edinburgh and Glasgow at the last date for which figures are available and express these as percentages of the working population in each city, and the total of such jobs in Scotland, respectively.

Mr. Hayhoe: The table shows non-industrial civil servants employed in the four local authority districts at 1 January 1985 as numbers, as percentages of the working population in the travel-to-work areas for those districts and as percentages of all non-industrial civil servants in Scotland. Corresponding data are not available in such geographical detail for industrial staff of the civil service or for other public service jobs.

Non-industrial civil service staff in Post at 1 January 1985*

City	*Staff in Post	As a percentage of the working population in the travel-to-work area†	As a percentage of all non-industrial civil servants in Scotland
Aberdeen	1,761	1·1	3·6
Dundee	1,067	1·1	2·2
Edinburgh	12,337	4·1	25·5
Glasgow	9,975	1·5	20·6

*Full-time equivalents.

†The only working population figures available are for travel-to-work areas which are larger than the cities themselves. The data used relate to June 1984.

Unleaded Petrol

Mr. Woodcock asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether it is the intention of Her Majesty's Government to tax unleaded petrol, when it is available, at the same rate as leaded petrol.

Mr. Hayhoe: No decisions have been taken on future rates of tax on petrol.

Acceptances in Lieu

Sir David Price asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what information he has about the French dation scheme and how it compares with the British acceptance in lieu scheme; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if, in view of the fact that no public expenditure is involved, he will take steps to end the practice of charging to the current expenditure Votes of the Department of the Environment and of the Office of Arts and Libraries, respectively, the cash equivalent of the objects accepted in lieu of capital tax liability;

(3) what have been the results of the Government's re-examination of the arrangements whereby part of the cost of acceptance in lieu is met from current Votes, referred to by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 24 April.

Mr. Moore: The Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster announced on 24 April that the Government would be looking again at the arrangements whereby part of the cost of assets accepted in lieu of tax is met from the Votes of the Department of the Environment and the Office of Arts and Libraries. The review is under way, and will take appropriate account of the French dation scheme.

Value Added Tax

Sir David Price asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce measures to change the system whereby works of art sold in the United Kingdom are subject to value added tax if bought by a United Kingdom purchaser, but are free of value added tax if bought by a foreign purchaser.

Mr. Hayhoe: Relief from VAT depends not on the nationality of the purchaser but on whether the goods are exported or retained in the United Kingdom. VAT registered traders, who sell secondhand works of art retained in the United Kingdom which meet certain conditions, can account for VAT only on the margin by which the selling price exceeds the purchase price.

Museums and Galleries (VAT)

Sir David Price asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will put national galleries and museums on the same footing as local authority galleries and museums in respect of value added tax on their purchases by extending to the former the zero-rating enjoyed by the latter.

Mr. Hayhoe: Although there are special arrangements to enable local authorities to reclaim the value added tax they incur, national galleries and museums are already on a similar footing to the extent that the Government grants they receive broadly take account of taxes such as VAT.

State Earnings-related Pension Scheme

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the loss of revenue if those pensioners now in receipt of the state earnings-related pension received the basic state pension alone, in 1985-86 and 1986-87.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 7 May 1985, c. 367]: Estimates of expenditure on the earnings-related component of the state earnings-related pension scheme were given on 7 May by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security, at column 339. The amount of income tax due on these amounts would depend on the size of the individual payments and on the other taxable income of the recipients. I regret that data are not available on which to base a satisfactory estimate.

North Sea Oil (Revenue)

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what revenue has accrued to the Government from oil produced in the North sea north of latitude 55° 50′ in each year since production began.

Mr. Lawson [pursuant to his reply, 13 May 1985, c. 30]: Government revenues from oil and gas production in the United Kingdom and United Kingdom continental shelf in each of the financial years 1975-76 to 1984-85 were:

	£ billion
1975-76	*
1976-77	0·1
1977-78	0·2
1978-79	0·6
1979-80	2·3
1980-81	3·9
1981-82	6·5
1982-83	7·8

* Less than £0·05 billion.

I regret that there is no satisfactory basis for apportioning Government revenues from oil and gas production between revenues arising from oil produced in the North sea north of latitude 55° 50′ and other revenues from oil and gas production. This is due mainly to the company basis on which corporation tax is assessed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parliamentary Lobbyists

Mr. Evennett asked the Lord Privy Seal (1) whether there are any plans to introduce a registration system for parliamentary lobbyists representing (i) commercial interests and (ii) non-profit-making and charitable organisations; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether there are any plans to issue Palace of Westminster photo identity passes to parliamentary lobbyists representing (i) commercial interests and (ii) non-profit-making and charitable organisations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Biffen: Any such proposals would, in the first instance, be matters for consideration by the Select Committee on Members' Interests and the Services Committee.

Parliamentary Business

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will set out in the Official Report the average length of day, excluding Fridays, the number of private Members' days, the total number of parliamentary Bills introduced and the daily average of starred and unstarred questions, for each parliamentary Session since 7 June 1955 and to date.

Mr. Biffen: Information on the average length of days and on the daily average of starred and unstarred questions could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The remaining information requested is given in the tables.

The number of private Members' days in each parliamentary Session since 7 June 1955 and in this Session (up to and including Friday 10 May) is as follows:

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Lord Privy Seal how many statutory instruments were prayed against in each of the last 30 years.

Mr. Biffen: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Lord Privy Seal how many statutory instruments have been made in each of the last 30 years.

Mr. Biffen: The number of statutory instruments made in each of the last 30 years was as follows:

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Lord Privy Seal how many statutory instruments required affirmative approval as a requirement for coming into, or remaining in effect; how many were subject to the negative procedure; and how many statutory instruments subject to no parliamentary procedure were laid before either or both Houses of Parliament, in each of the last 30 years.

Mr. Biffen: I shall reply as soon as possible.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Convicted Murderers (Statistics)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners convicted of murder since 1966 have been released on parole or are currently having parole reviews considered; and what proportion of them were sentenced for murdering children.

Mr. Mellor: About 560 prisoners convicted of murder since 1966 have been released on life licence and about 200 are currently under review by the Parole Board (a number of these reviews will not result in recommendations for release). Information about the nature of each offence could only be obtained at disproportionate cost, but it is estimated that between 10 and 15 per cent. of convictions for murder between 1966 and 1982 involved victims aged 16 or under, and that a similar proportion applies to those currently under review by the Parole Board. It does not follow that a similar proportion applies to those released on life licence.

Holloway Prison

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of the modernisation plans being carried out at Holloway prison and make a statement on the effect of the rebuilding upon the comfort of future prisoners.

Mr. Mellor: The modernisation of Holloway has entailed the demolition of all the original buildings and their replacement with a new purpose-built accommodation and facilities. The scheme started in August 1971 and the last of the six main phases is due to be completed in November of this year. The establishment will, when completed, provide modern accommodation with access to much improved sanitation, together with facilities for association, recreation, education and religious activities.

Coal Industry Dispute (Policing)

Mr. Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if Her Majesty's inspectors of constabulary have yet provided him with an estimate of the total cost of policing the recent miners' dispute.

Mr. Giles Shaw: It is not yet possible to make such an estimate. Up to 2 May the Home Office had paid to police authorities in England and Wales advances of police grant, and of the special payment which my right hon. and learned Friend is making available, on expenditure totalling £193·2 million.

Beecham Action Group March

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Surrey as to the cost of policing the Beecham Action Group march from Dorking to Brockham on Saturday 4 May; and if he will make a statement on the substance of the report.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The chief constable of Surrey tells me that the additional cost of policing this march was £6,942.

West Yorkshire Police

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the establishment of the West Yorkshire police force on 31 March; what was its actual strength on that date; to what reasons he ascribes the difference between the two figures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The authorised establishment of the West Yorkshire police is 5,154, an increase of 50 since May 1979. The strength of the force was 4,991 on 31 March 1985. Police manpower levels fluctuate from month to month because of different recruiting and wastage patterns, seasonal changes and other local reasons. I understand that there was further recruitment to the force in April 1985, and the present strength is 5,011. The number of full-time civilian staff in the force has increased by 51 to 1,119 since May 1979, including an additional 20 during the past year.

Missing Persons

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer of 22 April, Official Report, column 323, how many of the cases listed in column 2 of table 2 relate to persons who were first reported missing in previous years.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the information requested is as given in the table.

Persons aged less than 18 recorded as missing by the missing persons bureau of the Metropolitan police and traced or identified.*

		Of which:
	Total traced or identified	First reported missing in current year	First reported missing in previous years
1979	3,220	2,920	300
1980	3,310	3,090	220
1981	2,800	2,470	340
1982	3,460	3,110	360
1983*	3,300	2,860	450
1984†	3,710	3,110	600

* Includes some cases reported missing by police forces other than the Metropolitan police, including overseas forces.
† Excludes cases reported from overseas (37 traced in 1984).

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, pursuant to the answer of 22 April, Official Report, column 323, he is able to provide figures under the same heading for the number of missing persons in the current year so far.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that 969 persons aged less than 18 were recorded as missing by the missing persons bureau of the Metropolitan police between 1 January and 30 April 1985. This figure includes some cases reported missing by police forces other than the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer of 22 April, Official Report, columns 322-24, what information he has from sources other than the Metropolitan police missing persons bureau about the number of missing persons under the age of 18 years.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Details of vulnerable missing persons are recorded on the police national computer. Such records are maintained for operational purposes only and accurate statistical information could be provided by the system only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will issue guidelines to each police force recommending the establishment and maintenance of an up-to-date register of missing persons under 18 years of age;

(2) if he will designate a division within his Department with specific responsibility for monitoring the numbers of missing persons under the age of 18 years;

Mr. Giles Shaw: No. We are satisfied that the police national computer, to which all forces in Great Britain have access, already provides an adequate facility for recording details of missing persons under the age of 18 and of other vulnerable missing persons. Advice on the use and up-dating of information held on the police national computer is issued by the Department: the operational response to this information is, however, a matter for individual chief officers of police.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, pursuant to the answer of 22 April, Official Report, column 323, he will provide a breakdown of the missing persons figures in each column of table 2 according to the following age groups: under 14, 14 to 16 and 16 to 18 years.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I shall reply as soon as possible.

DEFENCE

Defford

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many personnel are currently employed at Defford.

Mr. Butler: Some 50 Ministry of Defence personnel are employed at the royal signals and radar establishment facility at Defford.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the research or operational activities currently performed at Defford, and for which Government establishment, agency, department, or allied Government they are performed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butler: The work of royal signals and radar establishment, Defford, is concerned with satellite communications. Research and development is undertaken for the Ministry of Defence. Some work on civil applications is undertaken for the Department of Trade and Industry. Details of operational activities are classified.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library such information and reports on research or operational activities carried out at Defford as may be available.

Mr. Butler: My Department does not keep records showing what material concerning work carried out at Defford might be available in the Library.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Equipment (Manufacturers)

Mr. Hordern asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will name the three largest manufacturers of equipment supplied to overseas countries under Overseas Development Administration programmes in each of the last three years, and the cost of such equipment to Overseas Development Administration funds in each of these years.

Mr. Raison: The Overseas Development Administration does not maintain statistics which show the supply of equipment under the bilateral aid programme broken down by individual British manufacturers.

The three largest spending bilateral aid projects in each of the last three years are listed together with the total aid spent and the main British lead contractors involved in project.

Food Aid

Mr. Bowen Wells asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what steps he takes to satisfy himself that cereal and foodstuffs are delivered to Sudan, Ethiopia and elsewhere as a result of decisions taken at the EC summit at Dublin, in accordance with his directions; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what steps are taken by the Overseas Development Administration to ensure that Her Majesty's Government are kept informed of the extent to which European pledges and plans in connection with the current food shortages in Africa have been implemented.

Mr. Raison: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him on 13 May, at columns 19-20.

Mr. Bowen Wells asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what information he now possesses concerning the quantities of the Community share of the emergency food assistance promised under the Dublin plan which have arrived in Ethiopia, Sudan, Chad, Mali, Mauritania, Niger and Burkina Faso;

(2) what information was provided at the European Commission's co-ordination meeting (a) on 21 February and (b) on any subsequent date concerning the quantities of the Community share of the emergency food assistance promised under the Dublin plan which arrived in Ethiopia, Sudan, Chad, Mali, Mauritania, Niger and Burkina Faso.

Mr. Raison: The information available at the co-ordination meeting on 21 February on shipments by the European Community since the Dublin Council, and the most recent information provided by the Commission, are set out in the table. Some deliveries relate to commitments made before the Dublin Council.

Sub-Saharan Africa (Food Aid)

Mr. Bowen Wells asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he would be willing to send a further observer, on his behalf, to find out and report on how much food and cereals have been delivered, to those who are starving in sub-Saharan Africa, out of the commitments entered into by the Heads of EC Governments at Dublin.

Mr. Raison: We receive information periodically from the Commission on the amounts of food delivered from European Community programmes and by other member states. We also receive reports on deliveries from the relevant international organisations. I see no need to send a further observer although I will continue to monitor progress closely.

EMPLOYMENT

Youth Training

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many people, including school leavers, are now unemployed or engaged on youth training schemes or similar schemes in the London borough of Lewisham; and what was the comparable figure for June 1979.

Mr. Peter Morrison: On 11 April 1985 the number of unemployed claimants in the London borough of Lewisham was 17,237. About 400 people were being helped by the youth training scheme and about 1,800 were on other Government employment and training measures at the latest available date, although, because of the various bases on which local information is collated, an unknown proportion will be in areas outside the borough.

Comparable figures for June 1979 are not available because of changes in the way figures are collected. However, the number registered unemployed in jobcentre areas approximating to the London borough of Lewisham in June 1979 was 5,729.

Management Consultants

Mr. Mates asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the contracts, with the subject of assignment, awarded to management consultancy firms by his Department in 1984, with the name of the consultants concerned.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The following is a list of contracts awarded in 1984 for management consultancy:

Labour Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Employment what were the numbers of unemployed and the rate of unemployment in January and April 1985 in the United Kingdom, France, West Germany and the United States of America, respectively.

Mr. Alan Clark: Following is the available information. The unemployment figures on national definitions in table 1 are not fully comparable owing to difference in coverage. The OECD standardised rates in table 2 take account of these differences as far as possible.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Londonderry Airport

Mr. Clifford Forsythe asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which Northern Ireland Department has responsibility for Londonderry airport; and what public funds are provided to it.

Mr. Chris Patten: Londonderry airport is operated by the Derry city council in accordance with the terms of the Aerodromes Act (NI) 1971, which is administered by the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland. Financial support for the purpose of the airport is provided by Derry city council. A capital grant of £31,684 was paid by the Department to the city council for specific airport facilities in 1980.

Homes (Dampness)

Mr. Clifford Forsythe asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many homes administered by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive have been reported as suffering from dampness; and what methods are used to ascertain whether this dampness is attributable to bad design, condensation or disrepair.

Mr. Chris Patten: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but I understand from the chairman that the information is not readily available. I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Medical Cards (Antrim, South)

Mr. Clifford Forsythe asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to the number of people in the Antrim South parliamentary constituency who hold pre-1973 medical cards; and what proportion of these people are registered on the electoral roll.

Mr. Scott: This information is not available.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Inventions (Exploitation)

Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to increase the exploitation of inventions arising from work funded by the research councils; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph: The Government want to encourage the fullest possible industrial and commercial application of United Kingdom scientific and technological discoveries for the maximum benefit of the United Kingdom economy. In 1985-86 we shall spend, through the grant-in-aid to the five research councils, some £560 million on civil scientific research; and, in recognition of the long-term importance of research for the country, the Government's expenditure plans for the years 1985-86 to 1987-88 make additional provision, compared with earlier plans, of some £18 million in all over the three years for the enhancement of equipment in carefully selected university centres of high quality research and some £27 million for the science budget to assist the research councils in restructuring and redeployment and to fund more research grants of highest quality.

Following my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's announcement of the ending of the right of first refusal held by the British Technology Group for the exploitation of Government-funded research, with the aim of enlarging opportunities for exploitation especially for scientists who want to exploit their own work, the Department has had extensive discussions with the councils and others concerned. I am now able to announce the main features of the new arrangements.

The Government's overall aims in the new arrangements are to increase the exploitation of research funded by the councils, for the maximum benefit of the United Kingdom economy; to strengthen and improve exploitation, through freer competition between exploiting agencies in the public and private sectors and in other ways; therefore, to place responsibility and initiative for exploitation as fully as possible on researchers, their institutions and the councils, consistent with their legal responsibilities; and to increase the incentive for researchers and their establishments by enabling them and the work that they do to benefit from increased exploitation. We want researchers to be alert to the possibilities for exploitation of their work; to see and share in the benefits of exploitation both for their own establishments and more widely in the national interest; to have access to arrangements for exploitation as simple and effective as practicable; and, where it is appropriate and they wish to do so, to have the opportunity to pursue exploitation themselves.

This statement mainly concerns universities. I envisage that the same principles should apply for local authority institutions of higher education, and appropriate parallel arrangements should be developed in due course.

For the research they support in universities the councils — which between them are currently funding some 6,900 university research projects of total value of £360 million—would, I understand, wish the rights and responsibilities for exploitation to rest with the institution in receipt of grant, where the university wishes to hold them, and where the councils are satisfied that adequate arrangements and procedures exist for identifying and pursuing potentially exploitable results. On behalf of all of the councils and with their agreement, the chairman of the Science and Engineering Research Council will shortly be writing to vice-chancellors to propose this transfer and to invite them to state their university's wishes.

It will be open to universities to propose what arrangements best suit their circumstances. In considering these I hope that universities will seek to give the fullest opportunity and scope for researchers themselves, where they wish to do so, to assume responsibility for exploiting their own findings and ideas, with commensurate share in the benefits. I envisage that the opportunity to exploit would thus in the first place rest with the researcher, on the understanding that he or she would take active steps to exploit the ideas, in ways consistent with the Government's policy aims and within the framework of the university's agreed arrangements. These arrangements will need to have regard to the university's terms and conditions of service; and, because public funds are involved, the university should share in royalties and provision should be made for periodic reporting. I hope that universities will encourage researchers to exploit discoveries themselves and will provide guidance and help for those who wish to do so. Where a researcher nevertheless chooses not to take on the rights and responsibilities for the exploitation of his or her discoveries, these would revert to the university.

Whether the discovery is exploited by the university or by the researcher it would be open to them to retain the rights themselves, to set up a limited company for the purpose, or to negotiate terms for transfer of the rights and responsibilities for exploitation to intermediaries such as private sector organisations or to the British Technology Group. Or they may choose to enter into direct agreements with industrial and commercial companies for the exploitation of individual discoveries, seeking such professional or other services as they need; or conclude agreements with the private sector intermediaries to undertake this on their behalf.

The Government do not wish to prescribe the means of exploitation; but they will want to be satisfied that there are considered arrangements governing exploitation by the university or by individual researchers to safeguard the public interest in the moneys involved while maximising the possibility that good inventions will be identified, assessed, protected and exploited.

Universities will be invited to submit an account of their proposed arrangements for the exploitation of inventions to the Science and Engineering Research Council which will arrange for them to be considered in consultation with the other councils, the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals, the University Grants Committee and with the Department of Education and Science, the Department of Trade and Industry, and Her Majesty's Treasury when arrangements are agreed and in place, councils would thereafter regard the university as fully responsible; and would wish to receive a brief annual report from each institution on the working of the arrangements in respect of their grants and contracts, including information on income earned. Any proposed major changes in the agreed arrangements will be subject to the same process of consideration and approval. I shall also be asking the councils, in conjunction with other interested bodies, generally to review the overall arrangements when sufficient experience has been gained of their operation, perhaps after three years.

It would be for the university or the researcher to negotiate exploitation terms. Universities will be able to retain their share of royalties and receipts in full without loss of general or specific grants. I hope that they will see fit to use them to strengthen and improve their research capability, its further exploitation, and related infrastructure. Where a university chooses to establish such necessary infrastructure, the Government would regard related expenditure as a proper use of an institution's resources, in recognition of the role of universities and other institutions of higher education in collaborating with industry and promoting exploitation.

I am asking each council to amend its conditions of grant to accommodate the new arrangements; and am inviting them to consider the scope for developing their own policies for exploitation of inventions originating in their own units and institutes on similar lines, so as to provide the maximum involvement of researchers and their establishments where appropriate, having regard to councils' financial and legal responsibilities and to the efficient use of a council's experience and expertise. The present delegated authority controls governing councils' involvement in commercial enterprises will be phased out as soon as each council is ready to take on its responsibilities fully. They will be able to retain earnings from exploitation of their in-home inventions without loss of grant-in-aid. When sufficient experience has been gained, the Department will wish to review the workings of the new arrangements with the councils.

The intention of these changes is to benefit the United Kingdom; and it is important that the exploitation of our scientific and technological discoveries should, whenever possible, be done by United Kingdom companies. This aim will be borne in mind when considering proposals from universities for the new arrangements. There may be circumstances where a foreign company or a subsidiary of such a company is the best choice, whether as an intermediary or for the negotiated transfer of rights. Where a university or researcher is considering using such a company or subsidiary for all of their discoveries, or all discoveries in a particular discipline or field, the university's arrangements should provide for the Department of Trade and Industry to be consulted at an early stage. The Department of Trade and Industry will also be ready to advise in particular cases and I hope that universities and researchers will consult them freely. The annual reports which universities make on the working of their arrangements should record any agreement for exploitation made with an overseas company or a subsidiary.

There is a nice balance to be struck between the free flow of information on which the health of science so critically depends and the need to protect new inventions if they are to be fully exploited to the benefit of the United Kingdom. A balance is also required between the freedom and motivation of the researcher to pursue exploitation, the efficient use of negotiating and other commercial skills to secure the best terms, and the legal responsibilities of councils, universities and their employees. In seeking to give individual researchers greater scope and opportunity to exploit their inventions, there is a possibility that in particular instances exploitation will be less than optimal. But the Government believe that it is right to incur this risk to secure the gains that will come from giving researchers and their institutions more responsibility and more incentive. They are confident that the scientific community, through consultation between the councils and the universities, will be able to work out satisfactory arrangements that will meet the Government's aims.

The new arrangements will take effect from today and will apply to all discoveries made hereafter whether funded by councils' current or future grants and contracts. There will necessarily be a transitional period, which I hope will last no more than six months, while universities are considering their arrangements and agreeing them with the councils as described above. The research councils have agreed that, during this time, a university with a proposal for exploitation should in the first instance consult the council responsible for the grant; councils will be informing their grant holders accordingly.

School-phobic Children

52. Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information is available to his Department as to the numbers of school-phobic children and the facilities available for these children; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The Department does not collect information about the incidence of so-called school phobia. Local education authorities are responsible for monitoring school attendance and devising strategies for dealing with non-attendance. In doing so they have access to a wide variety of educational and psychological expertise, including the education welfare service, the schools psychological service and child guidance clinics.

School Transport (Cost)

Mr. Jack Thompson asked the Secretary State for Education and Science if he will list the cost to each local education authority of school transport for the years 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984, respectively.

Mr. Dunn: The net cost to each local education authority of providing children with transport between home and school, for each of the three years to 1983-84, is given in the following table. Information for 1984-85 is not yet available.

Overseas Students

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the charges to overseas students for arts courses, science courses and clinical courses, respectively, at each university in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Brooke: Information on such charges is not collected by the Department. The Government's policy is that overseas students who began their courses on or after 1 September 1980 should pay fees that cover the cost of their education here, but it is for individual universities to determine the fees that they charge to such students in accordance with the Government's policy and in the light of their own particular circumstances. The University Grants Committee has recommended that universities should charge at least the following minimum fees to such overseas students during the current academic year:

Arts courses	3,150
Science courses	4,150
Clinical courses in medicine, dentistry and veterinary science	7,650

University Grants Committee

Mr. Kilfedder asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what account he takes in determining the level of allocation to the University Grants Committee of recent trends in, and the current level of, university salaries relative to the trend in wages and salaries generally; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The assumptions made in determining the level of allocations to the universities via the University Grants Committee are consistent with the Government's assumption for pay increases for all the groups for which it is responsible. No special account has been taken in recent years of either the current level of university salaries or the trend in university salaries relative to the general trend, apart from some additional allowances for increases in clinical academic salaries.

Licences

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in the Official Report all the different types of licences operated or granted by his Department and the year in which they first came into operation.

Sir Keith Joseph: The Department does not grant or operate licences of any kind.

Universities

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the planned change in the level of funding for universities in (a) real terms (i) between 1984-85 and 1987-88, (ii) between 1979-80 and 1987-88 and (iii) between 1980-81 and 1987-88 and (b) in percentage terms.

Mr. Brooke: The planned change in the level of university funding in real and percentage terms is as shown in the following table:

Financial year	(a) Cash £ million	(b) Cash adjusted for fees compensation £ million	(c) *Column (b) in real terms £ million	(d) Percentage change in real terms between each year and 1987-88 Per cent.
1979-80 outturn	842·5	842·5	1,229·0	−5·7
1980-81 outturn	1,067·1	1,067·1	1,311·8	−11·7
1984-85 provisional outturn	1,391·5	1,266·8	1,212·2	−4·4
1987-88 plans	1,511·5	1,374·9	1,158·5	—

* Cash figures adjusted for general inflation as measured by the GDP deflator at market prices using a 1983-84 base.

The figures include recurrent, capital and equipment grant paid to the universities on the advice of the UGC and Computer Board. They do not include income from tuition fees paid from public funds, nor do they include additional provision for the new engineering and technology programme announced on 19 March 1985. The figures have been adjusted to exclude elements added to recurrent grant to compensate for the loss of fee income resulting from the reduction in the home undergraduate tuition fee in 1982-83, its freezing in 1983-84 and a further minor adjustment in 1984-85. Because of other funding changes, the figures are not comparable from year to year.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list decisions already taken in respect of the future funding of universities which will overlap the time scale of the forthcoming Green Paper on higher education.

Mr. Brooke: The Green Paper which will be published later this month will be concerned with the development of higher education into the 1990s. My right hon. Friend published on 30 January this year a letter to the chairman of the University Grants Committee giving an early indication of the Government's view on certain matters with implications for the work of the committee in the immediate future. I am sending a copy of that letter to the hon. Member.

Teachers (Appraisal System)

Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the results of the meeting which took place on 15 April between his representatives acting on his behalf and representatives of the teachers' unions to discuss the question of an appraisal system for teachers.

Sir Keith Joseph: The 15 April meeting provided a useful opportunity to discuss my approach to appraisal and the views of the teacher associations. It was agreed that further exploratory exchanges should be promoted, involving representatives of local authority employers.

Higher Education

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list, in respect of his Department's education report No. 100, the difference in the projected number of students entering higher education between variant Y and variant X in 1985 and 1988; and, in each case, what percentage of all undergraduates this difference will represent.

Mr. Brooke: Variant Y of report on education No. 100 has been revised to take account of final figures for entry to higher education in Great Britain in 1983-84. This revised projection was published in letters of 30 January 1985 from my right hon. Friend to the University Grants Committee and the national advisory body for public sector higher education.

The differences in the projected numbers of home initial entrants between variant Y (revised) and variant X in 1985-86 and 1988-89 are 10,000 and 9,000, respectively. These represent 6 and 5 per cent., respectively, of all home initial entrants (full-time and sandwich) as projected by variant Y (revised).

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received concerning his Department's education report No. 100 and the adoption of variant Y rather than variant X as the projection of demand for entry to higher education.

Mr. Brooke: Among other representations received the University Grants Committee and the national advisory body for public sector higher education each referred to this matter in their advice on the development of a future strategy for higher education. The advice of both bodies was published last September. Copies are in the Library of the House.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science on what criteria his Department decided in the context of education report No. 100 to adopt variant Y rather than variant X as the projection of demand for entry to higher education.

Mr. Brooke: Variant Y of the Department's projections of future demand for higher education (as revised) represents a continuation of demand at a level consistent with actual levels of entry to higher education in 1983, the latest year for which firm figures are available. It therefore represents the most recently observed propensity to enter higher education as affected by relevant educational and other factors, such as the distribution of places between sectors, the level of student support and the availability and attractiveness of other opportunities.

Benzodiazepine (Brain Changes)

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the findings of research into changes in the brain by demonstrable computer tomography, taking place in patients using benzodiazepine tranquillisers on a long-term basis.

Mr. Brooke: I understand from the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid from the Department, that the council is funding a research project entitled "Psychometric performance and neuroradiological measures in long-term benzodiazenpine users" at the Institute of Psychiatry, London. This work is still in progress. Analysis of the results will be undertaken at or about the end of 1985.

Education Expenditure

Mr. Richard Shepherd asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the total public expenditure on education in 1978 and each successive year; and what was the rate of growth in both nominal and real terms over the period.

Sir Keith Joseph: Total central and local government spending from 1978-79 to 1983-84 on those areas of education which are my responsibility was as follows:

	£ million cash
1978-79	7,456
1979-80	8,606
1980-81	10,507
1981-82	11,390
1983-84	12,881

Over this period the primary and secondary school population fell by 12 per cent. while spending on education as a whole increased by nearly 73 per cent. in cash terms, an increase of almost 2 per cent. in real terms.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many young people there are between the ages of 16 and 19 years with special educational needs; and how many places are available for this group in (a) schools and (b) further education at the latest date for which the information is available.

Sir Keith Joseph: This information is not available centrally.

Burnham Committee

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will appoint an independent chairman to the review of membership composition of the union side of the Burnham committee; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph [pursuant to his reply, 10 May 1985, c. 535]: No. Like my predecessors, I shall exercise the powers given to the holder of my office under section 1 of the Remuneration of Teachers Act 1965 directly.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what criteria he will take into account when deciding the balance of representation in the union side of the Burnham committee.

Sir Keith Joseph [pursuant to his reply, 10 May 1985, c. 535]: Two major criteria which I will take into account in reviewing the balance of representation will be the number in relevant membership of the respective teacher associations and the distinctiveness of each.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what ratio of membership to representation he considers appropriate for the union side of the Burnham committee; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph [pursuant to his reply, 10 May 1985, c. 535]: Representation on the committee cannot be determined by a simple ratio and one of the criteria I shall be taking into account is the distinctiveness of the membership of the associations.

SCOTLAND

Dental Technicians

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many dental technicians (a) are employed by health boards in Scotland, and (b) also undertake private contract work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: The number of dental technicians employed by health boards in Scotland at 30 September 1984 (the latest date for which figures are available) was 147.

Information is not held centrally on how many of these dental technicians undertake additional private work. Provided that such work is carried out in their own time, does not impinge on their effectiveness and efficiency as NHS employees, and does not involve the use of NHS premises or equipment, dental technicians may undertake private work if they wish.

Rates

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his Department's most recent estimate of the likely yield of rating on agricultural land and buildings in Scotland.

Mr. Ancram: Since agricultural land and buildings are not at present valued for rating purposes, I have no basis for an estimate of this kind.

Forestry Development

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland in how many cases forestry development has occurred where grant has been refused by the Forestry Commission; and what action he proposes to take to ensure that such development does not take place.

Mr. John MacKay: I refer the hon. Member to the replies which I gave to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Shettleston (Mr. Marshall) on 8 May at col. 442.

Law Reform (Parent and Child) (Scotland) Bill

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will be prepared to support in principle the proposed Law Reform (Parent and Child) (Scotland) Bill.

Mr. Ancram [pursuant to his reply, 13 May 1985, c. 55]: While I am sympathetic to the principle of such a Bill, I have not yet completed consideration of the Scottish Law Commission's report on illegitimacy or of the comments received on its proposals for the custody of illegitimate children. Accordingly I am not yet able to decide what form such legislation might most suitably take.

SOCIAL SERVICES

National Insurance Contributions

12. Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what he estimates the effects of the reductions in national insurance contributions will be on the take home pay of an employee earning £50 a week.

Mr. Newton: The proposed reductions in National Insurance contributions will mean that from October an employee earning £50 a week will take home an extra £2.

Community Health Councils

14. Sir William van Straubenzee asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent representations he has received about the operation of community health councils.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Since 11 February when I announced the introduction of revised community health councils regulations we have received six letters from hon. Members, three from community health councils, three from the Association of Community Health Councils for England and Wales and one from a member of the public. There have also been 12 questions put down by hon. Members and a debate on a prayer against the revised regulations.

Benefits

15. Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when considering Government policy on benefits, what comparison he makes with benefits available in other European Economic Community countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The Department regularly receives information about benefit provisions in other countries including the European Community. Visits are also made from time to time by Ministers and officials. But the main influences on our policies on benefits are the needs, priorities and resources available in this country.

Death Grant

19. Mr. Bidwell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he intends to increase the death grant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The future of the death grant is being considered in the context of our major review of social security. Proposals arising from the review will be published in the near future.

Diet

20. Mr. Harris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to provide information to people about the importance of having a healthy diet.

Mr. John Patten: We expect to be making guidance from the joint advisory committee on nutrition education available later this year.

Nurses (Pay)

21. Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on nurses' pay within the National Health Service.

34. Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what consideration has now been given to the recommendation received from the Nurses and Midwives Review Body.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The average pay of nurses has risen by 94 per cent. between April 1979 and March 1985 which was 23 per cent. ahead of the rise in prices over the same period.

The pay of National Health Service nursing and midwifery staff is determined in the light of the recommendations of an independent review body. Recommendations for 1985 from three review bodies have been submitted to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister. These are being considered together in the normal way and an announcement will be made in due course.

Voluntary Organisations

22. Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what increases there have been in funding to voluntary organisations under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968 since 1979.

Mr. John Patten: In 1978-79 the Department spent £4,445,000 on grants under our general scheme of section 64 grants. The comparable figure for 1984-85 is £11,357,000, a real increase of 43 per cent. Total expenditure on grants to help the voluntary sector has risen from £10 million in 1979-80 to £30 million in 1984-85.

Maternity Allowance

23. Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent representations he has received over the current level of maternity allowance.

Mr. Whitney: Some 30 representations were received last year on the review of financial provision for maternity commenting on the level of maternity allowance.

Social Security (Review)

24. Mr. Eggar asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on his review of the social security system.

Mr. Whitney: The Government's proposals for the future of social security will be published shortly.

30. Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will publish the proposals submitted to him by his review committees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The outcome of the review of social security will be published shortly. The report of the independent housing benefit review team will be published at the same time. The other three review teams were led by Ministers and their work has been taken into account in formulating the Government's conclusions and proposals arising from the review as a whole.

41. Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he now expects to announce the results of his review of pensions; and if he will make a statement.

48. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he now expects to announce the results of his review of benefits for children and young persons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: I refer the hon. Members to my right hon. Friend's reply earlier today to the hon. Members for Thurrock (Dr. McDonald), for Newport, East (Mr. Hughes), for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond), and Bootle (Mr. Roberts).

Expenditure

25. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the increase in expenditure in real terms in the National Health Service in England between 1978-79 and 1984-85; and what are the comparative figures of the four Thames regional health authorities collectively and the other regions.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Expenditure on the National Health Service increased between 1978-79 and 1984-85 by 20·5 per cent. in real terms. Over the same period revenue expenditure by health authorities increased by 14·7 per cent., within which the increase for the four Thames regions, including the postgraduate special health authorities, was 9·8 per cent. and that for the remaining regions 17·4 per cent. Thames regions received less than other parts of the country as part of our policy of achieving a fairer distribution of resources in line with the approach set out in the resource allocation working party report in 1976. Figures for 1984-85 are still provisional.

33. Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the average real rate of increase in expenditure on (a) the National Health Service and (b) social security per taxpayer since 1979.

Mr. Fowler: The average real rate of increase in expenditure per income tax payer since 1979 has been 4·6 per cent. per year for the National Health Service and 6·4 per cent. per year for Social Security.

General taxation is not the only source of finance for the National Health Service and Social Security: in 1983-84, 14 per cent. of National Health Service expenditure and about 50 per cent. of social security expenditure were financed by national insurance contributions and patient charges and national insurance contributions respectively.

Pensions

26. Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to encourage trustees and managers of occupational pension schemes to make available for transfer the full amount of the accrued rights of the early leavers.

Mr. Whitney: The Social Security Bill now before Parliament will require pensions schemes to provide transfer values which must be at least the cash equivalent of the pension benefits to which the leaving member would otherwise be entitled. The way in which these cash equivalents are to be calculated will be set out in regulations and in guidance for the actuarial profession and will apply to people transferring after these provisions come into force. We propose to issue a consultative document on the content of these regulations shortly.

Social Workers (Decisions)

27. Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations he has received since 5 July 1984 about the absence of a procedure for appeal against social workers' decisions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Three representations have been received in this period. We agree that local authorities who have the statutory duty to provide personal social services should have, as recommended in the report, "Social Workers: Their Role and Tasks", established methods for dealing with complaints but we hold the view that authorities should develop their own procedures to meet their particular needs. The statutory code of practice on access to children in care and the Department's document on statutory reviews of children in care both draw attention to the need for adequate local complaints procedures. These proposals were generally well received. The Department's social services inspectorate is currently examining local authorities' procedures and practices in connection with the new arrangements for access and parental rights resolutions.

Black Report

28. Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a further statement on the progress made in implementing the Black report on inequalities in health.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have never undertaken to implement the recommendations of the Black report. However, many of them are consistent with the policies and priorities for the health and social services we are following, particularly in the fairer distribution of NHS resources to previously relatively deprived Regions such as the north-west. Some recommendations, particularly those on the social security system, would involve expenditure on a scale which could not seriously be contemplated.

Tax and Social Security System

29. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what account he has taken, in his social security review, of the implications for the practicality of subsequent integration of the tax and social security system.

Mr. Whitney: I must ask my hon. Friend to await the publication of the Government's conclusions and proposals arising from the social security review. These will be published as soon as possible.

Hospital Waiting Lists

31. Mr. Neale asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how the latest available figures on waiting lists compare with those in March 1979.

45. Mr. Wood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress has been made in reducing the number of patients on hospital waiting lists.

Mr. John Patten: At March 1979 hospital in-patient waiting lists stood at 752,400. The latest available figure, for September 1984, is 682,600. The numbers had fallen to 622,500 in March 1982 but rose again to 746,100 in December 1982 following the industrial action in the health service. The downward trend then resumed and we expect it to continue. In general, figures on waiting lists are believed to include a significant proportion of duplicated entries and patients who no longer require treatment. The amount of overstatement cannot readily be estimated, but is thought to exceed 10 per cent. nationally and could be considerably more. About half of all admissions to hospital are immediate, and many of those on waiting lists already have a planned date of admission.

Departmental Staff—Police (Information Exchange)

32. Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he is satisfied with the present arrangements for exchanges of information between staff of his Department and the police; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: Yes. Clear instructions about provision of information to the police are given to DHSS staff. They permit information to be passed in confidence to the police where it is requested to assist inquiries in a case involving serious crime, or where the police are investigating offences in which the Department has a direct interest.

Food Policy (Confectionery Industry)

35. Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from the confectionery industry on the report of the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: At the time the report on diet and cardiovascular disease was in preparation the Cocoa, Chocolate and Confectionery Alliance made detailed representations which were carefully considered by the committee. We have received no subsequent representations from them.

NHS (Resources)

36. Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the increase in resources made available to the National Health Service over the five financial years from 1980-81 to 1984-85 measured in constant prices; and whether over those five years pay levels have kept up with the increase in prices.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Financial allocations to the National Health Service have increased at an average rate of 2·1 per cent. per year in real terms over the period from 1980-81 to 1984-85 making a total increase of 8·7 per cent. Over the same period, the average pay levels of all health authority staff have increased by 26·0 per cent., and the retail price index has increased by 31·3 per cent. However there had been a very significant pay award in 1979-80 and taking back the figures by one year would give a very different picture.

New Drugs (Testing)

37. Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce legislation to prohibit the offering of financial inducements designed to secure the participation of humans in the testing of new drugs.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The guidelines issued by the Royal College of Physicians cover payments to volunteers and recommend that ethics committees satisfy themselves that payments are not so large as to induce subjects to take risks primarily for reward. We are awaiting updated advice from the college, the Association of British Pharmaceutical Industries and the Medicines Commission.

National Insurance

38. Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about the effect on the lower wage earner of the national insurance proposals contained in the 1985 Budget.

Mr. Whitney: Since March 1985 we have received five letters which criticised various specific aspects of those proposals in the Budget which benefit lower wage earners.

Drugs (Misuse)

39. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he is in a position to report on the progress his Department's advertising campaign is making towards warning families of the perils of drug misuse.

Mr. John Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Home Affairs' reply to my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Fylde (Sir E. Gardner) on 28 March at column 273.

42. Mr. Ashby asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to warn the public about the dangers of drug misuse.

Mr. John Patten: Under the auspices of the ministerial group on the misuse of drugs the Department is engaged in a broad based campaign of information and education to discourage drug misuse, and particularly heroin misuse. On the details of the campaign and related initiatives I would refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Mr. Murphy) on 18 March at columns 376-8. The second stage of the campaign will now come towards the end of May.

House Helps

40. Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will seek to establish regional or area corps of people for service as home helps; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The recruitment and management of staff for home help services is, and should remain, the responsibility of each local social services authority.

Limited List Prescribing

43. Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will announce the procedure for general practitioners to prescribe drugs outside the limited list for patients with particular medical needs.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Latham) on 3 May at column 271.

Mr. Charles Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will consider removing Lorazapan from the limited list.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Chief Medical Officer's group of medical and pharmaceutical experts, set up to advise on the contents of the selected list, recommended that Lorazapan should remain available under the National Health Service; and we accepted the group's advice in full. As we have already announced we shall shortly be setting up a committee to keep the selected list under review. It will be open to that committee to reconsider the position of Lorazapan.

Disabled Persons (Voluntary Organisations)

44. Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what assistance his Department gives to voluntary organisations concerned with disabled people.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) on 22 June 1984 at columns 316-20 when I listed grants made to voluntary organisations in the financial year 1983-84. The list includes the grants awarded to a number of disablement organisations, and comparable information has been published in the Official Report for earlier years—for 1982-83 on 26 July 1983 att columns 1028-32 and for 1981-82 on 11 May 1982 a columns 588-92. Comparable information for 1984-85 is not yet available.

Private Contractors

46. Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which health authorities have included or wish to include a requirement that private contractors shall pay fair wages to those engaged in work for such authorities.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We are aware of 14 health authorities which are still trying to specify requirements for pay rates, sickness benefits, pension entitlements or other conditions of contractors' staff when putting their domestic, catering and laundry services out to tender. The description of these requirements as "fair wages" clauses is tendentious and meaningless. We have asked regional chairmen to ensure the removal of these requirements which are an unreasonable interference in the relationship between contractors and their employees at the expense of the National Health Service. The health authorities concerned are:

Barnsley	Rotherham
Calderdale	Salford
Central Birmingham	South Birmingham
East Birmingham	South Warwickshire
East Yorkshire	Trafford
Grimsby	West Cumbria
Paddington/North Kensington	Wolverhampton

Supplementary Benefit

47. Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, in the light of the representations he has received concerning the new limits to supplementary benefit payments as they apply to residential care and nursing homes for the elderly, he will reconsider the level of these limits earlier than the proposed review in 12 months.

Mr. Whitney: We are already committed to reviewing the level of all limits within the next 12 months. We set the new limits at levels which were reasonable in the light of the information available. We shall however take account at the time of our review of further information — which we are taking active steps to seek — and experience of the new arrangements.

Rates and Water Rate Rebates

49. Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce legislation to abolish the capital savings rules governing the entitlement of retirement pensioners to rates and water rates rebates.

Mr. Whitney: We will be announcing as soon as possible the conclusions of the social security review including detailed proposals for the future of the housing benefit and supplementary benefit schemes.

Invalid Care Allowances

50. Mr. Sumberg asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will make changes to the invalid care allowance to allow married women to benefit.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Exeter (Mr. Hannam) on 17 January, at column 224.

Forest and Honey Lane Hospitals

51. Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will visit Forest hospital, Buckhurst Hill and Honey Lane hospital, Waltham Abbey; and if he will invite the chairman of the North-East Thames regional health authority to accompany him.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Forest hospital and Honey Lane hospital are both under consideration for closure and re-provision of their services elsewhere. If the district health authorities concerned—Waltham Forest and West Essex —decide to proceed and their proposals are opposed by the relevant community health councils, the matter will be referred via North-East-Thames regional health authority to Ministers for a final decision. I do not think that it would be appropriate therefore for Ministers to visit the hospitals or comment on the proposals at this stage.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Cox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he last reviewed the rule on age limits for mobility allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The last change in the age limits for mobility allowance was in November 1979. We keep the position under review, but have no present plans for any change.

Organ Transplant Campaign

Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he is in a position to report on the first year of his organs transplant campaign; and what plans he has to ensure the momentum of the campaign is continued.

Mr. John Patten: In the 12 months following the launch in February 1984 of our campaign to increase public awareness of the benefits of organ transplantation and to promote the donor card scheme, over 12½ million new donor cards have been issued and the number of kidney transplants performed has risen by 30 per cent. over the previous year. Further publicity to maintain the campaign's momentum has been arranged.

We are continuing to publicise the need for organ donation and it is hope that donor cards will be made available to the public through a number of new outlets this year. The Chief Medical Officer will be writing to the directors of renal transplant units asking them to review their relationships with those hospital departments within their catchment areas which are most likely to have potential organ donors, in order to ensure that no opportunities are lost.

Hearing Systems

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if there is any action he will be taking to seek to ensure that all health and all social services establishments are equipped with induction loop and other hearing systems.

Mr. Newton: Future health building notes issued by the Department will draw attention to the need to provide suitable facilities for hearing-impaired people. It is for local authorities to decide in which social services establishments induction loops or other hearing systems ought to be provided.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what consideration he has given to the booklet on "Induction Loops and Hearing Systems Installed in Greater London", produced by the Greater London Association for Disabled People, a copy of which has been sent to him; and what assistance his Department is giving to establishments introducing these systems.

Mr. Newton: Hearing-impaired people should find the booklet most useful in locating places in Greater London where induction loops and other hearing systems are available. The Department provides grant aid for a number of national organisations which are able to give advice on the installations of such systems.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many of his Department's buildings are equipped with induction loops or other hearing systems.

Mr. Newton: Induction loops are installed in nine of the Department's buldings. Amplifiers for telephones are provided where necessary, but information on the numbers supplied is not readily available.

Benzodiazepine

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will consider providing extra resources to provide support facilities for the trauma suffered by patients undergoing withdrawal from long-term benzodiazepine tranquilliser use.

Mr. John Patten: Family practitioner, community health and general hospital services are available to those experiencing trauma as a result of withdrawal from the long-term use of benzodiazepines. In addition, funds have been allocated under the drugs initiative to three local voluntary self help organisations providing services specifically for those dependant on tranquillisers and many other projects offer services to this group as well as to those misusing other drugs. Guidelines on good clinical practice in the treatment of drug misuse have been issued to all doctors. They contain advice on the addictive potential of benzodiazepines and on withdrawal procedures.

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the evidence available to him about the cumulative effect of the benzodiazepine group of drugs upon the elderly.

Mr. John Patten: It is well known that elderly people are particularly sensitive to the effects of benzodiazepine drugs and doctors are advised in the "British National Formulary" and in data sheets relating to individual products to reduce dosages for the elderly.

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what evidence he has about the effect of drugs within the benzodiazepine group on personality changes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: A considerable amount of data on the effects of benzodiazepines on the central nervous system has been published and is available in professional literature. The effects are known to vary between individuals and between different drugs in the class. Advice to doctors on these drugs is contained in section 4 of the "British National Formulary."

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the number of patients taking benzodiazepine tranquillisers who first took the drug whilst staying in hospital.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not hold this information centrally.

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will consider arranging to supply all patients who are given prescriptions for benzodiazepine tranquillisers with a data sheet listing their possible side-effects.

Mr. John Patten: We do not think such action is necessary. Individual reaction to these medicines may vary considerably and it is for the doctor, in the light of his knowledge of the patient, to advise him or her accordingly. In the absence of specific instructions from the prescriber, pharmacists are recommended to label these products with the words "Warning. May cause drowsiness. If affected do not drive or operate machinery. Avoid alcoholic drink". This advice is now incorporated in the British National Formulary—the basic handbook on prescribing and dispensing.

Board and Lodging Payment

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the average weekly amount paid to young people under the age of 26 years in hostel accommodation in 1984 in (a) Wisbech and (b) March; and what average weekly amount they will receive under the new regulations.

Mr. Whitney: I understand that there are no hostels in Wisbech and March.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many young people he estimates will be affected by the changes in board and lodging regulations in (a) Wisbech and (b) March;

(2) how many young people under the age of 26 years were in receipt of board and lodging payments in (a) Wisbech and (b) March travel-to-work areas on 28 April 1985 and at the same date in each of the last five years; and, of those young people in receipt of board and lodging payments on 28 April 1985, how many, and what percentage, had been claiming for more than (i) two weeks, (ii) one month, (iii) six months and (iv) one year, respectively.

Mr. Whitney: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Retirement Age

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether he has any proposals for the introduction of a standard retirement age for men and women; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he has any proposals for facilitating the early retirement of men aged between 60 and 64 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Retirement age was one of the issues considered by the inquiry into provision for retirement, which has formed part of the social security review. The Government's conclusions and proposals arising from the review as a whole will be published as soon as possible.

State Pension Schemes

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any proposals for the implementation of that part of EC Directive (79/7) requiring equal treatment for men and women in respect of state pension schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The Government have taken steps to implement Directive 79/9 EEC in relation to the state pension scheme apart from the permitted exclusions relating to pension age (article 7.1*(a)) and availability of category B pensions for women (article 7.1(c)*). These both represent areas of positive discrimination in favour of women.

Legionnaire's Disease

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list each case or outbreak of suspected or confirmed legionnaire's disease notified to his Department since 1 April giving, in each case, the date the Department was notified, the number of persons affected and the number of deaths.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: An outbreak of influenza at Stafford was reported to our Department on 29 April. On 3 May it was confirmed that this outbreak included cases of legionnaire's disease. So far 52 cases of the disease have been definitely confirmed and 13 of these have died.

Other cases notified to our Department since 1 April 1985 were:

	Date Notified	No. of Cases	Deaths
Portsmouth	5 May 1985	3	1
Bristol	9 May 1985	1	1
Birmingham	9 May 1985	1	1

It is not normal practice for the communicable disease surveillance centre to notify our Department of all sporadic cases of the disease. Isolated cases occur from time to time in various parts of the country and they only report as a matter of course clusters of cases or individual cases which give rise to particular concern. The centre tells us that three further cases have been reported to them since 1 April:

	No. of Cases	Deaths

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when section 33 of the Children Act 1975 is likely to be brought into effect.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 7 May 1985, c. 342.]: I announced yesterday that the custodianship provisions of the Children Act 1975 will be brought into force on 1 December 1985.

We shall present the commencement order, and custodianship report regulations to Parliament at the end of May. At the same time we shall issue a circular of guidance, to explain the provisions to local authorities and other interested bodies.

National Health Service

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will set out, for each year since 1960, the level of (i) Exchequer supplement, (ii) national insurance contributions, (iii) National Health Service charges levied and (iv) other revenue sources contributing each year to the total National Health Service budget; and what percentage of total revenue each year came from each of these sources;

(2) what has been the level of National Health Service expenditure each year since 1960; what percentage change each year this represents in real terms as measured by the retail price index; what percentage change each year this represents in terms of National Health Service pay and prices; and what percentage change each year this represents in terms of National Health Service pay and prices, taking into account annual rises in demographic demand and in the costs of medical technology.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 3 May 1985, c. 272]: The table sets out total gross expenditure (current and capital) on the National Health Service in England for each year since 1971-72. Comparable expenditure figures are not available for earlier years. Percentage changes in real terms are measured by the gross domestic product deflator. As the hon. Member has specifically requested figures deflated by the retail price index, and by National Health Service pay and prices these are also given but I do not accept that these figures are a sensible measure of "expenditure in real terms".

In the period since the late 1970s it has usually been estimated that on average Hospital and Community Health Services require each year nearly one per cent. more of real resources to deal with demographic pressures, and that an additional ½ per cent. is required each year because of medical advance. These percentages should be applied only to expenditure figures with care however as they do not directly relate to the growth in services actually achieved. It should not be assumed that services provided by the National Health Service can only grow in line with the additional resources which become available. Inpatient cases and day cases have recently increased more rapidly than in the 1970's. There has also been a marked improvement in the efficiency with which resources are used. Cost improvement programmes totalling £100 million were achieved in 1984-85 and further programmes amounting to some £145 million are planned for 1985-86.

Percentages of National Health Service expenditure since 1948-49 contributed respectively by the Exchequer, the NHS element of national insurance contributions, patient charges and from other sources have been given annually in the Department's written evidence to the Social Services Committee for its inquiry into public expenditure on the social services. The latest figures are published in the table on page 45 of the Committee's fourth report for the 1983-84 session (HC 395).

Immigrants (Expenditure)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will seek to extend the provisions of section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 to the National Health Service.

Mr. Waddington: I have been asked to reply.

We have no plans to extend the provisions of section 11 in this way.

WALES

Council House Sales

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide a table for each district in Wales showing (a) the number of applications to buy public sector housing and (b) the number of sales of public sector housing from May 1979 to the latest available date.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information requested is given in the following table for local authorities and new towns. An additional 1,758 dwellings, which cannot be related to applications or broken down by local authority, have been sold by housing associations.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Pucklechurch Remand Centre

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department why female inmates at Pucklechurch remand centre have been forcibly stripped by male prison officers.

Mr. Mellor: I understand that, because of the few female staff available at night, male staff at Pucklechurch have assisted in restraining a disturbed female prisoner while she was stripped and placed in protective clothing by female staff. We regret this and my right hon. and learned Friend has instructed that arrangements should be made to ensure that it does not happen again.

Terrorism (Remanded Persons)

Mr. Mates asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average period of custodial remand for persons charged with terrorist-type offences whose trials were completed, or for which charges were dropped, in each of the years 1983 and 1984.

Mr. Mellor: The only information which is readily available relates to prisoners who are currently in prison custody in England and Wales and in category A. It does not cover persons who were acquitted or against whom charges were dropped, nor those who have been released or downgraded to a lower security category.

In 1983, five prisoners currently held in category A were convicted of terrorist-type offences. To the nearest week, three (who were co-defendants) spent 39 weeks on remand, one spent 69 weeks and one 45 weeks.

There are no prisoners currently held in category A who were convicted of terrorist-type offences in 1984.

Personal Social Services

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of new personal social services applications under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 for each year from 1979 to 1983.

Mr. Waddington: I regret that information relating to years before 1983 is not readily available and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total amount spent on personal social services under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 since the criteria were revised in 1983, expressed in terms of 1979 prices.

Mr. Waddington: In 1979 prices grant claimed in 1983-84, representing 75 per cent. of eligible expenditure on personal social services, totalled £1,274,250, subject to audit and final acceptance of claims by the Home Office.

Figures for the financial year 1984-85 are not yet available.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total amount allocated in grants under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 since the criteria were changed in 1983, expressed in terms of 1979 prices.

Mr. Waddington: In 1979 prices the total grant claimed by local authorities is as follows. Claims are subject to audit and final scrutiny by the Home Office.

1984-85	46,591,500

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total amount spent on personal social services under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 in each of the years from 1979 to 1983 expressed in terms of 1979 prices.

Mr. Waddington: In the 1979 prices, grant claimed by local authorities in respect of personal social services, representing 75 per cent. of eligible expenditure, is as follows:

1979-80	589,500
1980-81	729,750
1981-82	749,250
1982-83	966-750

Certain claims are subject to audit and to acceptance by the Home Office.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the separate totals of money allocated under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 for each of the years from 1979 to 1983, expressed in terms of 1979 prices.

Mr. Waddington: The total grant claimed by local authorities in 1979 prices in respect of the relevant years is as follows. Final settlements may differ slightly from amounts claimed following audit and Home Office scrutiny of claims.

1979-80	34,588,500
1980-81	38,639,250

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the local authorities which have applied for money under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 together with the number of applications for each authority for each year from 1979 to 1983.

Mr. Waddington: The following table lists local authorities which received grant in the relevant period. Grant is not time limited and local authorities will have received payment in respect of posts approved before 1979 as well as on new posts approved between 1979 and 1983. Details of new applications made by each local authority between 1979 and 1983 could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the total number of new personal social services applications under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 since the criteria were revised in 1983.

Mr. Waddington: Sixty-three.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the costs to the Metropolitan police of deploying police officers away from their duties in suburban areas for the purpose of policing marches and demonstrations in central London over each of the past five years.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that information is not maintained in a form which would enable such an assessment to be made. It is, however, the commissioner's policy to ensure, whenever possible, that aid from the divisions for such purposes is provided within officers' normal tours of duty so as to minimise overtime, which normally represents the major element in any additional costs of policing marches and demonstrations.

Mr. Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many hours of police overtime the Metropolitan police were required to work for the purpose of policing marches and demonstrations in central London in each of the years since 1980.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that this information is not available.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the total amount (a) invoiced for and (b) received by the Metropolitan police for police services from (i) sporting events, excluding football, (ii) private companies, (iii) nationalised industries and (iv) ceremonial events for each of the past three complete financial years;

(2) what was the total amount received by the Metropolitan police in each of the past five years for policing services other than from statutory funding sources.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice he has given to the Metropolitan police as to their present relationship with local authority police units; and whether this includes advising local police commanders to refuse precise information in regard to police matters when such information is requested by London borough councils.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. and learned Friend has given no specific guidance on this matter. It is the policy of the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis to meet reasonable requests for information from local authorities, as from any other body or individual, unless there are good operational or other reasons not to do so.

Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider ways of establishing a close relationship between the Metropolitan police and the London borough of Haringey police sub-committee; and if he will set down guidelines for the future development of local authority police units.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No, but we hope that all borough and district councils in the Metropolitan police district will participate in arrangements made under section 106 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 for consultation between the police and the community. My right hon. and learned Friend issued guidance on these arrangements on 25 January, which made it clear that councillors should be part of the consultative process. I regret such arrangements do not yet exist in Haringey because the borough council has so far refused to take part.

Greater London (Elected Police Authority)

Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further consideration he has given to the creation of a directly-elected police authority for Greater London.

Mr. Giles Shaw: None.

Cheshire Police Force

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the establishment of the Cheshire police force on 31 March; what was the actual strength on that date; to what factors he ascribes the difference between the two figures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The authorised establishment of the Cheshire constabulary is 1,845, an increase of 40 since May 1979. The strength of the force was 1,799 on 31 March 1985. Police manpower levels fluctuate from month to month because of different recruiting and wastage patterns, seasonal changes and other local reasons. I understand that the force is in the process of recruiting more officers.

Animal Cruelty (Legislation)

Mr. Gale asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he is planning to publish the supplementary White Paper containing the Government's further plans for new legislation to replace the Cruelty to Animals Act 1876.

Mr. Brittan: The new White Paper "Scientific Procedures on Living Animals" is published today (Cmnd. 9521).

SOLICITOR-GENERAL FOR SCOTLAND

Travelling Families (Non-harassment)

45. Mr. Lambie asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland what recent advice the Lord Advocate has given the procurator fiscal in Kilmarnock about the implementation of the policy of non-harassment of travelling families.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: All procurators fiscal, including the procurator fiscal at Kilmarnock, have recently been advised of the modification to the policy of non-harassment of travelling people which took effect on 1 April 1985 and which linked toleration of unlawful encampment to achievement by local authorities of provision of pitch targets.

Yuill and Dodds

46. Mr. Foulkes asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland how many prosecutions have been taken or are pending against Yuill and Dodds for road traffic offences in relation to the transport of coal.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: It is not the usual practice of the Crown to disclose information which would be tantamount to revealing previous convictions recorded against a particular individual or company. As regards pending prosecutions, this information is regarded as confidential until such time as a complaint calls in court. There are no prosecutions against the firm of Yuill and Dodds currently before the courts in central Scotland.

Scottish Law Commission

47. Mr. Malone asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland what plans he has to meet the chairman of the Scottish Law Commission to discuss its current recommendations.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: I have no plans at the moment for such a meeting, but my noble and learned Friend, the Lord Advocate, and I have meetings, formal and informal, from time to time with the commission to discuss various issues of mutual interest.

Driving Licences (Prosecutions)

48. Sir Hector Monro asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland how many prosecutions took place in 1984 of drivers whose cars held an invalid Department of Transport test certificate.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: Statistics showing the number of persons proceeded against for contraventions of section 44(1) of the Road Traffic Act 1972 are not kept seperately. The only available figures combine contraventions of section 44 and section 46.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Multi-Fibre Arrangement

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in which product categories and on how many occasions multi-fibre arrangement supplier countries increased the utilisation of their quotas by 10 per cent. or more of their quotas in 1984 compared with 1983.

Mr. Channon: Multi-fibre arrangement quota utilisation increased by 10 per cent. or more in 1984 compared with 1983 in respect of 92 quotas. The following table gives details of the relevant countries and categories:

Supplier Country	Category
Brazil	9
Bulgaria	8
China	2, 4, 10, 12, 37
Czechoslovakia	3, 8, 13, 14B, 39, 100, 117
Egypt	2, 20
Hong Kong	10, 16, 24, 29, 71, 72, 76B, 82
Hungary	3, 6, 8, 20, 24, 67, 73
India	2, 6, 8, 17, 19, 20, 26
Indonesia	6 14A, 15A, 15B, 22, 26, 27, 29, 30A, 80, 83,
Korea (republic of)	111
Macao	26, 71, 74, 81
Mexico	1
Pakistan	4, 9
Peru	2
Poland	2, 3, 4, 6, 8, 9, 15, 17, 24, 32, 38A
Romania	2, 4, 6, 8, 15B, 16, 20, 26, 37, 119
Sri Lanka	6
Thailand	2+3, 8, 21, ex24, 74A
Yugoslavia	3, 4, 5, 7, 8, 12, 73

Company Statistics

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many companies went into voluntary liquidation (a) because they had ceased trading and (b) because they had been purchased as off the shelf and were no longer required, for each year since 1979 to the latest available date.

Mr. Fletcher: The total number of companies in Great Britain which notified their voluntary liquidation in each year was as follows:

Year
1979	6,899
1980	8,411
1981	9,991
1982	12,809
1983	12,908
1984	12,718

No records are maintained to identify the reasons for such liquidations.

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many companies were compulsorily wound up for reasons of non-compliance with statutory documentation for each year since 1979 to the latest available date.

Mr. Fletcher: None. A significant number of companies were removed from the register in each year, however, under the provisions of section 353 of the Companies Act 1948*, where the registrar had reason to believe that they were no longer in business or in operation; such action normally follows failure by the companies concerned to respond to reminder letters in respect of outstanding statutory documents. The numbers struck-off on this basis in each year for Great Britain are as follows:

Year
1980	21,135
1981	23,245
1982	47,861
1983	35,172
1984	44,451

Directors' Fees and Emoluments

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the increase in directors' fees and other emoluments in the latest year for which figures are available compared to 1979.

Mr. Fletcher: Figures on this subject are not immediately available from my Department's regular analyses of company accounts, but I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Management Consultants

Mr. Mates asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the contracts, with the subject of assignment, awarded to management consultancy firms by his Department in 1984, with the name of the consultants concerned.

Mr. Butcher: The following is the list for the 1984 calendar year:

Consultancy Firm	Contract
Aregon International Limited	Software Engineering
Aspect Advertising Limited	Awareness of Assistance in Relation to Invisible Exports
British Consulting Engineers (China) Limited	Advice on Power Station Project

Consultancy Firm	Contract
Ewbank Preece Consulting Engineers	Consultancy Assistance on Turbine Contract
Key Sharpe and Associates	Economic Advice on Telecommunications
Helix Software Consultants Limited	Project Definition for Alvey Directorate
Langton Limited	Network Analysis
D. E. Lennard and Associates Limited	Marine Related Energy Sources
Logica (UK) Limited	High Speed Network
Mackintosh International Limited	Commercial Foundry Requirements in United Kingdom
Merrow Systems Technology Limited	Management of Innovation Seminar
Oxford Economic Research Associates Limited	Exchange Rate Risks
P. A. Consulting Services Limited	Potential Japanese Investment in United Kingdom
Plain English Campaign	Forms Scrutiny
Research Associates	Technical Help to Exporters Scheme
Segal Quince and Associates	Operation of Managed Workshops for Small Firms
Software Sciences Limited	Computer Consultancy
Touche Ross and Company	Review of Special Steels Industry
Urwick Dynamics Limited	Marketing of services of a Departmental Industrial Research Establishment
Urwick Orr and Partners	Advice on Training Courses
Yard Limited	Monitoring Systems

Hall Russell Shipbuilders, Aberdeen

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he proposes to attach any conditions to the contract for the sale of Hall Russell Shipbuilders, Aberdeen, restricting the ability of the new owners to tender for commercial ship contracts for a specific period.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No.

Shipbuilding Intervention Fund

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the criteria governing eligibility for assistance under the shipbuilding intervention fund; and whether there are any differences in the application of the criteria as between British Shipbuilders and other companies.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Intervention fund support is a form of selective financial assistance paid under the provisions of sections 7 and 8 of the Industrial Development Act 1982, and the terms and conditions of the regime are subject to approval by the European Commission within the framework of the EC fifth directive on aid to shipbuilding (81/363/EEC). Each case, public or private, is considered on its merits within this context. The last tranche of intervention fund support approved by the Commission was terminated in June 1984 and negotiations with the European Commission on the terms and conditions of a further tranche are currently in train.

ASEAN (Trade Development)

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to improve trade with the countries in membership of the Association of South East Asian Nations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon [pursuant to his reply, 29 April 1985, c. 55]: My Department and the South-East Asia trade advisory group of the British Overseas Trade Board, on the basis of regular assessment, regard the Asean region as one of the most promising areas for trade in the world and give every encouragement to British exporters to explore the opportunities offered by the markets of those countries. I plan to visit a number of Asean countries, accompanied by a group of business men, starting on 20 June.

The wide range of services provided by the British Overseas Trade Board is available to British companies and these are being extensively used.

ENVIRONMENT

Traditional Urban Programme

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the reason for the reduction in the traditional urban programme financial allocation to Southwark under circular 25 compared with circular 24.

Sir George Young: The London borough of Southwark's financial allocation under traditional urban programme circular 25 reflects the process of concentrating those resources available nationally on the most worthwhile projects in the most deprived areas.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Maude asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what new arrangements have been introduced in the Property Services Agency for the central monitoring of value for money;

(2) when the three-tier system of management of the United Kingdom territorial organisation of the Property Services Agency will be replaced by a two-tier system as recommended by the Comptroller and Auditor General;

(3) whether the Property Services Agency has yet prepared its remedial plan of action, including timetables, in response to the Comptroller and Auditor General's report and the 30th report of the Public Accounts Committee on the Property Services Agency;

(4) when he expects the Property Services Agency's analysis of the results of management review techniques for assessment of maintenance performance to be published;

(5) when he expects the Property Services Agency's guidelines for standard criteria for determining maintenance priorities to be published;

(6) whether he is satisfied that the Property Services Agency's basic records are complete;

(7) whether the Property Services Agency has now completed its uniform arrangements for the central monitoring of value for money in line with its statement to the Public Accounts Committee;

(8) whether any new arrangements for the central monitoring of value for money in the Property Services Agency have been introduced since 1 April.

Sir George Young: My hon. Friend's questions relate to recommendations in the 30th report of the Committee of Public Accounts on the Property Services Agency's building maintenance expenditure published in July 1984.

The PAC has subsequently taken evidence from the PSA about progress in implementing its recommendations, and, as part of this, a written memorandum was supplied to the Committee earlier this year, which included a copy of the PSA's action plan on building maintenance. The Committee will be publishing in due course its conclusions and the evidence taken from the PSA. Since the latter will cover not only my hon. Friend's questions but the maintenance issues raised in the original report by the Comptroller and Auditor General and the 1984 PAC report, I hope that he will be prepared to wait until it is available.

Mr. Maude asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many contractors have been removed, permanently or temporarily, from the approved list of Property Services Agency contractors since August 1983 for reasons other than their conviction for a criminal offence.

Sir George Young: Thirty nine. Two of these firms have subsequently been re-admitted to the approved list following the completion of a 12-month period of suspension.

Mr. Maude asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many contractors on the approved list of contractors have been found to have overcharged the Property Services Agency during the last financial year.

Sir George Young: Ten.

Mr. Maude asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will name those contractors who have been found to have overcharged the Property Services Agency since August 1983 but who have been retained on the Property Services Agency list of approved contractors.

Sir George Young: Since August 1983, 16 firms on the agency's approved list have been found to have overcharged the Property Services Agency. Eight of these firms are still banned from receiving further work from the PSA and two have recently been reinstated to the approved list. The circumstances of the other six cases did not justify removal from the approved list. For legal and commercial reasons, I am not prepared to name the firms concerned.

Mr. Maude asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many nominated quantity surveyors have been dismissed by the Property Services Agency since August 1983.

Sir George Young: Since August 1983, 19 firms providing nominated quantity surveying services have been banned from receiving further Property Services Agency work, mainly because of poor performance. The bans cover periods ranging from one to five years. Nine of the firms have since been reinstated.

Mr. Maude asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the present total estimated value of unpriced work for measured term contracts in the Property Services Agency up to the present date.

Sir George Young: On 31 March 1985 the value of completed work awaiting the clearance of final accounts was £115 million.

Council House Sales

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what was the number of council and development corporation houses sold in the Basildon district council area in each of the last six years from May 1979 to May 1985; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many council and development corporation houses were sold in each year since May 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Dwelling sales in the years 1980-81 to 1983-84 reported by Basildon district council and development corporation appear in issues 62, 63, 67 and 71, respectively, of "Local Housing Statistics": copies are avilable in the Library. Basildon district council reported selling 28 dwellings in 1979-80 and 127 in April to December 1984. Basildon development corporation sold 762 dwellings in May 1979 to March 1980 and 422 in April to December 1984.

Estimates of the dwelling sales, right to buy and voluntary, by local authorities and new towns in England are as follows:

	Local authorities	New towns
1979-80	53,500	1,900
1980-81	68,200	3,300
1981-82	128,200	3,900
1982-83	181,200	4,300
1983-84	126,200	4,000
1984*	66,100	3,000

*April to December.

Poll Tax

Dr. Mawhinney asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the studies commissioned by his Department, or otherwise available to him, regarding the relative incidence of a poll tax on taxpayers in different income brackets.

Mr. Waldegrave: The only substantive published material of the relative incidence of a poll tax is in the 1981 Green Paper on "Alternatives to Domestic Rates", Cmnd. 8449.

Pocock v. Steel (Rent Act Amendment)

Mr. Ward asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether legislation is to be introduced to amend case 11 of schedule 15 to the Rent Act 1977 in the light of the decision in the Court of Appeal on the case of Pocock v. Steel.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: The Government have considered carefully the implications for landlords using case 11 of the Court of Appeal's decision, which has overturned the widely accepted view of the effect of the case. We have decided that the legislation should be amended.

The main effects that amending legislation should have are, first, to enable landlords to use case 11 in respect of a letting of a dwelling which they have occupied at any time in the past; and secondly, to restore to owners with existing case 11 lettings the right to use that case to regain possession of their homes, provided that they can satisfy the requirements of the case as amended. There would also need to be certain transitional provisions.

My hon. Friend the Member for Hampshire, East (Mr. Mates), obtained leave on 14 May to introduce a Bill which would have these effects. The Bill is being published today and will have the Government's support.

Organochlorines

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what restrictions exist on the use of organochlorines in houses and in house construction in European Community countries.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 2 May 1985, c. 185]: The term organochlorines encompasses a wide range of pesticides, disinfectants and solvents, some of which are used in the protection of building materials and in eradicating pests in houses. Most European Community countries regulate the use of organochlorine substances as pesticides either by permitting certain uses or by banning certain uses: the approach adopted varies according to the particular legal system. I am advised that the use of DDT, aldrin, dieldrin and endrin in houses and in some products used in house construction is banned or severely restricted in Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Holland and the United Kingdom. The use of lindane in these countries is generally less severely restricted. The use of chlorophenols, which are less persistent, is severely restricted in Denmark and in Germany. In the United Kingdom, the level of contaminants in chlorophenols used in wood preservatives is closely controlled through the pesticides safety precautions scheme.

Rates

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average increase in rates for each local authority in England; and if he will publish a table.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 7 May 1985, c. 304]: I have today placed in the Library a list of increases in rate/precept poundage in April 1985 for each local authority for which information is available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average increase in the rate poundage in each local authority in England of (a) domestic ratepayers, (b) commercial ratepayers and (c) industrial ratepayers, and if he will publish a table or tables.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 7 May 1985, c. 304]: I have today placed in the Library the increases in rate poundage in April 1985 for each rating authority for which information is available.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Frenchay Hospital (Animal Experiments)

Mr. Merchant asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if his Department will provide funds to Frenchay hospital in Bristol to accelerate the development of the techniques being developed there to replace the use of animals for practising microsurgical techniques.

Mr. Brooke: The Department's responsibilities for the support of publicly funded biomedical research are discharged by the Medical Research Council (MRC), which receives an annual grant-in-aid from the science budget, and by the universities, which receive block grants for teaching and research allocated on the advice of the Unversity Grants Committee. It is for the MRC and the universities to decide their respective scientific priorities within the resources allocated to them; this includes decisions on whether to give additional support to work already being supported by other bodies.

Burnham Committee

Mr. Forth asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to complete the current review of teachers' representation on the Burnham Committee.

Sir Keith Joseph: I aim to complete the review before the end of this calendar year.

EMPLOYMENT

Youth Training

Miss Boothroyd asked the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his reply of 30 April, Official Report, column 108, whether he will outline the selection procedure for the 15 per cent. of ex-trainees who are contacted to provide statistics of post-youth training scheme employment rates; whether he will list, by type of work undertaken whilst on youth training schemes, those contacted who comprised this 15 per cent. for each of the last 12 months; and whether he will further list the types of work undertaken whilst on youth training schemes by the 85 per cent. of ex-trainees not contacted for the compilation of the post-youth training scheme employment statistics for each of the last 12 months.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The 15 per cent. sample for the survey of young people who have left the youth training scheme is selected on a random basis. This ensures that the sample reflects all the types of scheme, and industrial sectors and occupational groups, experienced by young people on the youth training scheme as a whole, as well as the balance of provision between the modes and the range of trainees taking part in the scheme.

Young Persons

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to seek to repeal section 119A of the Factories Act 1961 relating to notification to the careers service when an employer takes into employment a young person aged 18 years or under; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have asked the Health and Safety Commission for advice about the need in present-day conditions for section 119A of the Factories Act. I await its response.

Shield Computer System

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he is satisfied with the procedures for removing firms registered on the Shield computer system which have closed down; and what steps are taken to ensure that totals recorded remain accurate.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I am satisfied that the records of the Shield register on the Health and Safety Executive's computer are changed when up-to-date information, which has been checked as accurate, becomes available. Labels are no longer used for recording information.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list as at 1 April 1985 and for previous years where figures are available the number of establishments registered on the Shield computer system where the Factory Inspectorate is responsible for enforcing the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act; if he will break the figures down by area office and are a industry group; and if he will seek to ensure that in all future annual reports of the Health and Safety Executive this information is included in a statistical appendix together with the approximate number of employed in total in such establishments.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: On 30 April 1985 the total number of establishments allocated on the Health and Safety Executive's Shield computer system to the Factory Inspectorate was 393,675. This compares with 393,237 on 31 December 1983, 322,233 on 31 December 1982 and 260,653 on 31 December 1981. The breakdown by areas on 30 April 1985 was:

	Establishments
South West	20,803
South	27,145
South East	24,788
London (formerly three areas and being reorganised into two at the time) (total)	52,414
East Anglia	20,242
Northern Home Counties	17,670
East Midlands	18,414
West Midlands	19,091
Wales	18,258
North Midlands	15,521
South Yorkshire and Humberside	16,766
West and North Yorkshire	21,652
Greater Manchester	15,850
Merseyside	15,429
Marches	15,569
North West	17,774
North East	16,025
Scotland East	19,888
Scotland West	20,376

A further breakdown by industry groups within areas could not be provided except at disproportionate cost.

The information held on Shield as to the number employed at each establishment is intended as a guide to inspectors, and may be several years out of date, depending on when the last visit took place. Totals would therefore not be meaningful.

HSE already publishes a large amount of statistical information in its various annual reports, but a tabulation of this kind is not felt to be of sufficiently general interest to be included.

Employment Medical Advisory Service

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current level of outstanding fees owed by private firms to the Employment Medical Advisory Service for medical examination undertaken; and whether he is satisfied with the procedures and sanctions for collection, enforcement and payment of such fees.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: On 31 March 1985, £29,888 had been outstanding for more than three months in respect of medical examinations carried out by the Employment Medical Advisory Service.

A new computerised accounting system, introduced by the Health and Safety Executive on 1 April, will enable the arrangements for the collection of outstanding debts to be improved.

The Health and Safety Executive is currently considering legal proceedings to enforce payment of outstanding debts.

Retail Trades

Mr. John Evans asked the Secretary of State for Employment when he received the report entitled "Pay and Employment in Four Retail Trades", commissioned from the department of applied economics, Cambridge university.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The final version of this report was received in November 1984. It was then the subject of further discussion with the researchers on points of technical and statistical detail until February this year.

Wages Councils

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report the statistical evidence concerning the impact on employment of the possible abolition of wages councils adduced by those individuals and organisations which have made representations advocating abolition of wages councils following the publication of the consultative document on the subject.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. Decisions on what, if anything, to publish as a result of this consultation exercise can only be taken after 31 May.

Milk Roundsmen (Child Labour)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many cases of the use of illegal child labour by milk roundsmen have been brought to his attention; and what action he has taken as a result.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [pursuant to his reply, 7 May 1985, c. 363-64]: None. Individual cases of illegal child employment by milk roundsmen are a matter for the appropriate enforcing authorities in England, Wales and Scotland.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Namibian Political Prisoners and Detainees

Mr. Terry Lewis asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further approach to the South African authorities to seek to secure the release of Namibian political prisoners and detainees.

Mr. Rifkind: We have consistently made clear to the South African authorities our concern over all human rights abuses in Namibia, including the practice of arbitrary arrest and detention without trial. We shall continue to do so whenever we consider this would be appropriate and effective.

Association of South East Asian Nations

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to meet his counterparts in the Association of South East Asian Nations; and if he will seek closer ties and regular meetings with them.

Mr. Luce: My right hon. and learned Friend attaches importance to maintaining close contact with his counterparts in the Association of South East Asian Nations. They meet regularly at EC-ASEAN Foreign Ministers' meetings and bilaterally whenever mutually convenient. My right hon. and learned Friend is always pleased to see ASEAN Foreign Ministers when they are in London and recently received the Thai Foreign Minister.

United Nations (Disarmament Resolutions)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government consult their North Atlantic Treaty Organisation allies and the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation itself before deciding upon their voting position at the United Nations on all disarmament resolutions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: Although the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation is not represented as a formal group within the United Nations system, delegations of its member states consult closely in the margins of most United Nations disarmament meetings, especially on those arms control and disarmament resolutions which have implications for our common security.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Air Conditioning (Upper Committee Floor)

Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will issue a general instruction to end the present practice of re-cycling 50 per cent. extracted polluted air through the air conditioning system supplying the Upper Committee Floor (South) windowless offices; and if he will arrange to have the stagnant humidity wells within the ducting drained of their water.

Mr. Biffen: I am informed that the roof-lit offices on the Upper Committee Floor (South) are ventilated with a mixture of 75 per cent. fresh air and 25 per cent. recirculated air. Air is recirculated as an energy conservation measure. The amount recirculated is calculated on the volume of fresh air needed for the various room sizes and the numbers of occupants, which is in accordance with the health and safety regulations.

All supply air is filtered and the relative humidity is controlled by means of steam jets. The humidity wells which once formed part of the system are no longer used and have had permanent drains installed to ensure that stagnant water does not accumulate within them.

SCOTLAND

Rates

9. Mr. Johnston asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give a figure for the shift in the burden of rates in Scotland to small shopkeepers.

Mr. Ancram: Small shops cannot be distinguished as a separate category of rateable premises in the information available to me, but the burden of rates on small shopkeepers and others whose valuations have been very steeply increased this year will be lessened by the measures my right hon. Friend will put before the House in accordance with the statement he made yesterday.

18. Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland which authorities he intends to take selective action against in Scotland, with a view to reducing rate levels.

Mr. Ancram: My right hon. Friend hopes to announce his decision shortly.

24. Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has had from the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities regarding the replacement of domestic rates with a poll tax.

Mr. Ancram: I have had no views from the convention on this matter since it commented, in response to the 1981 Green Paper, that poll tax as an addition to rates merited further examination.

29. Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what further steps he intends to take to relieve domestic and commercial ratepayers from the current year's rate demands.

Mr. Ancram: I refer the hon. Member to the statement my right hon. Friend made yesterday at columns 175-86.

30. Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the Government's plans for domestic rating relief after 1985-86.

Mr. Ancram: Decisions on domestic rate relief, together with all other aspects of rate support grant, are taken each year following consultation with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities. I will be reaching decisions on domestic rate relief in 1986-87 and following years in the usual way.

31. Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received about alternatives to the present rating system.

35. Mr. Hugh Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received concerning proposals to reform the rating system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today to the right hon. Member for Rutherglen (Mr. MacKenzie).

36. Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on options currently being considered for resolving the problem of the rating system.

Mr. Ancram: Not yet.

37. Dame Judith Hart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received from small businesses in the constituency of Clydesdale about the rises of up to 400 per cent. in rateable values following revaluation.

Mr. Younger: I have received a number of representations on this subject but cannot identify any particular ones from Clydesdale. I announced on 14 May the Government's proposals to protect Scottish ratepayers from the effects of very large rises in rateable value in 1985-86.

Anti-Poverty Programme

10. Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland why he has withdrawn Scotland from the EEC anti-poverty programme.

14. Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will reconsider his decision not to apply for assistance for Scotland from the EEC anti-poverty programme.

Mr. Ancram: After careful consideration, my right hon. Friend and I concluded that participation in the programme was not justified in the light of the potentially very limited benefits to Scotland; and that the balance of advantage lay in concentrating available resources on existing identified programmes and priorities. I see no reason to reconsider this decision.

Spending Programmes

12. Mr. Ewing asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to announce what spending programmes in his Department have been reduced as a result of switching £38·5 million to help with domestic rate relief.

Mr. Younger: I announced on 27 March, at columns 265-66, the reductions in cash limits made to finance the increase in domestic rate relief.

Industrial Development (Grampian Region)

13. Mr. Malone asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to meet the members of Grampian region council to discuss industrial development in the region.

Mr. Younger: I have no request from Grampian regional council for a meeting. Any such request would, of course, be given careful consideration.

Highlands Health Board

15. Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what additional funding is being made available to the Highlands health board by his Department to assist with the extra operational costs incurred through the opening of the Wick general hospital and Raigmore hospital, Inverness.

Mr. John MacKay: Health boards are expected to meet the running costs of new capital developments from the financial allocations made available to them through the SHARE formula.

Young People

16. Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he proposes to take any action to improve the opportunities for young people in Scotland.

Mr. Younger: Large sums of money have been allocated to a whole range of programmes to help young people to get better employment opportunities. These have been widely welcomed.

Job Creation

17. Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many jobs have been created in Scotland since June 1983; and how many people in Scotland are currently in employment or full-time training compared with the total in June 1983.

Mr. Younger: 23,830 new jobs were associated with offers of selective financial assistance over the period 1 July 1983 to 18 April 1985. The seasonally adjusted number of employees in employment has risen by 23,000 from 1,912,000 in June 1983 to 1,935,000 in December 1984. No statistics are compiled on the training provided directly by employers but the numbers engaged on the Manpower Services Commission's TOPS, YTS and youth opportunities programmes were 24,461 in June 1983 and 34,648 in March 1985.

Greater Glasgow Health Board

19. Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will next meet the chairman of the Greater Glasgow health board to discuss staffing problems.

Mr. John MacKay: Staffing problems are matters in the first instance for individual boards. Neither my right hon. Friend nor I have received a request for a meeting to discuss such matters with the chairman of Greater Glasgow health board whom I see frequently.

Revaluation

20. Mr. Gourlay asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received about revaluations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Younger: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my hon. Friend gave earlier today to the right hon. Member for Rutherglen (Mr. MacKenzie).

22. Mr. Lambie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will arrange to meet the Strathclyde assessor to discuss the 1985 revaluation.

Mr. Younger: My officials have been in touch as necessary with the Strathclyde assessor and with other assessors who have supplied certain information to me about the results of the 1985 revaluation. But I have no powers to influence the judgments of the assessors, for which they are answerable ultimately to the courts. I do not think meetings with them would be appropriate, since they would take up scarce time and resources and so serve to slow down the processing of appeals which is a major burden upon assessors at present.

Detoxification Units

21. Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many detoxification units there are; where they are situated; and if they admit only those suffering from alcohol addiction.

Mr. John MacKay: If the hon. Member is referring to the establishment of designated places as provided for under section 5 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 1980, the only designated place currently in operation is Albyn house, Aberdeen.

All consultant psychiatrists at psychiatric hospitals and general hospitals with psychiatric units may use the beds at their disposal to provide treatment, which would involve detoxification, for patients addicted to alcohol. There are, moreover, special alcohol units with facilities for inpatient treatment at the following hospitals:

Crichton Royal Hospital, Dumfries
Royal Edinburgh Hospital
Dykebar Hospital, Paisley
Argyll and Bute Hospital, Lochgilphead
Ravenscraig Hospital, Greenock
Gartnavel Royal Hospital, Glasgow
Monklands District General Hospital, Airdrie
Southern General Hospital, Glasgow
Hartwood Hospital, Shotts
Sunnyside Royal Hospital, Montrose
Bellsdyke Hospital, Larbert

Scottish National Farmers Union

23. Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the president of the Scottish National Farmers Union; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. John MacKay: My right hon. Friend, together with other Agriculture Ministers, met representatives of the National Farmers Unions on 20 March to discuss the European Commission's agricultural price-fixing proposals for 1985-86. The president and the general secretary represented the SNFU at that meeting.

My right hon. and noble Friend, the Minister of State, met the president on 16 April to discuss milk quotas.

Inshore Fishing

25. Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he proposes reform of the law relating to inshore fishing in Scottish waters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: Yes, my right hon. Friend hopes shortly to lay orders commencing and implementing the Inshore Fishing (Scotland) Act 1984.

Council Houses (Renfrew)

26. Mr. Adams asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with the Renfrew district council about assistance from his office to reduce the waiting list for a council house in the Renfrew district council area.

Mr. Ancram: None. It is the responsibility of Renfrew district council to consider the housing needs of its area and to take action accordingly. While the council's most recent housing plan indicates that the district has a crude surplus of general needs housing, my right hon. Friend has recognised the need for additional investment by increasing the council's capital allocation on the housing revenue account block by 24 per cent. in the current year.

Tourism

27. Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the future of tourism in Scotland, indicating the number of people now employed full-time and part-time in the tourist industry in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: The Scottish tourist industry has a sound base on which to build and offers good prospects for growth, with sales reaching record levels in 1983 and 1984. Tourism in Scotland is estimated to support, both directly and indirectly, approaching 100,000 full-time and part-time jobs, although due to the definitional problems this figure is inevitably subject to considerable uncertainty.

Teachers (Pay)

28. Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what further progress has been made towards resolving the current teachers' pay dispute; and if he will make a statement.

34. Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will make a statement about the teachers' pay dispute.

Mr. Younger: I refer my hon. Friend and the hon. Gentleman to the reply which I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East (Mr. Strang).

40. Mr. Douglas asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a further statement on the situation in Scottish schools as it relates to the current claim by teachers to have an independent review of their salaries.

Mr. Younger: This week, I understand that over 100 primary schools will be affected for three days by strike action by members of the Educational Institute of Scotland. In addition, primary teachers in 15 areas will be on strike for one day. Last term, 65,000 teacher days were lost in primary and secondary schools. Almost 30,000 teacher days have been lost this term to 10 May. All Scottish secondary schools were affected by a strike by EIS and SSTA members on 24 April but no strike action is being taken in secondary schools at present and the Scottish Certificate of Education examinations are going ahead normally. I am seriously concerned at the effects of all disruptive action by teachers, whether in the form of strikes, boycotts of curriculum development or other forms of non-co-operation and non-performance of their professional duties.

Cultural Heritage

32. Mr. McKelvey asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken to implement the Helsinki agreements to recognise and protect the cultural heritage of Scottish national minorities.

Mr. Younger: Section 23 of the National Heritage (Scotland) Act 1985 provides that I may make such payments as the Treasury may approve to any body whose activities appear to me to be likely to promote the development or understanding of cultural or scientific matters. In addition, I have for a number of years directly supported a range of voluntary organisations which promote the Gaelic language and culture. For 1985-86 financial provision for support to these organisations was increased by 17 per cent.

British Rail Engineering Ltd

33. Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to meet the board of British Rail Engineering Ltd to discuss the future of Springburn works; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: My right hon. Friend has no plans to meet the board of British Rail Engineering Ltd. The future of the Springburn works is a matter for its commercial judgment, taking account of the need to provide adequate repair and maintenance capacity to meet the current and future requirements of the railway.

Forestry

38. Sir Hector Monro asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial encouragement he is giving to private forestry; and what estimate he has made of new planting in the private sector in 1985-86.

Mr. John MacKay: Financial encouragement is given to private forestry through the various grant schemes administered by the Forestry Commission and by means of special tax arrangements which acknowledge the fact that forestry is a long-term investment. The commission's estimate of the new planting that will be carried out by the private sector in 1985-86, based upon expected grant applications during the year, is 17,000 hectares.

Hazardous Materials (Transport)

39. Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what criteria his Department uses in determining the routeing for the transport of noxious or hazardous materials within Scotland.

Mr. Ancram: There are specific requirements for the safe conveyance of such materials, but the Scottish Development Department does not prescribe routes for this purpose.

Forestry Commission

41. Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent changes there have been in staffing levels at the Foresty Commission.

Mr. John MacKay: The number of staff employed by the Forestry Commission was 6,836 at 31 March 1984 and 6,335 at 1 January 1985.

Cormorants

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report a copy of the licence to kill cormorants granted in 1985 to the South Esk settlement trust.

Mr. John MacKay: Licence applications are treated in confidence, and it would not be appropriate to publish copies of a licence in the Official Report. In this particular case, however, I can confirm that the licence was issued in pursuance of the provisions of section 16(1)(k) of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 and included a specific condition prohibiting shooting within the area of Montrose basin except by prior arrangements with the Scottish Wildlife Trust which manages this as a local nature reserve.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if the 1985 licence to kill cormorants issued to South Esk settlement trustees of Haughs of Kinnaird, Brechin, Angus, specifically stated as the grounds of authorising the killing of cormorants the prevention of damage to fisheries.

Mr. John Mackay: The licence was issued in pursuance of section 16(1)(k) of the Wildlife and Countryside Act which relates to the prevention of serious damage to fisheries.

Paupers' Funerals and Graves

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what reply he is making to the hon. Member for Fife, Central on the question of legislation concerning paupers' funerals and graves, details of which have been supplied to him.

Mr. John Mackay: A copy of my reply to the hon. Member has been placed in the Library.

Forestry Commission (Regional Advisory Committees)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will name, for each of the Forestry Commission's new regional advisory committees, the member who has been nominated primarily to represent the environmental interest.

Mr. John MacKay: The following members were appointed primarily to cover the environmental interest.

Regional Advisory Committee

Region	Member
North England	Dr. H. M. T. Frankland
East England	Mr. H. W. Mackworth-Praed
West England	Mr. I Mercer
Wales	Mr. J. M. Harrop
North Scotland	Mr. J. Grant
Mid Scotland	Mr. B. S. Brookes
South Scotland	Dr. R. Aitken

Renal Treatment (Funding)

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate the funding available for renal treatment in the west of Scotland in the current year and in 1984-85 and the number of staff and patients respectively; and what discussions he has had with the area health boards in the west of Scotland and the Kidney Patients Association about the level of funding.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his reply, 7 May 1985, c. 374]: Renal treatment in the west of Scotland is provided by the Greater Glasgow health board. The board is making £4·6 million available for this service in 1985-86, compared to £4·4 million in 1984-85.

Five consultants, 18 other medical staff and about 100 nurses are currently employed full-time in the treatment of patients suffering from chronic renal failure in the west of Scotland. In addition, other doctors and nurses devote part of their time to this service. In 1984, over 600 patients (including both inpatients and outpatients) were treated.

I have personally discussed the level of resources available for this service with the consultant in charge of the unit, and have had discussions with the president of the Kidney Patients Association. I have also been in correspondence with, and have spoken to, the chairman of Greater Glasgow health board on this subject.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Inter American Development Bank

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if it is his policy to instruct the United Kingdom delegation to the Inter American

Development Bank to support all proposals for technically sound projects for Nicaragua which are submitted to the European group for discussion; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if it is his policy to instruct the United Kingdom delegation to the Inter American Development Bank to support all proposals for the reconstruction of infrastructure in (a) Nicaragua and*(b)* El Salvador which are submitted to the European Group for discussion; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what instructions have been given to the British delegations at the Inter American Development Bank and the World Bank concerning proposals for (a) Nicaragua and (b) El Salavador; if there has been any change in these instructions since 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: Each proposal, whether for infrastructure or any other purpose, is considered on its merits. Such consideration has to have regard to the project's feasibility in the circumstances prevailing in the country, to its technical merits and to the recipient country's standing in relation to all the International financial institutions. Voting instructions during the period since 1980 have therefore varied from project to project.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all proposals which have been discussed by the European group but not submitted to the full board of the Inter American Development Bank; and if he will state the reasons for their non-submission.

Mr. Rifkind: There have been no such proposals. Project proposals are considered only within the European constituency of which the United Kingdom is a member when the bank issues a formal project document; and where such a document is issued, the project automatically goes before the executive board.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library copies of all loans and credits approved by the Inter American Development Bank to Nicaragua since 1979 together with any conditions which were attached to the loans.

Mr. Rifkind: Yes. The only conditions attached to the loans were those normal for the type of loan to any recipient country.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the occasions since 1982 on which the United Kingdom, as represented by the European executive director on the board of the Inter American Development Bank, has lodged an official protest; and if he will place a copy of such protests in the Library.

Mr. Rifkind: There have been no such protests.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all loans and credits to (a) Nicaragua and (b) El Salvador since 1979 which have been discussed at (i) the board of the Inter American Development Bank and (ii) the European group to the Inter American Development Bank stating in each case the outcome of the discussions.

Mr. Rifkind: During the period in question the following projects were discussed by the executive board of the Inter American Development Bank:

The United Kingdom is represented on the board by an executive director, currently a German Government official, who also represents his own Government and those of six other European countries. Those eight countries do not meet in advance of board meetings, but they convey their instructions separately to the executive director.

Nicaragua and El Salvador (Aid)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library copies of all Ministerial statements made since 1982 concerning aid, loans and credits to (a) Nicaragua and (b) El Salvador.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer the hon. Member to the answers given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development to the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) on 15 December 1983 a column 526 and on 25 April 1984 at column 483 and by my hon. Friend the Member for Wycombe (Mr. Whitney) on 16 December 1983 at columns 609-10. Copies of the relevant Hansards are already in the Library.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Housing Executive Homes

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many houses owned by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in Belfast are fitted with (a) metal window frames, (b) PVC window frames and (c) wooden window frames;

(2) how many homes built with metal window frames and owned by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive have had these frames replaced with frames other than metal; and what are the principal estates on which such work has occurred.

Mr. Chris Patten: These are matters for the chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, who has advised me that information in the form requested is not readily available and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

Rates (Summonses)

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many summonses for the non-payment of rates have been issued by the rating division of the Department of the Environment in each of the last four years;

(2) how many summonses issued for the non-payment of rates by Department of the Environment rating division in each of the last five years were subsequently withdrawn; and what were the principal reasons for these withdrawals;

(3) what was the total cost of issuing summonses by the Department of the Environment rating division for the non-payment of rates in each of the last five years;

(4) what is the policy of the Department of the Environment rating division with regard to cases where summonses for the non-payment of rates have been issued wrongly; and if, in these circumstances, it is his policy to seek to recover from those summoned the cost of the summons.

Mr. Chris Patten: The numbers of summonses issued are as follows:

	Numbers
1981-82	24,496
1982-83	15,229
1983-84	25,382
1984-85	34,305

The numbers of summonses withdrawn are as follows:

	Numbers
1980-81	15,492
1981-82	18,130
1982-83	*11,400
1983-84	21,279
1984-85	25,749

* Estimated figure.

The principal reason for withdrawing summonses was the payment of the debt prior to the court hearing.

Legal expenses incurred in the issuing of summonses are as follows:

	Numbers
1982-83	22,511
1983-84	86,604
1984-85	244,162

Costs for 1980-81 and 1981-82 are not readily available.

The policy in those cases where summonses have been issued wrongly is to withdraw the summons and to waive the costs involved.

Food Shops (Smoking)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any plans to take steps to prohibit smoking in shops and halls which are specifically for the sale of fresh or frozen food; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: Staff are already prohibited from smoking in such premises by the Food Hygiene (General) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1964. There are no plans to introduce legislation to prohibit the public from smoking in food establishments, as there is no evidence that open food is at risk of contamination from customers' smoking.

Warnock Report

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the names of all organisations in Ulster which have responded to the Warnock report on human fertilisation and embryology; and how many have supported the recommendations on research and how many have opposed them.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information is as follows:

The Northern Ireland Assembly
Northern Health and Social Services Board
Western Health and Social Services Board
Southern Health and Social Services Board
Eastern Health and Social Services Board
The Royal College of General Practitioners—Northern Ireland Faculty
Royal College of Nursing—Northern Ireland Board
The National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting for Northern Ireland
The Royal College of Midwives — Northern Ireland Board
Association of Nurse Administrators (Northern Ireland Division)
The Health Visitors' Association
The Catholic Bishops in Northern Ireland
Church of Ireland Social and Family Welfare Association
Church of Ireland Armagh Diocesan Board of Social Responsibility LIFE (Northern Ireland)
Women's Forum—Northern Ireland
The National Association for the Childless (Northern Ireland)
The Association of District Committees for the Health and Personal Social Services
Ballymena Borough Council
Derry City Council
Fermanagh District Council
Limavady District Council
Down District Council
Newtownabbey Borough Council
Presbytery of Ballymena — the Presbyterian Church in Ireland
Reformed Presbyterian Church of Ireland
Ministry of Healing Committee of the Methodist Church
Western Presbytery of the Reformed Presbyterian Church of Ireland
Willowfield Parish Church
Clinical Genetics Society
The Baptist Union of Ireland
The Methodist Church in Ireland
The Free Presbyterian Church of Ulster
The Presbyterian Church in Ireland
The Joint Committee of Professional Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting Associations (Northern Ireland)
The Society for the Protection of Unborn Children
The Sisters of Nazareth Adoption Society
The Family Planning Association

Twenty one organisations opposed embryo research. Eleven bodies considered research acceptable in certain circumstances. Six bodies either expressed no opinion or were unable to reach any consensus view on this aspect of the report.

Dental Technicians

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many dental technicians (a) are employed by health boards in Northern Ireland, and (b) also undertake private contract work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: (a) 22: (b) information is not held on the numbers, if any, undertaking private contract work.

Belfast Parade (Incident)

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the investigation into the events which took place during the parade in Belfast on the afternoon of 12 August 1984.

Mr. Hurd: I have received a report from the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary on the investigation into the events surrounding the so-called anti-internment parade in Belfast last August 12. The investigation was supervised by Mr. Philip Myer, Her Majesty's Inspector of Constabulary, who has assured me that the enquiry has been fully and most competently carried out.

Arising from those events, the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland has directed a charge of manslaugher against a reserve constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary, and a lesser charge against another member of the force. Disciplinary action is being considered in other cases.

Those are matters for the courts and the disciplinary procedures of the Royal Ulster Constabulary. Since the events evoked widespread concern at the time, I wish to make a brief comment on the broader aspects of public policy. First, this parade was one of which the police had not been given the proper notice as required by law. This is no mere legal technicality. The purpose of notice is to enable the police to make arrangments for the keeping of order. It was, however, a primary objective of Provisional Sinn Fein to make that task as difficult as possible for the police. That objective was largely successful, to the extent that the police were unable to arrest Martin Galvin, against whom an exclusion order from the United Kingdom had been made.

Secondly, controversy has centred on the reaction of the police in the moments following Mr. Gavin's appearance on the speaker's rostrum. The Chief Constable's report identified shortcomings in the preparatory planning for control of the parade, and errors of judgment and insufficiently firm command on the ground. The organisational and tactical lessons of this will, I am sure, be well learned. I understand that the Chief Constable has taken action within the force to remedy the position and to ensure that the same weaknesses of command and control do not recur.

Stop Orders

Mr. Clifford Forsythe asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many stop orders the planning authorities have issued in each of the last three years for which figures are available because building work had commenced before planning permission had been given, in (a) the Antrim borough council area and (b) the Newtownabbey borough council area; and in how many of these cases planning permission was subsequently granted;

(2) how many stop orders were issued by the planning authorities in each of the last three years for which figures are available because they contravened regulations on ribbon development in (a) the Antrim borough council area and (b) the Newtownabbey borough area; and in how many of these cases planning permission was subsequently given.

Mr. Chris Patten: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Planning Applications

Mr. Clifford Forsythe asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many planning applications have been turned down in each of the last three years for which figures are available because they were deemed to infringe the area of special control in (a) the Antrim borough council area and (b) the Newtownabbey borough council area.

Mr. Chris Patten: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

DEFENCE

Military Training Courses

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to the answer of 28 March, Official Report, column 319, he will define the term generally accepted standards on human rights in respect of candidates for places on military training courses in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lee: It is not possible to be precise about such definitions, but we would expect candidates who conform to the normal standards of civilised behaviour.

Non-strategic Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether any work has been done on preliminary studies for new British non-strategic nuclear weapons.

Mr. Butler: It is normal practice to keep under review the need to replace all United Kingdom in-service weapons systems. There are, however, no plans to replace the United Kingdom's current generation of tactical nuclear weapons and there is no early requirement to do so.

Anti-submarine Nuclear Bombs

Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Defence what studies have been conducted concerning the long-term environmental effects of detonating anti-submarine nuclear bombs.

Mr. Butler: No such studies have been carried out by my Department.

Artillery Shells

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will describe the difference between an artillery shell filled with (i) TNT and (ii) RDX/TNT mix with particular reference to (a) the cost per shell for production, (b) its battlefield effectiveness and (c) its explosive power.

Mr. Butler: Shells filled with RDX/TNT cost slightly more, and have a greater explosive power and battlefield effectiveness, than shells filled solely with TNT.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence why a recent order for 11,000 medium artillery shells has been placed with PRB in Belgium.

Mr. Butler: The contract for 11,000 shells was awarded to PRB because, following a competitive tender exercise, its tender offered the best value for money.

FV 342 (Repairs)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when the information that the decision of headquarters British Army of the Rhine that the repairs to the FV342 will not be possible in Germany and first conveyed to the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces, the deputy under secretary (civilian management) and the assistant secretary QMG by a representative of the Civil Service trade unions on 26 April, was officially given to them;

(2) whether, following the decision of headquarters British Army of the Rhine that repairs of the FV432 will not now be possible in Germany, he will re-examine the programme for the repair of the FV432 with a view to using the facility of the Royal Electrical and Mechanical Engineers workshop at Chilwell or Bicester.

Mr. Lee: I shall answer shortly.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Income Tax

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much income tax was received during 1983-84 from each of the following income groups: (a) under £2,000, (b) £2,000 to £3,000, (c) £3,000 to £4,000, (d) £4,000 to £5,000, (e) £5,000 to £6,000, (f) £6,000 to £7,000, (g) £7,000 to £8,000, (h) £8,000 to £9,000, (i) £9,000 to £10,000, (j) £10,000 to £11,000, (k) £11,000 to £12,000 and (l) £12,000 to £20,000; and if he will provide for each of the income brackets listed the number of taxpayers in each bracket.

Mr. Moore: Figures are available on the basis of income tax due in respect of income in a year, not tax received in the year. The latest estimates for 1983-84, based on projections from the 1982-83 survey of personal incomes, are as follows:

Range of total incomes (lower limit)* £	Taxpayers† '000	Total income tax due‡ £ million
under 2,000	250	neg
2,000	1,500	300
3,000	1,850	800
4,000	2,150	1,300
5,000	2,100	1,800
6,000	2,050	2,200
7,000	1,850	2,400
8,000	1,600	2,500
9,000	1,350	2,300
10,000	1,200	2,300
11,000	850	1,800
12,000	2,900	8,800
20,000	850	7,900
	20,500	34,400

*Total income includes only those forms of income liable to tax.
†Counting married couples as one.
‡Amounts have been rounded to the nearest £100 million, neg = less than £50 million.

Johnson Matthey Bankers

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) whether, pursuant to his reply on 7 May, Official Report, column 726, he will list the categories of departures from normal prudent banking practice of Johnson Matthey Bankers; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he will ask the review body considering banking supervision and the affairs of Johnson Matthey Bankers to investigate whether, following the departures of Johnson Matthey Bankers from normal prudent banking practice, any employee of Johnson Matthey Bankers was subject to dismissal or other disciplinary action.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have nothing to add to the answers given to the hon. Member on 3 May, 7 May and 8 May, at columns 256, 726 and 402 respectively.

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the £100 million facility granted to Johnson Matthey by the Bank of England has been converted into its capital base.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the statement issued by the Bank of England on 13 May, of which a copy has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated loss to the Inland Revenue from the arrangements whereby the rescue of Johnson Matthey Bankers is to be financed by banks other than the Bank of England.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Any such estimates can only be hypothetical, since tax revenue forgone as a result of indemnities provided by the private sector banks participating in the rescue operation would have to be measured against the loss of revenue—in the form of relief for bad debts — which would have arisen if Johnson Matthey Bankers had been allowed to fail.

Pound Sterling

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his reply, Official Report, 22 April, column 374, concerning the exchange rate of the pound sterling against certain European monetary system currencies, if he will indicate the changes in the fluctuation margins; if he will add the April 1985 figures to his previous answer on the December 1982 basis, and on the basis of the margin relevant in April; and if he will indicate the number of occasions on which the pound sterling moved outside its notional fluctuation margins on the basis of the changes in the margins which have occurred since 1982.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

European Community Budget

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report the percentage increase in EC expenditure and the percentage increase in EC own resources in 1984 and forecasts for 1985; whether the additional subscriptions are to be included in own resources for the purpose of the EC budget calculations; and what is his forecast of the percentage of spending accounted for them by the common agricultural policy in 1985.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Family Incomes

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the net weekly spending power of a man with a wife and one child aged eight years, whose weekly income is (i) £50, (ii) £60 and (iii) £70, whose rent and rates are £15·60 and £7·35, respectively, and who are receiving all state benefits to which they are entitled (a) when he is working and (b) if he were unemployed, and assuming that both husband and wife were earning the £4 disregarded income;

(2) what is the net weekly spending power of a man with a wife and one child aged eight years, whose weekly income is (i) £80, (ii) £90, (iii) £100, (iv) £110 and (v) £120, whose rent and rates are £20 and £7, respectively, and who are receiving all state benefits to which they are entitled (a) when he is working and (b) if he were unemployed, assuming that both husband and wife were earning the £4 disregarded income;

(3) what is the net weekly spending power of a man with a wife and one child aged eight years, whose weekly income is (i) £130, (ii) £140 and (iii) £150, whose rent and rates are £30 and £10, respectively, and who are receiving all state benefits to which they are entitled (a) when he is working and (b) if he were unemployed, assuming that both husband and wife were earning the £4 disregarded income;

(4) what is the net weekly spending power of a man with a wife and three children aged four, eight and 11 years, whose rent and rates are £15·60 and £7·35, respectively, as shown in the tax benefit model tables November 1984, whose income is (i) £50, (ii) £60 and (iii) £70 per week, and who are receiving all state benefits to which they are entitled (a) when he is working and (b) if he were unemployed, assuming that both husband and wife were earning the £4 disregarded income;

(5) what is the net weekly spending power of a man with a wife and three children aged four, eight and 11 years, whose weekly income is (i) £80, (ii) £90, (iii) £100, (iv) £110 and (v) £120, whose rent and rates are £20 and £7, respectively, and who are receiving all state benefits to which they are entitled (a) when he is working and (b) if he were unemployed, assuming that both husband and wife were earning the £4 disregarded income;

(6) what is the net weekly spending power of a man with a wife and three children aged four, eight and 11 years, whose weekly income is (i) £130, (ii) £140 and (iii) £150, whose rent and rates are £30 and £10, respectively, and who are receiving all state benefits to which they are entitled (a) when he is working and (b) if he were unemployed, assuming that both husband and wife were earning the £4 disregarded income;

(7) what is the net weekly spending power of a man with a wife and four children aged four, eight, 11 and 15 years, whose income is (i) £50, (ii) £60 and (iii) £70 per week, whose rent and rates are £15·60 and £7·35, respectively, and who are receiving all state benefits to which they are entitled (a) when he is working and (b) if he were unemployed, assuming that both husband and wife were earning the £4 disregarded income;

(8) what is the net weekly spending power of a man with a wife and four children aged four, eight, 11 and 15 years, whose income is (i) £80, (ii) £90, (iii) £100, (iv) £110 and (v) £120 per week, whose rent and rates are £20

and £7, respectively, and who are receiving all state benefits to which they are entitled (a) when he is working and (b) if he were unemployed, assuming that both husband and wife were earning the £4 disregarded income;

(9) what is the net weekly spending power of a man with a wife and four children aged four, eight, 11 and 15 years, whose income is (i) £130, (ii) £140, (iii) £150 per week, whose rent and rates are £30 and £10, respectively, and who are receiving all state benefits to which they are entitled (a) when he is working and (b) if he were unemployed, assuming that both husband and wife were earning the £4 disregarded income.

Mr. Whitney: The information requested is given in the table. Assumptions are as stated in the questions and otherwise as in the November 1984 DHSS tax-benefit model tables, of which a copy is in the Library. The combinations of assumptions stated in the questions are not typical, and apply in only a very small proportion of cases, as explained in the notes to the table. The comparisons between income in and out of work are therefore misleading and have no general application.

(b) Unemployed family in receipt of supplementary benefit and part-time earnings‖	—	65·75	95·94	112·89

* It is estimated that among married couples with children living in rented accommodation where the head is in full-time work, just over 2 per cent. earn £70 or less a week. Of these, about a third (about 15,000 families) pay £22·95 or more a week in rent and rates.

† It is estimated that among couples with children living in rented accommodation where the head is in full-time work, less than 2 per cent. (about 35,000) earn between £70 and £120 a week gross and pay rent and rates as high as the figure of £27 assumed in these questions.

‡ The number of married couples with children in these circumstances—ie with the head of the family in full-time work, earning between £120 and £150 gross weekly, and the family living in rented accommodation and paying £40 or more weekly rent and rates—is too small to estimate or quantify.

‖ Latest estimates show that only about 1·5 per cent. of married unemployed supplementary benefit claimants have part-time earnings. The proportion where both the claimant and the spouse works is not known, but must be less than 1·5 per cent.

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will estimate the effect of the recent Budget changes on the net weekly spending power of a man with a wife and two children aged eight and 11 years whose income is £100 per week and whose rent and rates are £20 and £7, resepctively (a) when he is working and (b) if he were unemployed, and assuming that he and his wife were both earning the £4 disregarded income and in each case were receiving all the benefits to which they were entitled;

(2) if he will estimate the effect of the recent Budget changes on the net weekly spending power of a man and a wife with two children aged 11 and 15 years whose income is £120 per week, whose rent and rates are £20 and £7 per week, respectively, and who are receiving all state benefits to which they are entitled (a) when he is working and (b) if he was unemployed, and assuming that both husband and wife were earning the £4 disregarded income.

Mr. Whitney: On the stated assumptions (and otherwise on the basis of the assumptions in the November 1984 DHSS tax-benefit model tables) the effect of the recent budget changes would be to increase net weekly spending power from April 1985 by £1·73 where the man was earning £100 or £120 a week. Where the man was unemployed, and in receipt of supplementary benefit, the changes would have no effect on net weekly spending power.

NHS (Hospital Readmission)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information is available to him about re-admissions of patients into National Health Service hospitals in each year since 1979.

Mr. John Patten: Information on readmission is available centrally only for mental illness and mental handicap hospitals and units. The total numbers of such readmissions between 1979 and 1983 are given in the table. Further details for the years up to 1982, including some analyses by sex, age and diagnostic group, are given in the report "In-patient statistics from the mental health inquiry for England 1982", copies of which are in the Library.

Readmissions to mental illness and mental handicap hospitals and units in England

*Number of readmissions

Year	Mental illness hospitals and units	Mental handicap hospitals and units
1979	120,073	15,733
1980	127,184	17,915
1981	132,893	20,854
1982	133,475	23,820
1983	138,080	29,729

* Some patients have more than one readmission in a year and are represented more than once in the figures. The figures include admissions as part of a programme for sharing responsibility with caring relatives.

NHS (Pensions)

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the total number of National Health Service employees entitled to index-linked pensions;

(2) what is the total number of National Health Service ancillary staff entitled to index-linked pensions.

Mr. John Patten: On 18 December 1984, 757,000 NHS employees were members of the National Health Service superannuation scheme and can be expected to become entitled to index-linked pensions. Of these, 130,000 were classified as manual workers.

Leukaemia (East Anglia)

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people have died of leukaemia in each health district of the East Anglian regional health authority in each of the last 10 years; and how these figures break down by age and sex.

Mr. John Patten: The information is given in the tables. Due to reorganisation of the National Health Service, the areas shown for 1975-80 are not conterminous with those for the later years, and hence the figures for the two periods are not comparable.

Chiropodists

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to make a decision on the future of the chiropody profession.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We are still considering the result of discussions we had last year with interested professional bodies. However those discussions failed to produce any clear consensus of opinion within the chiropody profession and are not likely to lead to any significant changes. We do not propose to introduce any legislation on the subject.

Disability Pensions

Mr. Body asked the Secretary of State for Social Services in what circumstances a special exception is made to the general rule in awarding a disability pension from the date of the commencement of the period of the assessment, so that the disability pension may be back-dated to an earlier date.

Mr. Newton: Industrial injuries disablement pension cannot be paid for a period earlier than 90 days from the date of the accident or onset of the industrial disease. Where a claim is made more than 90 days after disablement occurred, payment may be back-dated if the claimant had a good reason for the delay, such as physical or mental incapacity or official misdirection.

War disablement pension is usually made from the date of the relevant claim or appeal. Special exception can be made and a payment from an earlier date considered only where the claimant had a good reason for the delay as described above.

If my hon. Friend has a particular case in mind, I should be happy to look into it for him.

Population Statistics

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his Department's latest estimate of the number of (a) single men and (b) single women, respectively, over the age of 16 years living in the United Kingdom.

Mr. John Patten: The latest estimate relates to 30 June 1983 and is as follows:

	Number
Single Men	6,170,000
Single Women	5,090,000

Common Earnings Rule

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what net savings he expects to make as a result of his decision to introduce a common earnings rule of £28·45 for adult dependants of claimants of (a) invalidity benefit, (b) retirement pension, (c) severe disablement allowance and (d) unemployability supplement.

Mr. Newton: The proposal to introduce a common earnings rule of £28·45 is estimated to produce savings of £2 million in the 1985-86 financial year, £10 million in the 1986-87 year, and £20 million in the 1987-88 year. The savings are expected to be almost equally distributed between the invalidity and retirement pensions. Savings from severe disablement allowance and the unemployability supplement are expected to be insignificant.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the letter sent to the Minister with responsibility for the disabled on 27 April by the chairman of the Joint Committee for the Disabled about the level of the mobility allowance, together with his reply.

Mr. Newton: The letters are as follows:

I refer to our previous correspondence on motoring costs and the value of the mobility allowance — my letter of 15 December 1985 and your reply of 14 January 1985, reference PO(2)4810/14.

Following the March Budget statement, I have updated the schedule comparing motoring costs with mobility allowance values. As you will see, and as you no doubt appreciated, the increase in tax on petrol and inflation in general have seriously increased the gap between motoring costs and the value of the mobility allowance.

As you will see from the enclosed printout (produced on the indentical basis to that of the December 1984 schedule), the index of motoring costs has increased from 206 to 221 in comparison with the index of the MobA rate of 200.

If disabled people's mobility is not to continue to be reduced, the mobility allowance will have to be raised this coming November by 10 per cent. at the very least.

Peter Large

Thank you for your further letter of 27 April enclosing an updated schedule comparing the increases in mobility allowance and motoring costs since 1978.

I again note the results but I do not think that there is anything which I can usefully add to my reply to you on 14 January which was subsequently published. [Official Report, Vol. 71 c. 60-61]. The increase of mobility allowance from November will be announced, as usual, in June.

Tony Newton

Childbirth (Statistics)

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has concerning the numbers and rate per 1,000 births of caesarian section deliveries in each of the regional health authorities.

Mr. John Patten: The available information, derived from the hospital inpatient inquiry is given in the table.

The estimated number of deliveries shown is less than the number of births by caesarean section because multiple births are counted as single deliveries. The rates expressed per 1,000 live births may differ slightly from other published rates which are expressed per 1,000 total deliveries.

Estimated number of Caesarean section deliveries from HIPE and rate per thousand live births by Regional Health Authority of mothers usual residence 1982, 1983 (provisional).

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has concerning comparative survival rates in different regions following birth as a result of (a) normal delivery, (b) forceps delivery and (c) caesarian section delivery.

Mr. John Patten: We do not collect sufficient information centrally to give a reliable comparison of survival rates for the different regions and methods of delivery.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has concerning the rates of use of general anaesthetic in childbirth in each of the different health regions.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has concerning the percentage of total births which require caesarean section delivery in England and Wales in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. John Patten: The available information, derived from the hospital inpatient inquiry, is shown in the table. This covers England and Wales in 1979-81 and England in 1982-83. Statistics for Wales in 1982-83 are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Multiple births are counted as single deliveries. These figures therefore differ from other published rates that are expressed as percentages of total deliveries.

Estimated number of caesarean section deliveries as a percentage of total live and still births: England and Wales 1979-81, England 1982, 1983 (Provisional)

	Year	Percentage
England and Wales	1979	8·2
	1980	8·7
	1981	9·0
England	1982	9·8

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has concerning the average relative costs of normal deliveries, caesarean deliveries and forceps deliveries.

Mr. John Patten: Information is not collected centrally on the average costs of different types of delivery, but my hon. Friend may find the table useful. Average costs will depend on many factors other than postnatal stay, for example the time spent in hospital before delivery, the cost of the delivery itself and the amount of professional care required by the mother before and after delivery.

Estimated mean postnatal stay of delivered cases in the hospital of delivery: 1980, England and Wales

Method of delivery	Mean length of stay (days)
Spontaneous*	5·3
Caesarean section	12·9
Instrumental†	7·7
Other and unspecified	7·2

* Includes spontaneous breech delivery.

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he has taken to ensure that doctors and pharmacists understand the rules for limited list prescribing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The regulations governing the selected list are inevitably complex. As a result doctors and pharmacists are finding it difficult to decide when scheduled drugs may be dispensed against prescriptions for non-scheduled ones with the same ingredients. The point has been made to us that the Government's intentions should be more clearly expressed. We accept this view and propose to amend the regulations as soon as possible in order to put their meaning beyond any doubt. The appropriate representative bodies are being consulted urgently about the proposed amendments in the usual way.

War Pensioners (Surgical Appliances)

Mr. Crouch asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the report on the supply of surgical appliances to war pensioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The report gives the results of a study by Research Surveys of Great Britain Ltd. which forms an extension of the survey of artificial limb users described in a reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Sir H. Rossi) on 27 July 1984 at columns 853-4.

The study was funded by the Department and carried out at the end of 1984 at the request of the working party which, under the chairmanship of Professor Ian McColl, is reviewing the services provided by artificial limb and appliance centres in England. It was designed primarily to assess war pensioners' experience of the provision through the centres of surgical appliances, and involved a postal survey of 1,798 individuals.

Most of those surveyed said they were fairly satified or very satisfied with the service currently provided. Five per cent. were on the whole dissatisfied, and many of these were concerned about problems with appliances, particularly those of getting a well-fitting appliance. The survey indicated a low level of awareness among war pensioners that the National Health Service also provides a comprehensive surgical appliances service through hospitals. Of those who had used both services a small majority preferred that provided by the hospitals.

With the agreement of Professor McColl I am placing copies of the report in the Library and sending copies to organisations representing war pensioners. Copies will be available to other interested organisations on request.

Benefits

Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of those eligible claimed (a) supplementary benefit, (b) family income supplement and (c) rent rebate, rate rebate or housing benefit in each of the last five financial years for which statistics are available.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 10 May 1985, c. 543]: The available information is given in the table. The estimates of take-up of rent rebates and allowances and rate rebates relate to England and Wales. Estimates for Scotland are not available.

Estimates of take-up of supplementary benefit in 1983 are expected within the next two or three months. Further estimates of take-up of family income supplement and the first estimate of take-up under the 1983 housing benefit scheme are expected early next year.

Dr. Charles Entwistle

Mr. Beaumont-Dark asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the suspension since 1981 of Dr. Charles Entwistle from Rubery Hill hospital; and when he now expects the matter to be resolved.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 13 May 1985, c. 32]: Following the conclusion of an appeal to the Secretary of State and the advice of a professional committee which sat in July 1984, we directed that the suspension of Dr. Entwistle by the West Midlands regional health authority shall be continued expressly and only for the purpose of holding a committee of inquiry as soon as possible. The authority is now reporting to our Department on their progress in setting up the inquiry which is expected to last for a month. No date has yet been decided but I very much hope that the inquiry will begin in the near future.

When this case has been concluded, we will review the need for further guidance to Authorities to ensure that cases of this kind do not recur.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 16 May 1985

HOME DEPARTMENT

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the cost to the Metropolitan police of providing at football matches in London additional police officers whose costs were not defrayed by the football clubs themselves.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that this information is not available. Metropolitan police charges to football clubs for policing at matches are based on the full economic cost of a previously agreed number of police officers posted inside the ground. Additional officers may, at the discretion of the police, be deployed inside the ground if the need arises on the day, and the club would not be charged for these. Clubs are not required to meet the cost of officers posted in the streets and other public places outside the ground; this is an ordinary policing requirement.

Community Radio

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to make a further announcement about the development of community radio and the granting of licences for experimental low power transmissions.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Mitcham and Morden (Mrs. Rumbold) on 9 May at column 469.

Northumbrian Police

Mr. Garrett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the authorised establishment of the Northumbrian police as at 31 March; how many officers there were actually in post; to what he ascribes the deficiency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The authorised establishment of the Northumbrian police is 3,378, an increase of 53 since May 1979. The strength of the force was 3,295 on 31 March 1985. Police manpower levels fluctuate from month to month because of different recruiting and wastage patterns, seasonal changes and other local reasons. I understand that there was further recruitment to the Northumbrian police in April 1985, and the present strength is 3,314. The number of full-time civilian staff in the force has increased by 211 to 931 since May 1979, including an increase of 81 in the last year.

Irradiated Fuel Leak (Temple Mills)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what emergency services were present at Temple Mills in east London on 9 May to deal with the suspected leak from an irradiated fuel flask.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Officers from the British Transport police, the Metropolitan police, and the London fire brigade attended.

Missing Persons

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a table showing juveniles and vulnerable adults who were (a) recorded as missing from outside the Metropolitan police district, including overseas, and (b) who were traced or identified, broken down under each heading by age and sex, for each of the last 10 available years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Metropolitan Police (Road Accidents)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answers to the hon. Member for Leicester, East on 13 May, if he will provide a breakdown as between marked and unmarked police vehicles of the figures relating to (a) road accidents involving Metropolitan police vehicles on emergency calls and (b) casualties resulting from road accidents involving Metropolitan police vehicles on emergency calls.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The precise figures requested are not readily available. The breakdown between marked and unmarked Metropolitan police vehicles involved in accidents when answering emergency calls or pursuing suspect vehicles in 1984 in which death or injury resulted, is as follows:

	Marked vehicles	Unmarked vehicles
Fatal accidents	4	1
Injury accidents	33	10

Television Detector Vans

Mr. Sumberg asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many detector vans are used by the Post Office for the purpose of detecting those who have not paid their television licences in the Greater London area and in each of the six metropolitan counties.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The 22 detector vans are available for use throughout the country, though at any one time they may all be concentrated in a particular metropolitan or other area.

Benzodiazepine

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will have consultations with (a the Association of British Social Workers, (b) the National Society for Mentally Handicapped Children and Adults, (c) National Association for Mental Health, (d) the Medical Practitioners Union, (e) social services departments, (f) the Transport and General Workers Union, (g) the Confederation of Health Service Employees, (h) the National Union of Public Employees and (i) the General Municipal, Boilermakers and Allied Trades Union about the possible rescheduling of benzodiazepine drugs under the United Nations convention on psychotropic substances.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend will be considering shortly how these drugs should be scheduled under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 and he will be happy to take into consideration, at this stage, any comments which any organisation may wish to put to him

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Farm Machinery

40. Mr. Cash asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the current level of United Kingdom farm machinery exports.

Mr. Channon: In 1984 agricultural machinery (excluding wheeled agricultural tractors) to the value of £138·7 million (fob) was exported.

Source: Business Monitor PQ 3211.

Silk

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has recently held discussions with representatives of the Chinese Government concerning restrictions on the import of Chinese silk; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: No. However, my officials are in contact with the Chinese authorities concerning the administration of the import licensing controls.

Companies (Subordinate Legislation)

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has now finalised his plans for remaking subordinate legislation in the light of the consolidation of the Companies Acts.

Mr. Fletcher: Yes. The instruments to be remade are as follows:

The Companies (Forms) Regulations
The Companies (Disqualification Orders) Regulations
The Companies (Registers and other Records) Regulations
The Companies (Disclosure of Directors' Interests) (Exceptions) Regulations
Stock Exchange (Designation of Nominees) Order
The Companies (Unregistered Companies) Regulations

In addition, we shall be revising the Companies (Alteration of Table A etc.) Regulations in order to clarify various points raised with the Department since the regulations were published last October and to make them easier to use.

The Companies (Unregistered Companies) Regulations were laid before the House on 8 May. The remaining instruments will be laid shortly with a view to their all coming into effect on 1 July at the same time as the consolidation Acts.

Weights and Measures

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether it is intended to publish the report of the Eden committee on the "Metrological Control of Weighing and Measuring for the Use for Trade".

Mr. Fletcher: Arrangements are now in hand to publish the report in full. Publication will be followed by extensive consultation with all the relevant interests. I shall inform the House when copies of the report are available. In the meantime, I have placed a copy of the Committee's recommendations in the Library.

WALES

Lobster Fisheries

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning possible local byelaws for the protection of lobster fisheries from over-exploitation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I have received representations from one fisherman about a draft byelaw prepared by the South Wales Sea Fisheries Committee with a view to licensing lobster fishing in its district. Should such a byelaw be submitted formally to me it would be advertised so as to allow me to take any objections into account before deciding on its confirmation.

South of Cardiff Redevelopment Scheme

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the progress so far on the south of Cardiff redevelopment scheme.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Since I gave approval, in principle, for urban development grant in respect of the development proposals by Tarmac, work on the necessary legal arrangements has been continuing and is progressing well. A public inquiry into the compulsory purchase of land needed for the development ended on 22 April and the inspector will be submitting his report to me next month. I hope to be able to announce my decisions on the compulsory purchase orders by the end of June.

UHT Milk

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales how much UHT milk is currently consumed in Wales; and how much of this consumption consists of milk produced in (a) Britain, (b) the European Economic Community and (c) the rest of the world.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Fifty nine million litres of UHT milk were sold in England and Wales in the year ended 31 March 1984: separate England and Wales figures are not readily available. In 1984 approximately 99 per cent. of total UHT milk sold in Great Britain was produced in Great Britain, with the balance being accounted for by imports from the European Economic Community.

Ante and Post-natal Care

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set out the figures for expenditure on (a) ante-natal and (b) post-natal care in Wales for each of the years from 1979-80 to 1984-85.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This information is not collected centrally.

Acid Rain

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what action he intends to take to reduce the amount of ecological damage caused by acid rain in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: There is no reliable evidence to link ecological damage in Wales with acid rain, but research is being carried out to assess the relative contributions made by acidic rainfall, soil and bedrock types, afforestation and land practices, to the known acidity of some Welsh lakes and streams.

PRIME MINISTER

Terrorism

Q18. Mr. Latham asked the Prime Minister what further discussions she envisages with Heads of Government at the European Council or other international bodies to combat terrorist atrocities.

The Prime Minister: The December European Council endorsed measures to strengthen co-operation against terrorism and abuse of diplomatic immunity. We have since continued to work for further co-operation within the Ten. We welcomed the discussion of terrorism at the Bonn economic summit and shall continue to work for close and effective international co-operation in that forum and elsewhere.

FA Cup Final

Q40. Mr. Pavitt asked the Prime Minister if she intends to pay an official visit to the London borough of Brent to attend the Football Association cup final.

The Prime Minister: Not in 1985, but I hope to do so another year.

Lost Documents (Disciplinary Action)

Q47. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister what disciplinary action Her Majesty's Government propose to take against civil servants responsible for losing the documents concerning the Tornado aircraft and the perimeter fence at Aldermaston which were recently found on a rubbish dump in London.

The Prime Minister: It would be premature to reach any conclusions about the incident to which the hon. Gentleman refers until the investigations into it have been completed.

Rail Electrification (North Wales)

Q98. Dr. Marek asked the Prime Minister whether British Rail has made any proposals to Her Majesty's Government to electrify the North Wales line in the near future.

The Prime Minister: No.

Engagements

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 16 May.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today.

Secretary of State for the Environment (Speech)

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Prime Minister whether the speech of the Secretary of State for the Environment to the County Planning Officers Society dinner on Thursday 14 March represents the policy of Her Majesty's Government.

The Prime Minister: Yes.

Value Added Tax Tribunals

Mr. Nicholls asked the Prime Minister whether she will consider changing the arrangements for administering value added tax tribunals.

The Prime Minister: I have decided to transfer responsibility for administering the VAT tribunals to the Lord Chancellor in relation to England and Wales and Northern Ireland, and for Scotland to the Secretary of State for Scotland with effect from 1 April 1986. The responsibilities of the Secretary of State for Scotland will be discharged on his behalf by the Scottish Courts Administration.

Consequential provisions will be introduced into the current Finance Bill.

Civil Service (Secondments)

Sir John Osborn asked the Prime Minister if she will make a further announcement about secondments to the Civil Service.

The Prime Minister: In my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Erith and Crayford (Mr. Evennett) on 18 March I announced that, in the light of the legal advice which had been received, measures were being taken to provide that future appointments to the Civil Service by secondment are made in compliance with the Civil Service Order in Council 1982 and any regulations made thereunder. New procedures will be introduced as soon as possible. Until then, all proposals for new secondments are being referred to the Civil Service commissioners and are being considered on an individual basis against the background of the provisions and discretionary powers contained in the Order in Council.

There remains the question of regularising appointments on secondment terms made by Departments in the belief that the Civil Service Order in Council 1982 did not apply to such arrangements. The Civil Service commissioners have been advised by their legal advisers that an appropriate way to proceed would be by way of a further order—the Civil Service Order in Council 1985—the object of which will be to regularise all such appointments made during the currency of the 1982 order and its predecessor the 1978 order on or before 18 March 1985 when I made the announcement to which I have already referred. The order was made at a meeting of the Privy Council which was held yesterday, and a copy of it has been placed in the Library.

Bonn Economic Summit

Mr. Deakins asked the Prime Minister if the countries represented at the Bonn economic summit made any criticism of United States policy in Central America and in particular its military and economic measures against Nicaragua; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: There was general agreement among the countries represented at the summit on the need for political stability, national security and economic recovery in Central America. We made clear our view that Nicaragua should cease its destabilising policies.

Civil Servants (Terms and Conditions)

Mr. Cohen asked the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government will include in the terms and conditions of employment in the Civil Service a declaration that the holding of racialist views is not compatible with employment in the service; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No. The existing rules are quite clear.

"Protecting the Ratepayers"

Dr. Cunningham asked the Prime Minister if she will give the most recent estimate of the costs of the information programme on the Rates Act 1984 entitled "Protecting the Ratepayers".

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment to the hon. Member for Tottenham (Mr. Atkinson) on 22 November 1984, at column 282.

Share and Property Ownership

Mr. Baldry asked the Prime Minister (1) what initiatives Her Majesty's Government are pursuing to promote wider share ownership;

(2) what initiatives Her Majesty's Government are pursuing to promote the wider ownership of capital and property.

The Prime Minister: Extending direct ownership is an integral part of our commitment to an entrepreneurial and dynamic economy.

Privatisation has already probably doubled the number of individual shareholders in the United Kingdom and has meant that over one third of a million employees have acquired shares in the companies in which they work. We have given individual investors preferential treatment in recent share sales. The tax treatment of profit sharing schemes has been improved and new tax reliefs for share option schemes have been introduced, benefiting over half a million employees. Other tax changes including the abolition of investment income surcharge, reduction of stamp duty and other tax measures will promote wider ownership of shares, capital and property. In the City, far-reaching changes which will increase the opportunities for individual investors are under way. And under our right to buy policies, extended last year, and other initiatives to support low-cost home ownership, three quarters of a million council and public sector tenants have brought their own homes, and the number of home owners has increased by over 1·8 million.

Our policies in all these areas are deliberately designed to spread ownership and to encourage employees to participate in the success of companies in which they work. I have no doubt that they are succeeding and will continue to do so.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Christian Aid

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what public funding has been made available to or through Christian Aid in each of the last five years.

Mr. Rifkind: The Overseas Development Administration has made the following grants to Christian Aid for the purposes stated:

1. For projects co-financed under the joint funding scheme

1980-81	250,000
1981-82	300,000
1982-83	330,000
1983-84	330,000
1984-85	700,000
Total	1,910,000

2. For relief or development projects in support of refugees (information for 1980-81 and 1981-82 is not readily available)

1982-83	10,000
1983-84	7,000
Total	17,000

3. For disaster relief

1982-83	127,949
1983-84	150,000
1984-85	1,183,087
Total	1,461,036

4. For a special disaster relief programme in Bangladesh

1984-85	113,927

5. For bilateral food aid

1984-85	*150,000

* All for Ethiopia.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Institute of Hearing Research

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the progress of the work of the Institute of Hearing Research and on the adequacy of its findings.

Sir Keith Joseph: The programme of research at the Medical Research Council's Institute of Hearing Research continues to progress very well, and I understand that it is considered by the council to be of high scientific merit. The institute is making important contributions to knowledge on the problem of hearing.

Academic and Related Salaries

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what reply he has sent to the letter he received from Dr. A. J. Mount, president of the Hull Association of University Teachers, requesting an independent committee of inquiry into academic and related salaries.

Sir Keith Joseph: I am sending Dr. Mount and others who have written to me on the subject a statement of the Government's position on university teachers' pay. That makes it clear that the request of the Association of University Teachers for an independent committee of inquiry falls to be considered with the university employers in committee A in the first instance.

GCSE Examinations (Religious Studies)

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science why religious studies is not included in the range of subjects for the new GCSE examinations for which a distinction may be obtained.

Mr. Dunn: The three models for GCSE distinction and merit certificates put forward in the Department's consultation paper last December all include religious studies as an option within one of the subject groupings.

Universities (National Insurance)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what estimate he has made of the cost to each university of proposals to alter employers' national insurance contributions; and when he expects to announce whether his Department will give grant aid to the universities to cover the additional cost.

Sir Keith Joseph: No estimate has been made of the cost to individual universities of the proposals to alter employers' national insurance contributions. The additional cost to the universities as a whole is estimated to be about £7 million in the first 12 months. The possibility of providing additional funds is under consideration and it is not yet possible to say when an announcement will be made.

Departmental Committees of Inquiry

Mr. Eggar asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many departmental committees of inquiry he and his predecessors, including Ministers of Education, have commissioned since 1955; and what were the subjects the committees investigated, the dates they were established, who chaired them and the dates they reported.

Sir Keith Joseph [pursuant to his reply, 13 May 1985, c. 43-48]: I regret that the item about school examinations listed at column 47 was partly incorrect and that a reference to the report of the committee of inquiry into the teaching of mathematics in schools has been omitted. The information should read as follows:

'School examinations: report of the steering committee established to consider proposals for replacing the General Certificate of Education ordinary level and Certificate of Secondary Education examinations by a common system of examining. 1977 [1978].

Chairman: Sir James Waddell.

Mathematics counts: report of the Committee of Inquiry into the Teaching of Mathematics in Schools. 1978 [1981].

Chairman: Dr. W. H. Cockcroft.'

Expenditure

Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will state the amount of (a) central Government and (b) local authority spending during each of the last 10 years, together with the percentage change in real terms over each previous year, under the following headings: (i) education, (ii) schools and (iii) universities.

Sir Keith Joseph [pursuant to his reply, 13 May 1985, c. 54]: The following table shows public expenditure on universities in Great Britain and on schools in England for the last nine years; figures for 1975-76 are not readily available on a comparable basis. The GDP deflator has been used to revalue figures for earlier years to 1984-85 prices. Percentage changes have been calculated from the previous year's figure.

As the balance between recurrent grant and fee income has changed from time to time, the percentage changes shown are not a true measure of changes in public expenditure on universities.

ENERGY

Nuclear Material (Safeguards)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy to what uses nuclear material withdrawn from safeguards under article 14 of the tripartite agreement between the United Kingdom-Euratom and International Atomic Energy, Cmnd. 6730, is put.

Mr. Goodlad: Nuclear material withdrawn from safeguards under the terms of article 14 of the agreement between the United Kingdom, Euratom and the IAEA is used for national security purposes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Fraud Investigation

Mr. Evennett asked the Attorney-General whether his Department issues any guidance to police and other law enforcement agencies concerning the investigation of fraud and related offences.

The Attorney-General: No. My responsibility is for the work of the Director of Public Prosecutions who does not himself undertake the investigation of fraud or any other category of crime. However, he is always willing to advise the police and other enforcement agencies, particularly in respect of cases of alleged fraud where he is likely to be responsible for the conduct of any resulting prosecution. In cases of particular complexity this assistance may extend to the establishment of a fraud investigation group to co-ordinate legal and investigative aspects of the inquiry, about which my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary has issued advice to chief officers of police. I meet the Director of Public Prosecutions regularly to discuss the work of his Department. The scope of these discussions includes the handling of fraud cases generally as well as individual cases of particular difficulty or importance. the guidelines as to the criteria for prosecution which I published in March 1983 are of general application. But I have published no formal guidelines relating to any specific categories of criminal offences. Following establishment of the Crown prosecution service my existing criteria will be supplemented by the guidance which the Director will be required to promulgate by virtue of clause 9 of the Prosecution of Offences Bill.

CIVIL SERVICE

Ministerial Appointments (Directory)

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Minister for the Civil Service (1) whether he intends to publish an up-to-date directory of paid public appointments made by ministers;

(2) whether he will publish a list of additions, deletions and amendments to the directory of paid public appointments made by ministers, last published in 1978.

Mr. Hayhoe: The "Directory of Paid Public Appointments" has been superseded by the Cabinet Office (MPO) annual publication "Public Bodies." This contains a large amount of detailed information about public bodies, including ministerial appointments. The 1984 edition was published by HMSO in December last year. The next edition is due out in December 1985.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Window Frames

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the estimated difference in cost to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive between refurbishing metal window frames and replacing them.

Mr. Chris Patten: This is a matter for the chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive who has advised me that the average cost of servicing galvanised metal windows in a typical 7-window house is £150. The cost of replacement varies with the size and type of window frame and ranges from approximately £600 to £1,700 per dwelling.

European Institution

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland who represented the Northern Ireland Office at the meeting in London on 24 April with a delegation from the European Parliament about European institutions; and if he will make a statement on the views expressed by the Northern Ireland Office representative on the proposals for (a) European union, (b) United Kingdom membership of the European monetary system, (c) a reduced role for the use of the national veto in decisions by the European Economic Community Council of Ministers and (d) the suggested Inter-Governmental Conference for a new European Economic Community treaty and reformed institutions.

Mr. Hurd: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, assisted by my hon. Friend the Member for Edinburgh, Pentlands (Mr. Rifkind), received the delegation and gave the views of the Government as a whole on the specific matters referred to, which have been explained in the House on several occasions recently. My Department was not separately represented at the meeting.

Gaelic Studies

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what encouragement and assistance are being given to Gaelic studies in the Province.

Mr. Scott: Irish is studied by more than 20,000 pupils in Northern Ireland secondary schools and is developing in a proportion of primary schools. The curriculum, however, is essentially a matter for school authorities and head teachers and is not dictated or controlled by the Government or the Department of Education for Northern Ireland. Bunscoil Ghaelach, an Irish language primary school, obtained grant-aided status in September 1984, and a special unit in which tuition is provided through the medium of the Irish language has been approved at Steelstown primary school, Londonderry.

Irish is also available in the Province's two universities and St. Mary's and St. Joseph's colleges of education. As with any other interest areas which meet Department of Education criteria, support is granted to extra-mural courses in Irish or aspects of Irish culture.

District Councils (Abuse of Power)

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will state the occasions since the imposition of direct rule when ministerial intervention, or action by the Commissioner for Complaints, was invoked on account of alleged abuse of majority power by district councils; and with what result.

Mr. Hurd: Information is not available in the form requested. The annual reports of the Commissioner for Complaints show that since 1972 some 693 complaints were received about the actions of district councils and that in 59 of these the Commissioner found maladministration. Copies of the reports are available in the Library.

University Staff

Mr. Kilfedder asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to the trend in real terms over the last five years of the pay of university staff in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Scott: The determination of the salaries of university staff is not a matter in which the Department of Education for Northern Ireland is directly involved. Any agreements affecting salaries, reached through the appropriate negotiating machinery in Great Britain, are automatically applied by the two universities in Northern Ireland.

A comparison of the current salaries of university teachers with those paid in October 1979 indicates that salaries have broadly kept pace with the retail price index.

North Down and Ards Unit

Mr. Kilfedder asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland why he has asked the North Down and Ards unit of management to reduce its 1985-86 budget by £166,000.

Mr. Chris Patten: Decisions on the allocation of resources to the units of management are a matter for the Eastern board itself. The board, in common with the other three boards, is required to realise efficiency savings of 0·5 per cent. of its revenue budget. These funds are retained by the board and reinvested in selected priority service developments along with the additional funds made available by the Government.

Dogs

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to the number of dogs which have been destroyed since December 1983.

Dr. Boyson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Penrith and The Border (Mr. Maclean) on 15 April 1985, at columns 58-59.

Belfast (Redevelopment)

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the integrated operations plan for the redevelopment of Belfast with European Community aid.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Belfast integrated operations document, which I presented to the European Commission on 21 February 1985, lists all the capital projects within the Belfast urban area put forward by Northern Ireland Government Departments, district councils, public bodies, voluntary bodies and the private sector for the period 1985-86 to 1989-90 which are envisaged in current expenditure planning or which are regarded as desirable. Integrated operations involves the focusing of public, private and European Community resources on a limited geographical area to maximise their impact. Their is no separate European Community fund for integrated operations, apart from a small budget which may assist feasibility studies within an integrated operations area.

Medical Cards

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applications for new medical cards were received and how many sent out on each day and each week from 1 April to the week ending Saturday 18 May.

Mr. Scott: The central services agency does not normally maintain records of this nature. However, during the period from 29 April 1985 to 13 May 1985 inclusive the numbers of applications received and medical cards issued were as follows:

	Applications	Issues
29 April	1,501	1,231
30 April	3,220	1,769
1 May	5,972	3,137
2 May	5,323	4,330
3 May	5,810	4,136
4 May	2,419	1,325
5 May	414	2,376
6 May	618	5,176
7 May	7,229	2,490
8 May	5,426	3,162
9 May	4,485	3,158
10 May	3,480	5,506
11 May	543	3,572
12 May	34	4,740
13 May	3,143	*3,000
	49,617	49,108

* Estimate.

These figures cover valid applications for replacement medical cards. In addition, approximately 1,500 applications have been received during the period from new applicants and people who have changed doctor. Of these applications, all those received from applicants of voting age have been processed.

Wages

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many workers in Northern Ireland now earn less than the Council of Europe's decency threshold.

Dr. Boyson: The New Earnings Survey indicates that in April 1984 about 37·5 per cent of full-time adult employees in Northern Ireland had gross weekly earnings for a full week of less than £108·3, the latter figure corresponding to 68 per cent. of the national average for all full-time adult employees. Although an advisory committee of the Council of Europe has suggested the figure of 68 per cent. of national full-time adult average earnings as significant in considering low pay, the figure has not been accepted or recognised by the United Kingdom or any other European country.

Security

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether all the recommendations in regard to staffing levels and security measures outlined in the Baker report have been met.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 13 May 1985, c. 3]: The Government have announced their acceptance in principle of the main conclusions of Sir George Baker's review of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978. Detailed consideration of his recommendations is now being given with a view to making proposals to amend this legislation.

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the numbers of maximum security prisoners in each prison in Northern Ireland; and how the staffing levels to deal with them compare with the staffing levels required for similar prisoners in Great Britain.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 13 May 1985, c. 3]: There are 759 high risk prisoners in Northern Ireland prisons: 468 are in Maze cellular prison, 160 are in Maze compound prison, and 131 are in Belfast prison.

High risk prisoners in Northern Ireland, like category A prisoners in Great Britain, are not accommodated as a separate group, and it is therefore not possible to identify and compare the relevant staffing levels.

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the staffing requirements for each prison including the new prison in Northern Ireland; and what are the actual staffing levels for prison staff in each grade.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 13 May 1985, c. 3]: Staffing requirements for prisons are dependent on the number of prisoners held and other factors, and are therefore under constant review.

On 26 April 1985, staffing levels were:

	Belfast	Maze Compound	Maze Cellular	Magilligan	Armagh	Hydebank
Governor Grades	9	4	16	7	2	4
Chief Officers	4	2	9	2	2	2
Principal Officers	27	19	38	16	5	13
Senior Officers	51	29	46	24	10	15
Officers	458	406	878	338	98	152
Clerical Grades	26	18	33	11	7	9
Trades Staff	42	22	54	21	6	18
TOTAL	617	500	1,074	419	130	213

The new prison at Maghaberry is expected to have a requirement for about 550 staff.

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many civilians are employed as teachers and instructors at each prison in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 13 May 1985, c. 3]: Numbers are as follows:

Establishment	Full-Time Teachers	Civilian Instructors
HM Prison, Armagh	Nil	Nil
HM Prison, Belfast	1	Nil
HM Prison, Maze Compound HM Prison, Maze Cellular	5	23
HM Prison, Magilligan	1	11
HM Young Offenders Centre Hydebank Wood	4	8

There are also three civilian chief instructors who are not directly involved in instructional duties. In addition, a panel of part-time teachers is maintained at each establishment, together making 105. The services of these teachers are called upon as required.

Stop Orders

Mr. Clifford Forsythe asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many stop orders the planning authorities have issued in each of the last three years for which figures are available because building work had commenced before planning permission had been given, in (a) the Antrim borough council area and (b) the Newtownabbey borough council area; and in how many of these cases planning permission was subsequently granted;

(2) how many stop orders were issued by the planning authorities in each of the last three years for which figures are available because they contravened regulations on ribbon development, in (a) the Antrim borough council area and (b) the Newtownabbey borough area; and in how many of these cases planning permission was subsequently given;

Mr. Chris Patten [pursuant to his reply, 15 May 1985, c. 150]: Only one stop notice has been issued for whatever reason in the last three years. It was in respect of building work begun without permission in the Newtownabbey borough council area in 1984. Planning permission was subsequently granted on appeal.

Planning Applications

Mr. Clifford Forsythe asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many planning applications have been turned down in each of the last three years for which figures are available because they were deemed to infringe the area of special control in (a) the Antrim borough council area and (b) the Newtownabbey borough council area.

Mr. Chris Patten [pursuant to his reply, 15 May 1985, c. 151]: The information is as follows:

Antrim borough council area	13	31	19
Newtownabbey borough council area	23	22	24

Research Assistants (Passes)

Mr. Tracey asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will list the numbers of hon. Members who have 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, and more than 15 research assistants' or temporary research assistants' passes, respectively.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Falkland Islands (Fishing)

41. Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice has been sought by fishermen's organisations in the United Kingdom about prospects for fishing off the Falklands.

Mr. Rifkind: The Government have received inquiries from commercial firms about our policy on fishing in the area around the Falkland Islands. They have been told that we are exploring ways of establishing a multilaterally based conservation and management regime.

Licences

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list in the Official Report all the different types of licences operated or granted by his Department and the year in which they first came into operation.

Mr. Rifkind: With the exception of permits under section 3 of the Antarctic Treaty Act 1967 (the powers to issue which have been delegated in accordance with that section), the functions of the Foreign Commonwealth Office do not involve the granting of administrative licences of the kind to which I take the hon. Member to refer.

Extradition

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy towards the inclusion of provisions having retrospective effect regarding extraditions to the United Kingdom in the forthcoming extradition treaty between the United Kingdom and Spain.

Mr. Rifkind: I am unable to give any details of our negotiations with Spain while they are still in progress. The text of the treaty when signed, will be laid before the House in the usual way.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Football Pool Betting (Revenue)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give details of the revenue received by his Department from (a) the duty on football pool betting and (b) value added tax from professional soccer in each of the past five years.

Mr. Hayhoe: The revenue received from football pool betting in each of the past five financial years was as follows:

1980-81	150
1981-82	169
1982-83	193
1983-84	198
1984-85	*212

* Estimate.

On the basis of information provided by the Football League, it is estimated that the yield from value added tax on admissions to football matches is of the order of £6 million a year.

Extra-statutory Tax

Mr. Mark Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of his review of extra-statutory tax concessions.

Mr. Moore: Yes. The Inland Revenue and the Customs and Excise will be issuing press releases giving information about extra-statutory concessions which have not previously been published. I am placing in the Library of the House:

(i) a copy of those press releases;
(ii) a copy of the existing Inland Revenue booklet IR1 listing previously published Inland Revenue concessions;
(iii) a copy of the existing VAT leaflet 700/23/84 listing previously published VAT concessions;
(iv) an explanatory memorandum on extra-statutory concessions generally.

The Customs and Excise press release lists non-VAT concessions already published in other Customs and Excise notices.

A revised booklet IR1 incorporating the newly published Inland Revenue concessions will be issued as soon as possible. The VAT leaflet will also be replaced by a new publication, including both VAT and non-VAT concessions, as soon as possible.

New and existing Inland Revenue administrative practices will continue to be subject to a regular twice yearly review to identify any which should properly be classified as extra-statutory concessions. The published list of concessions will be updated accordingly.

I hope that the House will welcome this response to the debate which took place on the subject at the time of the last Finance Bill.

Intergovernmental Agreement

Mr. Portillo asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place a copy of the text of the 1985 Intergovernmental Agreement in the Library.

Mr. Ian Stewart: A copy of the text of the 1985 Intergovernmental Agreement has today been placed in the Library of the House.

Mortgage Interest Relief

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide a table showing the cost of mortgage interest tax relief for each year since 1964 at 1985 prices.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 10 May 1985, c. 534]: Information is given in the table. The figures for years up to 1968-69 include the cost of relief for qualifying interest paid on bank loans, which cannot be distinguished from mortgage loans in information available centrally. The figures for 1983-84 onward include the cost of relief in respect of mortgages previously under the option mortgage scheme.

Pound Sterling

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his reply, Official Report, 22 April, column 374, concerning the exchange rate of the £ sterling against certain European monetary system currencies, if he will indicate the changes in the fluctuation margins; if he will add the April 1985 figures to his previous answer on the December 1982 basis, and on the basis of the margin relevant in April; and if he will indicate the number of occasions on which the £ sterling moved outside its notional fluctuation margins on the basis of the changes in the margins which have occurred since 1982.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 15 May 1985 c. 153]: The following table lists the months in which sterling's monthly average exchange rates against currencies in the EMS exchange rate mechanism have moved outside sterling's notional fluctuation margins since the end of 1982. The margins used are those current at the time in question. For April 1985, both the current margins and the December 1982 margins are used:

ERM currencies	1983	1984	1985	*April 1985

Asset Sales

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing (a) the annual proceeds from sales of public sector assets and (b) the impact on the public sector borrowing requirement of these asset sales, in both cases from 1979 to date.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 13 May 1985, c. 30]: By far the largest components of public sector asset sales are the "special sales of assets" programme (which mainly takes the form of sales of company securities) and sales of land and buildings (mostly council house sales). The figures since 1979-80 are as follows:

£ million

	1979-80	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85 (estimated outturn)
Special sales of assets	370	405	494	488	1,142	2,100
Sales of land and buildings	859	1,293	2,100	2,847	2,592	2,536

The direct effect of such sales is to reduce the PSBR by a corresponding amount.

EC (Budget Contributions)

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each member state of the European Economic Community the contribution under value added tax and other own resources, respectively, as a percentage of gross domestic product to two places of decimals for each year since 1980 and the forecast for the current year.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The information requested is given in the table. However, the calculations for the United Kingdom do not take account of the offsetting effect of refunds for the United Kingdom contributions to value-added tax and other own resources.

Notes

1. For value added tax columns the calculation of the percentage of GDP used the amount contributed by member states, inclusive of the balances and adjustments of previous financial years.
2. Greece joined the Community on 1 January 1981 and for the years 1981 to 1985 will pay instead of VAT a financial contribution based on GNP.
3. From 1979 to 1980 the European budget was established and implemented in European units of account. As from 1981 the budget was established and implemented in European currency units. For 1981 the value and composition of the ECU was the same as the EUA.
4. GDP base figures—non-UK GDP figures for the years 1980 to 1984 taken from OECD "Main Economic Indicators" (April 1985). These figures were converted to EUA/ECU equivalents using exchange rates averaged for the years in question. The difference in the value of the exchange rates used to define the GDP and VAT/other own resources data from the base figures has been left out of account. For 1985 non-UK GDP figures are Commission estimates derived from "European Economy". UK figures for all years to 1984 are from Central Statistical Office documents. 1985 UK figures are derived from "European Economy".
5. VAT and other own resources base figures—for the years 1980 to 1983 the amounts are taken from the Official Journal of the European Communities—Court of Auditors report for the financial year 1983. For 1984 other own resources are from the European Commission's budget revenue estimates; for VAT the figures are taken from the supplementary and amending budget for 1984. For 1985 the figures are established in Council on 23 April 1985.

Sterling (Foreign Exchange Dealings)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the turnover annually in foreign exchange dealings in sterling.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Comprehensive figures are not available. The Federal Reserve Bank of New York undertook a survey of United States foreign exchange market turnover in April 1983. The results were published in the FRBNY Quarterly Review, Summer 1984 and suggested that average daily turnover was around $34 billion of which 16·6 per cent. represented transactions against sterling. Similar data are not available for transactions in Europe but it is thought that average daily turnover in London is no less in total than that in the United States.

ENVIRONMENT

Inner Cities (Deprivation)

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the rankings of the indices of deprivation of each of the inner city partnership authorities in relation to all English and Welsh authorities.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The information requested is shown for England in the table. Information about Welsh authorities is not available on a comparable basis.

Land

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what resources are currently being devoted to securing the disposal or the bringing into use of land that is currently registered.

Mr. Macfarlane: Fifty three staff of various grades are engaged, mainly part time, in land register work. Their land register responsibilities include encouraging land-owning bodies to bring land into use or to dispose of it.

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Mid Staffordshire on 15 January, Official Report, column 96, if he will indicate the nature and costs of the additional resources which would be required to secure the disposal of publicly owned unused and under-used land of between half an acre and one acre.

Mr. Macfarlane: Additional staff would be needed within my Department and probably by the public bodies whose land is registrable. The size of the increase would depend on the number of sites in this category; this is likely to be substantial.

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to satisfy himself that all publicly-owned unused and under-used land eligible for inclusion in the public land registers is so registered.

Mr. Macfarlane: All public bodies listed in schedule 16 to the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 have been requested to register their holdings of unused and under-used land, in accordance with guidelines set out by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. Every six months such bodies are asked to up-date their entries in the register. In addition, where we have reason to believe that a particular site ought to be entered in the register, the matter is taken up with the public body concerned.

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many times and in what circumstances he has used his powers under the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 to compel authorities to dispose of publicly owned unused and under-used land.

Mr. Macfarlane: Under the powers conferred upon him by section 98 of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 my right hon. Friend has directed four local authorities to take steps for the disposal of their interest in four specific plots of land entered on the land register.

We are currently considering possible sites where notices under section 99 of the Act (notifying the authority concerned of a proposal to make a direction under section 98 and of its proposed contents), might be appropriate.

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is satisfied with the rate of progress of sales of unused and under-used publicly owned land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macfarlane: Between the time when the registers were established and 30 April 1985 about 5,729 hectares of land have been removed by reason of their disposal by the public sector. In the same period, a further 2,386 hectares have been removed because the land has been brought back into full use. I am keen to ensure that progress in bringing back into use unused or under-used land is maintained.

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the extent to which local authorities are making public land registers available to the general public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macfarlane: Section 96 of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 requires district councils to make a copy of the land registers available for public inspection at their principal offices at all reasonable hours. Authorities generally are complying with this requirement.

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report on an authority by authority basis the gross proceeds of sales of publicly-owned unused and under-used land marketed specifically through the media of the public land registers.

Mr. Macfarlane: This information is not kept centrally.

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report on an authority by authority basis, the number of sales of publicly-owned unused and under-used land brought to fruition specifically as a result of the establishment of the public land registers for each year to the latest available date.

Mr. Macfarlane: This information is not available: it cannot be established how much of the 5,729 hectares of registered land which has been disposed of has been sold as a result of the establishment of the land registers.

Fluoridation

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the full chemical breakdown of the substance or substances currently being used to fluoridate the public water supplies.

Mr. Macfarlane: Hexafluorosilicic acid (H_2SiF_6) or disodium hexafluorosilicate (Na_2SiF_6) are currently used to fluoridate public water supplies. The chemical analysis of the former by weight is 80 per cent. water and 20 per cent. Na_2SiF_6, with minute traces of other substances such as phosphate and chloride. The chemical analysis of the latter by weight is at least 98 per cent. Na_2SiF_6 with traces principally of water and iron.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if the local authority associations and individual London boroughs will be consulted over the terms of an order conferring on himself nomination rights to ex-Greater London council housing in the event of the Greater London council being abolished.

Sir George Young: Yes.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to consult the local authority associations and individual London boroughs over the terms of any order transferring Greater London council seaside and country homes to a local district in the event of the Greater London council being abolished.

Sir George Young: Yes.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) where the office running the Greater London mobility scheme will be accommodated in the event of the Greater London council being abolished;

(2) how many national mobility office is funded; who employs its staff; and what plans he has for it in the event of the Greater London council being abolished;

(3) if he intends to place any restrictions on the national mobility office in the use of delegated powers to nominate tenants through the Greater London mobility scheme, in the event of the Greater London council being abolished.

Sir George Young: The national mobility office is funded almost wholly by the Exchequer and the staff are employed by the GLC on a contract basis. I expect to write shortly to those bodies represented on the national mobility steering committee inviting them to establish a working party to examine the possibilities of operating the Greater London mobility scheme through an enlarged NMO. The suggested terms of reference cover arrangements for funding, staffing and other related matters (including accommodation); and the preparation of a draft agreement between my right hon. Friend and the national mobility steering committee.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what arrangements he has made for the delegation of his nomination rights to Greater London council seaside and country homes in the event of the Greater London council being abolished;

(2) when he will announce what proportion of vacancies in Greater London council seaside and country homes will still be available to Londoners in the event of the Greater London Council being abolished;

(3) if he anticipates that the number of vacancies available to Londoners in Greater London council seaside and country homes will fall in the financial year 1986-87, when compared with previous years;

(4) if, in the event of the Greater London council being abolished, district councils in receipt of Greater London council seaside and country homes will be permitted to sell any such homes which are vacant and which are not to be made available to Londoners;

(5) when he expects to publish his paper outlining his proposals for the transfer of ownership of Greater London council seaside and country homes in the event of the Greater London council being abolished.

Sir George Young: The paper will be published shortly and will among other things cover nomination rights, distribution of lettings and sales.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list those bodies, associations, authorities and persons which have expressed support for his proposal to confer on the Secretary of State nomination rights to Greater London council seaside and country homes for retired Londoners, in the event of the Greater London council being abolished;

(2) if he will list those persons, bodies, authorities and associations which have expressed support for his proposal to confer on the Secretary of State nomination rights to former Greater London council housing in the event of the Greater London council being abolished;

(3) if he will list the professional bodies, institutes, academic centres, voluntary housing groups and housing associations which support his proposals to abolish the Greater London council housing role.

Sir George Young: I must ask the hon. Member to seek the views of the bodies concerned direct.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress is being made with regard to feasibility studies into the emplacement of radioactive waste under the seabed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I assume the hon. Member is referring to the concept of emplacing intermediate-level wastes under the continental shelf. I understand that NIREX has received tenders from five firms for a feasibility study of this concept and are considering them.

Cloisters (Leakage)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the circumstances in which there was a leak of water into hon. Members' accommodation in the Cloisters over the weekend of 11 to 12 May; and what steps are being taken to prevent a recurrence.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how long he estimates it will take to repair the damage caused by leaking effluent to hon. Members' offices in the Cloisters over the weekend 11 to 12 May; what was the origin of the damage; and if he will estimate the cost of repairs to furniture and carpets.

Sir George Young: The failure on Sunday 12 May of a ball-valve in a cistern in the Members' cloakroom on the Principal Floor above the corridor outside the Cloisters resulted in an overflow of clean water which ran down into Members' accommodation below. Mopping up was started immediately the flood was discovered, and was completed on Monday morning; drying-out of carpeting took place throughout Tuesday; the room was dehumified on Wednesday, with carpet cleaning and de-odorisation on Thursday. The fault was rectified on Sunday 12 May.

Drying out of the stonework may take some weeks, depending on weather conditions.

The cost of the specialist carpet cleaning was £40. If a new carpet is required, this will cost around £1,000 plus labour charges. There was no damage to furniture.

All overflow pipes are being checked to prevent a similar flood recurring. I very much regret the inconvenience caused to hon. Members.

Seaside and Country Homes

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applications to build new seaside and country homes his Department has received from London authorities since 1 April 1984; and in how many of those cases he has intervened.

Sir George Young: Three applications have been received in respect of one GLC scheme. We intervened on cost grounds, but are willing to consider more economical proposals.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in the event of the Greater London council being abolished, local district councils in receipt of Greater London council seaside and country homes will be allowed to allocate such homes to tenants who are not elderly.

Sir George Young: We expect all such homes to be allocated to elderly people.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when Greater London council seaside and country homes will be transferred to local district councils in the event of the Greater London council being abolished.

Sir George Young: We expect the transfer date to be 1 April 1986.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) on how much of the land within the London Docklands (East Docklands) Compulsory Purchase Order 1985 the London Docklands Development Corporation has specific proposals;

(2) what programme for infrastructure works and reclamation the London Docklands Development Corporation has for land within the London Docklands (East Docklands) Compulsory Purchase Order 1985; how the programme is phased and over what period; which sites are included in each phase; and what is the cost of each phase;

(3) how much land within the London Docklands Development Corporation area, not acquired by the London Docklands Development Corporation, was either newly developed or in the process of development by 31 December 1984;

(4) with respect to the land acquired by the London Docklands Development Corporation on which new development had taken place or had started by 31 December 1984, how much of this land was subject to works by the London Docklands Development Corporation before development could take place; and at what cost.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answers I gave him on 29 April 1985 at columns 31-32.

Housing Stock

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer of 8 May, Official Report, column 412, if he will explain on what basis the figure of £3,051 million for the gross housing provision for England for the current year has been calculated.

Mr. Gow: The total gross capital provision of £3,051 million for housing for 1985-86 is made up as follows:

	£ million
Local authorities	2,321
Home loan scheme for first-time purchasers	2
Housing Corporation	685

	£ million
New Towns	43
	3,051

Health Partnership Finance (Hackney)

Mr. Ernie Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Environment why the health partnership finance sent to Hackney by his Department was £150,000 less than the million pounds promised for the year 1985-86; and when the remaining £150,000 is to be sent.

Mr. Waldegrave: The partnership allocations issued to both the Hackney local authorities and to the City and Hackney district health authority are the same in cash terms as last year. I am satisfied that no promise to increase the health allocation has ever been given by this Department.

Housing Defects Act

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy with regard to the timescale within which defective houses should be repaired under the Housing Defects Act.

Mr. Gow: The designations made under the Housing Defects Act allow eligible owners to seek assistance before 30 November 1994. As I indicated in my reply of 7 May to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker), the National House Building Council has approved its warranty arrangements for the repair of such houses and I hope that the first approvals of repair schemes will be given this summer, and that the first repairs under the NHBC scheme will be completed by the winter.

Rates

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the average rate rises in England for 1985-86 compared with 1984-85 for (a) owners of domestic properties and (b) council house tenants and other houses in the public sector, local authority by local authority.

Mr. Waldegrave: Percentage increases in domestic rate poundages and domestic rate bills (gross of rate rebates) in 1985-86 are the same in each locality for both owners of domestic properties and council house tenants and other houses in the public sector. I have already placed the available information on these increases in the Library.

Estimates of average cash increases in rate bills for owners of domestic properties are not available centrally. Estimates for council house tenants, authority by authority, are not readily available, and cannot be produced except at disproportionate cost.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average level of rates in 1985-86 for (a) owner-occupied properties and (b) houses in the public sector.

Mr. Waldegrave: Based on information available so far, the estimate of the average level of domestic rate bills in England in 1985-86 is about £350 per hereditament.

No separate estimate is available for owner-occupied properties. An estimate for council house tenants is not readily available and could only be produced at disproportionate cost.

House of Commons (Maintenance Staff)

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many Property Services Agency maintenance staff there are in the House of Commons.

Sir George Young: There are 26 technical and 108 industrial maintenance staff employed at the PSA's parliamentary works office. Of these, 14 technical and 33 industrial staff work shifts to provide 24-hour cover for the Palace of Westminster and the parliamentary outbuildings. Staff are not allocated specifically to maintenance in the House of Commons.

Royal Docks

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will state the programme of infrastructure work being undertaken or planned by the London Docklands Development Corporation in the royal docks area; what is the estimated cost; and if it was put out to competitive tender;

(2) on what part or parts of the land now owned by the London Docklands Development Corporation in the royal Victoria dock, that corporation has specific proposals; what they are; and when they concluded any consultation with the local authority covering any such proposal.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answers I gave the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 29 April 1985 at columns 31-32. All LDDC contracts for infrastructure work are put to competitive tender.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Beef Variable Premium Scheme

4. Mr. McQuarrie asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the retention of the beef variable premium scheme for 1985-86.

Mr. MacGregor: The Commission's original CAP price proposals for 1985-86 made no provision for continuation of the beef variable premium scheme. I made it clear however that I would insist on satisfactory provision for the scheme before I could agree to any final settlement, and I was accordingly pleased to see the premium covered in the latest compromise proposals discussed this week. I regret that agreement on this, as on other price fixing questions, has yet to be reached.

Confectionery Industry

12. Mr. Gregory asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met representatives of the confectionery industry; and what subjects were discussed.

Mrs. Fenner: As the confectionery industry will be aware we are available to them at all times and there are frequent contacts with the Ministry at all levels. Their representatives last met my right hon. Friend at their request on 9 February 1984, when I was also present, and CAP price fixing issues of relevance to the industry formed the main items of the discussion.

Horses (Tethering)

16. Mr. Amess asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received from the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals concerning the tethering of horses.

Mrs. Fenner: None.

Farms (Environmental Survey)

17. Sir Michael Shaw asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects the publication of the results of his Ministry's survey of environmental topics on farms.

Mrs. Fenner: It is currentiy planned that the first results of the survey of environmental topics on farms should be published around the end of July.

Food Prices

18. Mr. Thurnham asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will provide the most recently available figures comparing the increase in food prices and the retail prices index.

Mrs. Fenner: The most recently available figures show that in the year to March 1985, food prices increased by 3·6 per cent. and the retail price index by 6·1 per cent.

Food and Environment Protection Bill

19. Mr. Wallace asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements he has already made for consultation in preparation for the implementation of regulations under the Food and Environment Protection Bill [Lords]; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: We are compiling an inventory of the organisations and individuals, including interested Members of this House, who will receive our consultation document on the implementation of part III of the Bill.

Once the Parliamentary debates on the Bill are completed we shall consider the points made on all sides and issue a comprehensive set of proposals.

Agriculture and the Countryside

20. Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will produce a Green Paper on the future of agriculture and the countryside.

Mrs. Fenner: The Government's response to the first report from the Environment Committee on the operation and effectiveness of part II of the Wildlife and Countryside Act, which will be published shortly, will contain a comprehensive statement of the Government's policy towards agriculture and the countryside.

Cereals

21. Mr. Watson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what policies he will be recommending to the European Economic Community Council of Ministers to deal with growing European surplus of cereal products.

Mr. MacGregor: I remain convinced that a sustained policy of price restraint is the best way of bringing a better balance to the Community cereals market.

Milk Quotas

22. Sir Hector Monro asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the sale or lease of milk quotas.

Mr. MacGregor: At present the sale or lease of milk quotas as such is not permitted although quotas may be transferred with land. We fully recognise the need to achieve greater flexibility in the quota system and are therefore taking the initiative in pursuing the possibility of getting agreement to the leasing and sale of quotas in discussion in the Council of Ministers. This will not be easy to negotiate as there is still strong opposition to both concepts from the Commission and some member states, especially to sale which is unlikely to be negotiable at the moment.

27. Mrs. Kellett-Bowman asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much quota has now been surrendered under the milk outgoers' scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: By 10 May, 1,595 producers had committed themselves to surrender a total of 265·0 million litres.

I am pleased to say that, we have achieved our two principal objectives of making exceptional hardship awards in full for 1985-86 and restoring small producers' quotas to base year production levels for 1985-86.

Departmental Costs

23. Mr. Pawsey asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what economies were made in the last financial year in the administrative costs of running his Department.

Mr. MacGregor: The running costs of my Department are estimated to have been reduced by about 3½ per cent. in real terms in 1984-85.

CAP Expenditure

24. Mr. Deakins asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food by what percentage common agricultural policy expenditure in the latest 1985 European Economic Community budget proposals can be further increased and still remain within the financial guidelines.

Mr. MacGregor: The financial guideline does not apply to expenditure in 1985.

Salmon Tagging

25. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will now make a statement on the Government's decision on the introduction of a salmon tagging scheme.

Mr. MacGregor: As I said in answer to the hon. Gentleman on 20 February, the examination which we are conducting has revealed a number of considerable difficulties and no decisions have yet been made. I shall make an announcement as soon as we have been able to reach a conclusion.

European Community (Agricultural Legislation)

26. Sir William van Straubenzee asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the outcome of his recent discussions with his European Economic Community counterparts on proposals to make European Economic community agricultural legislation more sensitive to the environment.

Mrs. Fenner: As my right hon. Friend the Minister said in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Devon, West and Torridge (Sir P. Mills) on 13 March, the Council of Ministers agreed a new agricultural structures regulation which permits member states to introduce schemes to encourage farming methods and practices which are sympathetic to the environment in environmentally sensitive areas.

Animals (Transit)

28. Mr. Nicholls asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received about regulations covering the transit of live animals.

Mrs. Fenner: The Ministry continues to receive letters raising points about regulations covering the transit of live animals.

Dairy Farmers

29. Mr. Hardy asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the number of dairy farmers in the United Kingdom at the present time; what was the number six years ago; and what is his estimate of the number likely to exist in three years' time.

Mr. MacGregor: In March 1985, 48,848 milk producers were registered with the milk marketing boards in the United Kingdom. In March 1979 there were 60,808 registered milk producers. No estimates have been made of the number of milk producers in three years' time but it seems likely that the number will continue to decline in line with the long term trends towards greater productivity and efficiency in milk production.

Farmers (Less Favoured Areas)

30. Mr. Harris asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures are being taken to seek to ensure a better take up of the new benefits available to farmers in the recently extended less favoured areas.

Mrs. Fenner: Any farmer who suspects that his land may be within the less favoured areas boundary may either send details to his local office for the Ministry to check or consult the detailed maps himself at the Ministry's local office. These arrangements have been given regular national and local publicity, most recently through a national press release on 15 April.

Environmental Co-ordination Unit

31. Mr. Chapman asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the operation and effectiveness of the recently set up environment co-ordination unit in his Department.

Mr. Jopling: The environment co-ordination unit was established to provide a central co-ordinating point for the many aspects of Ministry activity affecting environmental issues; to create closer links between the advisory, scientific and policy interests within my Department; and to develop a coherent strategic approach to conservation over the whole range of the Ministry's responsibilities. In performing these functions, the unit has played a valuable part in the further strengthening of my policies for encouraging and supporting good conservation practice.

Horticulture Industry

32. Mr. Hunter asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his Department operates any scheme to help the horticulture industry reduce its energy costs.

Mrs. Fenner: Yes. Under the Ministry's capital grant schemes grants are available for investments in energy saving measures in the glasshouse sector.

Agricultural Development and Advisory Service

33. Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the future of the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service.

Mr. Jopling: In reply to a written question by my hon. Friend the Member for Devon, West and Torridge (Sir P. Mills) on 13 November 1984, I announced the publication of a report on the future of the agricultural development and advisory service by Professor Bell, and my endorsement of his general conclusions. However, I made clear that a good deal of further work would be needed before detailed final decisions could be taken on the recommendations in the report. That work is in hand and I hope to be in a position to make a further statement before the summer recess.

Dairy Farmers (Northern Ireland)

34. Mr. Nicholson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress he has made in achieving equality of treatment for small dairy farmers in Northern Ireland.

Mr. MacGregor: I am aware of the difficulties in Northern Ireland that have been caused by there being insufficient quota from the outgoers scheme available for reallocation to small producers and am discussing with my right hon. Friends how to tackle the problem.

White Fish

35. Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether, in view of the falling catches of white fish in the North sea, he will press for the reduction of by-catches in industrial fishing in the pout box from the temporary concession of 18 per cent. down to 5 per cent.

Mr. MacGregor: I have at this stage nothing to add to the reply which I gave the hon. Member on 14 March.

Northamptonshire Veterinary Investigation Centre

36. Sir John Farr asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many complaints he has received in relation to his proposal to close the Northampton Veterinary Investigation Centre.

Mrs. Fenner: I have received 60 letters specifically about the centre at Northampton.

Agricultural Development Plans

37. Mr. Alton asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many proposed agricultural development plans have been refused by his Department on environmental grounds for each year over the last five years.

Mrs. Fenner: I regret that this information is not available. If a proposed development plan contains environmentally damaging proposals my officials would normally first seek to remove or modify the potentially damaging elements in consultation with the farmer and the statutory conservation bodies where appropriate.

Research and Advisory Services

38. Mr. Kennedy asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received over the proposed reductions in agricultural research and advisory services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: I have received a number of representations expressing concern about the possible impact of the revised expenditure provisions on research and development and the advisory services. In response I have expressed the view that I regard it as reasonable that those who benefit from such activities should make a greater financial contribution towards the cost of undertaking them.

Food Marketing

39. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received about the marketing of British food products at home and abroad.

Mrs. Fenner: I have not received specific representations about the marketing of British food but meet leaders of the food and agricultural industries and the chairman of Food from Britain frequently and discuss the matter with them. It is clear that opportunities exist to improve our marketing performance and I am encouraged by the industry's increasing awareness of that fact.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Hancock asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what action he is taking against exporters who make false declarations on the staging of animals during journeys to the continent;

(2) upon the basis of what scientific research the limit of 24 hours for transportation of live animals was determined;

(3) if he will introduce legislation to define the appropriate intervals for the feeding of different species of animals;

(4) if he will introduce legislation to implement fully European Economic Community directives 77/489 and 81/389;

(5) what response he has made to the European Economic Community Commission's request concerning the Government's initial response to the Royal Society of Prevention of Cruelty to Animals complaint on the export of live food animals.

Mrs Fenner: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as as possible.

UHT Milk

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much UHT milk is currently consumed in England; and how much of this consumption consists of UHT milk produced in (a) Britain, (b) the European Economic Community and (c) the rest of the world.

Mrs. Fenner: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Food (Fluoride Content)

Mr. Lawrence asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps are taken by Her Majesty's Government (a) to monitor and (b) to regulate the fluoride content of processed food on sale to the public.

Mrs. Fenner: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Sugar

Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is satisfied with the prospects for the sugar sector of the agriculture industry.

Mr. MacGregor: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

DEFENCE

Equipment

Mr. Hordern asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will name the three largest manufacturers in terms of equipment supplied to his Department in each of the last three years, and the total value of equipment so supplied in each of these three years.

Mr. Butler: In each of the three financial years up to and including 1983-84, the three largest suppliers of equipment to the MOD have been British Aerospace plc, Rolls-Royce Limited and the General Electric Company plc. The approximate total value of equipment supplied by these companies was £2,230 million in 1981-82, £2,220 million in 1982-83, and £2,490 million in 1983-84. These figures include all payments for equipment purchased on MOD HQ contracts, together with those payments which can be readily identified from the Tornado programme.

Naval Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether it is envisaged that the naval nuclear weapons listed in paragraph 408 of the Defence Estimates could be used in a naval engagement without the conflict escalating into a strategic nuclear exchange.

Mr. Butler: The Government have always made it clear that their policy is not to fight a nuclear war but to prevent such a conflict from the outset. In the words of the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1981:

"It is not certain that any East-West conflict would rise to all-out nuclear war: escalation is a matter of human decision, not an inexorable scientific process. It is perfectly sensible—indeed essential—to make plans which could increase and exploit whatever chance there might be of ending war short of global catastrophe. But that chance will always be precarious, whether at the conventional or the nuclear level; amid the confusions, passions and irrationalities of war, escalation must always be a grave danger. The only safe course is outright prevention."

Nuclear Bombs

Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he plans to produce a new British free-fall nuclear bomb and a new nuclear depth bomb before the end of the century.

Mr. Butler: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement to the hon. Members for Houghton and Washington (Mr. Boyes), for Glasgow, Central (Mr. McTaggart), for Sunderland, North (Mr. Clay) and for Wigan (Mr. Stott) on 26 February 1985, at columns 158-59.

Artillery Shells

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the trinitrotoluene used to fill the recent order for 11,000 medium artillery shells, placed with PRB, Belgium, was manufactured or supplied by Poland or any other Warsaw pact country.

Mr. Butler: The shells are being manufactured in Belgium. It is the responsibility of the prime contractor to use materials which meet the technical specification.

Gunnery Ranges, Lulworth (Noise)

Viscount Cranborne asked the Secretary of State for Defence what action he proposes to take in response to representations about increased noise resulting from gunfire at the RAC Gunnery School ranges, Lulworth.

Mr. Lee: We are arranging for an independent study to be carried out into the effects of noise and vibration at Lulworth. My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to my hon. Friend with details of the terms of reference once these have been finalised. The results of the survey will be made public in due course.

Non-competitive Contracts (Profit)

Mr. Forth asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide details of the application of the target rate of profit to the pricing of individual Government non-competitive contracts.

Mr. Butler: The rate of profit announced by my right hon. and learned Friend the Chief Secretary on 30 April, at columns 97 and 98, will be applied on a semi-CCA basis as follows:

Risk Work

6·55 per cent. on capital employed, plus 2·92 per cent. on cost. On the basis of the average CP:CE ratio of 2·24:1, this produces a return on capital employed of 13·09 per cent.

Non-Risk Work

5·04 per cent. on capital employed, plus 2·25 per cent. on cost. On the basis of the average CP:CE ratio of 2·24:1, this produces a return on capital employed of 10·08 per cent.

While the profit formula is established now on a semi-CCA basis, historic cost equivalent rates may be applicable for a transitional period on a company by company basis, in accordance with arrangements agreed between the Government and the CBI. The table gives full details both of the semi-CCA target rates and their historic cost equivalents.

The Structure of the Profit Formula

		Semi-CCA Basis per cent.	Historic Cost Basis per cent.
Risk Contracts
Capital-based profit element	A	6·55	9·28
Cost-based profit element	B	2·92	3·09
Average CP/CE ratio	C	2·24/1	3·00/1
Cost-based profit element, expressed as profit on capital employed (B × C)	D	6·54	9·27
Total profit on capital employed (A + D)	E	13·09	18·55
Total profit on cost of production (E + C)	F	5·84	6·18
Non-Risk Contracts
Capital-based profit element	G	5·04	7·14
Cost-based profit element	H	2·25	2·38
Average CP/CE ratio	I	2·24/1	3·00/1
Cost-based profit element, expressed as profit on capital employed (H × I)	J	5·04	7·14
Total profit on capital employed (G + J)	K	10·08	14·28
Total profit on cost of production (K + I)	L	4·50	4·76
Overall Target Rates
Weighted average profit on capital employed		12·00	17·00
Weighted average profit on cost of production		5·36	5·67

Contractors whose CP:CE ratio (on a semi-CCA basis) exceeds 4·48:1 (or 6:1 on a historic cost basis) will receive fixed percentage rates of profit on cost computed on the basis of 4·48:1 semi-CCA (or 6:1 historic cost).

The profit rate for a contractor whose CP:CE ratio (on a semi-CCA basis) is less than 1·12:1 (or 1·5:1 on a historic cost basis) may be subject to special negotiation.

In accordance with paragraph 14 of the profit formula agreement, the revised arrangements apply to

(a) risk contracts where no price arrangement had been agreed by 1 May 1985, and

(b) non-risk work carried out after 1 May 1985 for which no arrangement for profit had been agreed by that date.

FH-70 and SP-70 Howitzers

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether any representations have been made since 1980 to the United States Government, directly or through the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation, seeking to ensure the provision by the United States of America of a nuclear capability for the FH-70 and SP-70 howitzers being developed jointly by the United Kingdom, Italy and the Federal Republic of Germany.

Mr. Butler: As I have told the hon. Member previously, the FH-70 has no nuclear role and is not intended to be a nuclear delivery system. The SP-70 is intended to be compatible with all 155mm artillery rounds in use in NATO, including the nuclear artillery round currently made available to British forces by the United States. Technical discussions with United States Government representatives have taken place accordingly.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the new self-propelled howitzer, the SP-70, will have a nuclear capability.

Mr. Butler: Yes.

Long Range Stand-off Missile

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the longe range stand-off missile will have nuclear capacity.

Mr. Butler: The NATO staff target to which feasibility studies are being directed is for a conventional weapon and does not include a nuclear option.

NATO (Force Goals)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish as a White Paper an unclassified version of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's force goals and of the forthcoming guidance to major NATO commanders and to nations.

Mr. Stanley: No, but a copy of the communiqué from the forthcoming ministerial meeting of the Defence Planning Committee will be placed in the Library.

Defence Estimates

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement explaining the conceptual military framework referred to in paragraph 209 of the statement on the defence Estimates and the military role of nuclear weapons in the context of that framework.

Mr. Stanley: The formulation by the NATO military authorities of a conceptual military framework is part of the continuing effort to improve NATO's conventional defences by placing greater emphasis on long-term planning. The conceptual military framework should help better to identify overall priorities and assist the more effective implementation of NATO's existing strategy, including the sensible application of emerging technology. The aim of the conceptual military framework is to address NATO's conventional defences, although it naturally acknowledges the deterrent role of both conventional and nuclear forces.

Nuclear Artillery Shells

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) why there is no reference in the Defence Estimates to the proposed introduction by the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation of new nuclear artillery shells into Europe;

(2) if he will make a statement on the implication for the British Army of the Rhine of the modernisation of nuclear-capable artillery systems operated in Europe by the United Kingdom with warheads provided by the United States of America;

(3) whether the plans for the modernisation of nuclear artillery in the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation envisage a lower number of warheads but a higher number of nuclear capable launchers, and in particular a larger number of nuclear capable 155mm cannon.

Mr. Stanley: I shall answer shortly.

US Navy (Vessel Visits)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report such records as can be made available on the number of visits to United Kingdom ports of United States Navy ships and submarines in 1984.

Mr. Stanley: As I told the hon. Member on 20 February 1984, at col. 432, full records of visits by United States navy ships are not generally retained. The following information can be made available:

Number of ship visits recorded

Port	1984
Glasgow	1
Hull	1
Leith	3
Loch Ewe	1
Newcastle	1
Portsmouth	31
Plymouth	9
Rosyth	5

Atomic Control Office

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many staff in his Department work in the atomic control office.

Mr. Butler: Four staff work in the atomic control office (London).

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence how long the atomic control office has been in existence.

Mr. Butler: Since 1958, following the bilateral agreement between the Governments of the United Kingdom and United States of America for co-operation on the uses of atomic energy for mutual defence purposes.

FV342 (Repairs)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when the information that the decision of headquarters, British Army of the Rhine, that the repairs of the FV432 will not be possible in Germany and first conveyed to the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces, the deputy under secretary (civilian management) and the assistant secretary QMG by a representative of the Civil Service trade unions on 26 April, was officially given to them;

(2) whether, following the decision of headquarters, British Army of the Rhine, that repairs of the FV432 will not now be possible in Germany, he will re-examine the programme for the repair of the FV432 with a view to using the facility of the Royal Electrical and Mechanical Engineers workshop at Chilwell or Bicester.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to my reply, 15 May 1985, c. 152]: Although we are not yet in a position to undertake the BAOR base repair task for AFV432 mark I vehicles in-theatre as the review of static workshops originally proposed, retaining this work in the United Kingdom represents an increase of only some 2·5 per cent. above the planned level for all REME base repair in this country. This change of plan is thus within the margins of REME's planned capacity and we envisage no difficulty in carrying out the work in our reorganised workshop facilities at Bicester, especially as the forecast United Kingdom load of Saracen and Ferret AFV repair work has now reduced below the level forecast in 1982. A programme change of this routine and marginal nature would not normally be notified to the trade unions as a separate matter.

SOCIAL SERVICES

NHS (Pay)

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to be in a position to make an announcement on the pay of nurses and other health service workers.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: On the pay of National Health Service staff covered by review bodies, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Fife, Central (Mr. Hamilton) on 14 May at column 108. Pay negotiations for other staff have not yet been concluded.

Young Offenders (St. Albans)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social services what response he has sent to the St. Albans diocesan board for social responsibility about confirming the present funding of its link scheme for young offenders and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: This scheme is one of those funded under the intermediate treatment initiative on the basis that grants would be time-limited. I can confirm that funding will continue to the end of the period. Representations from several sources in Hertfordshire including the diocesan board about an extension of funding are still being considered.

Pre-school Playgroups Association (Exhibition)

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will arrange for an exhibition relating to the Pre-school Playgroups Association to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Fowler: Arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 20 May to 25 May 1985. I have accepted an invitation to open the exhibition.

Community Care (Mentally Handicapped People)

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list the schemes which his Department directly administers under the heading of community care for (a) the mentally handicapped, (b) the mentally ill and (c) the under-fives;

(2) if he will list the total amounts of money spent by his Department on directly administered schemes for (a) the mentally handicapped, (b) the mentally ill and (c) the under-fives in each year since 1980;

(3) if he will make a statement on the future funding of community care schemes directly administered by his Department for the mentally handicapped, the mentally ill and the under-fives.

Mr. John Patten: I assume the hon. Member is referring to centrally funded initiatives for promoting community care for mentally handicapped and mentally ill people and children under five. The "helping the community to care" and "opportunities for volunteering" schemes include community care for these groups within their wider coverage. Details of centrally funded schemes aimed more particularly at promoting community care for these groups are as follows:

The care in the community programme of pilot projects has been established to explore beneficial and cost-effective ways of providing community care for people inappropriately in long-stay hospitals. Twelve mental illness projects and 12 mental handicap projects are each being centrally funded for three financial years, some starting in 1984-85 and the rest in 1985-86. Central funding will amount in total to about £14·6 million.

Under our children's initiative a sum of £9 million has been made available over a period of four years from April 1984 to help health authorities get mentally handicapped children out of long-stay hospitals into more suitable accommodation in the community. So far 30 projects have been approved for central funding under this scheme. Under the same initiative we have also made a total of £1 million available to voluntary organisations over a four-year period for capital expenditure to match, on a pound for pound basis, funds they raise to bring mentally handicapped children out of hospital. So far seven projects have been funded under this scheme.

A total of £6 million of central funds has been made available between 1983 and 1987 to help stimulate the development of comprehensive and integrated local services for elderly mentally ill people. Thirty health districts are benefiting and the funding will help them to set up at least one priority element of the comprehensive range of facilities needed. In all these schemes central funding is being given on the understanding that the projects launched in this way will continue with local funding when central support ends.

The under-fives initiative is designed to stimulate voluntary sector provision for disadvantaged families with children under five. A total of £6 million has been made available between 1983-84 and 1986-87 and the programme includes 111 service-provided projects managed by 15 voluntary organisations. The continued funding of projects from other sources when central funding ends will depend on a number of factors, including success in meeting objectives, relevence to local needs and support in the community.

The total sums devoted by the Department to these five schemes are as follows. There was no expenditure before 1982-83.

£ thousands

	Services for Mentally Handicapped People	Services for Mentally Ill People	Services for Children under 5
1982-83	46	—	—

Local Office Project

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the content and progress of his Department's local office project phase A; and if he will place a management summary of the operational requirement for this computer system in the Library.

Mr. Whitney: The Department has reviewed the overall phasing of the local office project and now intends to provide in the first stage facilities for the assessment, calculation and payment of supplementary benefit. Detailed work on replanning the project is in hand. The operational requirement for the computer system has not yet been completed, but we will place a summary in the Library when it is finalised.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list and describe the on-line indexing and tracing facilities expected to be available to his Department's staff when local office project phase A has been fully implemented.

Mr. Whitney: In broad terms our aim is to provide controlled facilities for authorised staff in local offices to trace records on the system by reference to national insurance numbers. The detailed facilities likely to be available under the local office project have not yet been defined. It is expected that additional facilities will be available on the departmental central index system.

Central Indexing Project

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the planned development of the operational strategy departmental central index between now and 1990; and if he will list and describe the numbers of on-line computer terminals, including those in offices of the Department of Employment, planned to be attached to such central indexing facilities, in each year to 1990.

Mr. Whitney: A departmental central index is being considered as part of the Department's operational strategy. The requirements for the index are currently being examined and a full study report is being prepared. If a decision to proceed is taken following production of the full study report, the index is planned to come into operation by 1988. The network design envisaged for the operational strategy is such that all terminals within strategy projects would provide the facility for properly authorised staff to access the departmental central index. At present we plan to have the following numbers of terminals, including those in Department of Employment offices:

	Number
1988	14,000
1989	18,000
1990	24,000

These estimates will be subject to change as project plans are developed.

Bolton (Hospital)

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if the design of Bolton's new hospital will be the subject of an inspection following his statement about legionnaire's disease.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The design of Bolton's new hospital accords with the guidance on Legionnaire's disease and hospital water systems contained in DHSS circular HN(80)39 and on cold water supply, storage and mains distribution arrangements in hospital technical memorandum No. 27 (June 1978). This remains the best guidance on reducing the risk of the disease but its adequacy will no doubt be considered by the public inquiry into the present outbreak in Stafford. Any lessons that are eventually learned from the experience at Stafford will be acted on in hospitals throughout the country.

Supplementary Benefit

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report (a) the number of sick and disabled people receiving supplementary benefit, (b) the number of sick and disabled adult dependants of people receiving supplementary benefit and (c) the number of sick and disabled child dependants of people receiving supplementary benefit.

Mr. Whitney: At December 1983 it is provisionally estimated that about 242,000 claimants were in receipt of supplementary benefit because of sickness or disability. Information is not available about the numbers of sick or disabled dependants of claimants.

Joint Advisory Committee on Nutrition Education

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he is yet in a position to publish a report of the findings of the Joint Advisory Committee on Nutrition Education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The Joint Advisory Committee on Nutrition Education has prepared nutritional guidance for families based upon the report by the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy, "Diet and Cardiovascular Disease". I understand that the JACNE booklet is to be published shortly by its sponsoring bodies, the British Nutrition Foundation and the Health Education Council.

Continence Advisers

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many continence advisers are employed; and by which authorities.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Doctors

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list those matters in respect of which general practitioners receive indirect expenses; and if he will quantify the average value of each of the same to individual general practitioners;

(2) what instructions he has given to family practitioner committees in relation to the direct and indirect expenses of part-time general practitioners; and if he will make a statement.

(3) pursuant to his reply of 25 March, Official Report, column 97, and 4 April, Official Report, column 767, if he will list and describe in the fullest reasonable particularity the nature and value of the individual expenses incurred by general practitioners.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall let my hon. Friend have replies as soon as possible.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the maximum fixed expenses for which general practitioners are eligible under section 63 of the National Health Service Act 1977; and if he will list the same.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the top rate seniority allowance for general practitioners; what is the eligibility of older general practitioners to obtain further superannuation; at what age such incentives commence and cease; and what is the effect on the eligibility of general practitioners for such incentives if they obtain limited commitment.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The top rate seniority allowance for general medical practitioners is currently £4,375 per annum. A lower allowance first becomes payable after 11 years on the medical register and seven years as a National Health Service principal. Seniority allowance ceases to be payable at age 72. Payment of the allowance to a doctor who has a limited commitment depends on the nature of the commitment.

General practitioners may retire at any time on reaching age 60. If they retire and again practise, even after 24 hours, as principals in the National Health Service, any pension payable will be reduced so that post-retirement earnings plus pension do not exceed pre-retirement earnings. While re-employed, retired doctors continue to pay contributions to the NHS superannuation scheme and earn further pension rights up to age 70. However, general practitioners who retire for the first time at age 65 or over may be re-employed without their pension being liable to reduction. In such a case, the re-employment is not superannuable and no further pension rights may be earned.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will identify and list, together with the sums payable in respect of each, the basic allowances, seniority allowances and other fees or allowances for which general practitioners are eligible

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The fees and allowances, together with the rates payable at 1 November 1984, are as follows:

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many general practitioners operating within the National Health Service are over the age of 65 years.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The number of unrestricted principals in England practising in the National Health Service aged 65 and over at 1 October 1984 was 1,189.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many and what representations he has made to the General Medical Services Committee and elsewhere about a fixed retirement age for general practitioners; what was the response; when he will next make representations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have made no representations and no decision yet about a fixed retirement age.

Dispensing Doctors (Discount Inquiry)

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply of 16 April, Official Report, column 166, why his Department undertook a dispensing doctors' discount inquiry in 1983; what were its terms of reference; what were its conclusions; if he will place a copy in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Drugs

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) pursuant to his reply of 4 April, Official Report, column 768, what were the names of the drugs in respect of which manufacturers gave the top 10 highest discounts in 1983; what was the cost of prescribing those drugs to the National Health Service per dispensing doctor and per ordinary general practitioner in 1983; and what was the cost in the last year before discounts were introduced;

(2) what steps his Department is taking to ensure that dispensing doctors account for all discounts they receive as from 1 April from drugs manufacturers and wholesalers.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall let my hon. Friend have replies as soon as possible.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps his Department takes to ensure that dispensing chemists dispense the actual drugs which doctors prescribe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Family practitioner committees participate in the National Health Service drug testing scheme. This scheme, which is based on sampling of dispensed prescriptions, fulfils FPCs' statutory responsibility under regulation 29 of the National Health Service (General Medical and Pharmaceutical) regulations 1974 for checking that the quantity and quality of drugs and appliances which have been dispensed by the pharmacist are as prescribed by the doctor.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps his Department takes to ensure that dispensing doctors dispense the actual drugs which they prescribe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: None.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) pursuant to his reply of 4 April, Official Report, column 768, if he will itemise the cost to the National Health Service of those items described as distribution and administration costs of companies operating within the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if, since 1979, there has been an audit carried out by his Department of the costs and expenses of any company supplying drugs to the National Health Service within the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme; and if he will make a statement;

(3) pursuant to his reply of 4 April, Official Report, column 768, what scrutiny by auditors and other persons his Department makes of sales promotion expenditure claimed by companies within the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I do not have a further breakdown of the expenses given in my reply to my hon. Friend on 28 February at column 273.

The financial returns received annually from the companies are certified by the independent accountants and reconciled to the statutory accounts. They are scrutinised by our officials, including accountants as necessary, in the light of our knowledge of the company and of the underlying costs and profits in the pharmaceutical industry. We can and do challenge items in the returns, including sales promotion, distribution and administration costs, and where necessary ask companies to provide further explanation and substantiation. Where appropriate, our accountants visit companies to discuss any points of doubt or difficulty.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply of 4 April, Official Report, column 768, what was the value of costs and how many were disallowed by his Department which had been claimed by companies within the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme for 1982, 1983 and 1984, respectively; and what scrutiny was carried out of such companies' financial returns and by how many people in his Department.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We could provide information on costs disallowed only at disproportionate cost. On the question of staff scrutinising company financial returns, I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the hon. Member for Congleton (Mrs. Winterton) on 4 February at columns 454-5.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many larger companies supplied drugs to the National Health Service under the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme in 1982, 1983 and 1984, respectively; and if he will identify them by name.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In 1983 the 68 pharmaceutical companies fully within the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme were Abbott Laboratories Ltd., Astra Pharmaceutical Ltd., Armour Pharmaceutical Co. Ltd., Ayerst Laboratories Ltd., Bayer UK Ltd., Beecham Pharmaceutical UK Division, Berk Pharmaceuticals Ltd., Boehringer Ingelheim Ltd., Boots Company plc, Bristol-Myers Pharmaceuticals, Brocades Ltd., Ciba-Geigy Pharmaceutical Division, A. H. Cox & Co. Ltd., Cyanamid of Great Britain Ltd., Duphar Laboratories Ltd., Norwich Eaton Ltd., Farmitalia Carlo Erba Ltd., Fisons Pharmaceuticals plc, Geistlich Sons Ltd., Glaxo Laboratories Ltd., Hoechst UK Ltd., ICI Pharmaceuticals plc, Janssen Pharmaceuticals Ltd., Kabivitrum Ltd., Thomas Kerfoot and Co. Ltd., Kirby Warrick Pharmaceuticals Ltd., Leo Laboratories Ltd., Lilly Industries Ltd., Lipha Pharmaceuticals Ltd., Lundbeck Ltd., Macarthys Laboratories Ltd., May and Baker Ltd., MCP Pharmaceuticals Ltd., E. Merck Ltd., Merck Sharp & Dohme Ltd., Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Miles Laboratories Ltd., 3M Health Care Ltd., Napp Laboratories Ltd., Nicholas Laboratories Ltd., Nordisk-UK, Norgine Ltd., Novo Laboratories, Organon Laboratories Ltd., Ortho-Cilag Pharmaceuticals Ltd., Pharmacia GB Ltd., Pharmax Ltd., Pfizer Ltd., Reckitt and Colman, A. H. Robins and Co. Ltd., Roche Products Ltd., Roussel Laboratories, Sandoz Pharmaceuticals, Sanofi (UK) Ltd., Schering Chemicals Ltd., Searle Pharmaceuticals, Servier Laboratories Ltd., Smith Kline and French Laboratories Ltd., Smith and Nephew Laboratories, E. R. Squibb and Sons Ltd., Syntex Pharmaceuticals Ltd., Travenol Laboratories Ltd., Upjohn Ltd., Warner-Lambert (UK) Ltd., Wellcome Foundation Ltd., Winthrop Laboratories, Wyeth Laboratories, Zyma (UK) Ltd.

There is little change from year to year.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply of 4 April, Official Report, column 768, upon what grounds and by what criteria his Department decides that financial returns submitted by companies within the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme are reasonable or excessive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Apart from sales promotion expenditure, which is limited by a formula common to all companies, it is not possible to define precise criteria by which other adjustments to financial returns are made. We make much use of national and international statistical comparisons, but our adjustments depend on a knowledge of the pharmaceutical industry and individual company circumstances and are a matter for judgment and negotiation.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what was the highest amount by which a larger company within the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme exceeded the sales promotion limit in 1982, 1983 and 1984;

(2) pursuant to his reply of 4 April, Official Report, column 768, by how much in total the 51 companies exceeded their sales promotion limit under the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme in 1982; and what were the figures for 1983 and 1984.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In 1982, the latest year for which information is available, the 51 companies exceeded their sales promotion limit in total by approximately £33 million and the largest excess by an individual company was just over £2½ million.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many persons are employed in his Department on a full-time basis to scrutinise the operation of the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme and the claims made thereunder by individual companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Congleton (Mrs. Winterton) on 4 February at columns 454-5.

Family Practitioner Committees

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what financial and other assistance is given to general practitioners and family practitioner committees to enable general practitioners to improve their facilities and purchase or construct health centres; in whom the ownership of such health centres is vested; to whom the capital gains of such centres accrue; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidelines he issues to family practitioner committees regarding (a) the criteria for eligibility of general practitioners for limited commitment contracts, (b) the incidence of limited commitment contracts and (c) the terms and conditions attached to limited commitment contracts, with particular reference to remuneration and duties.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No guidelines are issued and there is no distinct form of contract for a part-time practitioner. A general medical practitioner may limit his commitment to NHS general practice in various ways, with consequences for his remuneration as set out in the statement of fees and allowances payable to general medical practitioners.

BMA Congress (Cairo)

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether any expenses incurred by individual general practitioners in attending the British Medical Association Congress in Cairo in the current year will be borne by the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he will be attending the British Medical Association's Congress in Cairo in the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Neither I, nor any of our Departmental officials will attend the 1985 British Medical Association Congress in Cairo, which is not at NHS expense.

Nye Bevan Lodge House

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will order an inquiry into the running of the Nye Bevan lodge house in Southwark.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Kidney Patients

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the number of renal transplant operations carried out in: (a) England and (b) the United Kingdom in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. John Patten: The number of kidney transplant operations performed in National Health Service hospitals has been as follows:

	(a) England	(b) United Kingdom
1984	1,203	1,443
1983	919	1,144
1982	887	1,070
1981	752	905
1980	821	988

Note:
Figures for 1980-82 have been supplied by the European Dialysis and Transplant Association. Figures for 1983-84 are provisional totals supplied by the United Kingdom Transplant Service.

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the annual acceptance rate per million of total population of new renal patients for treatment in (a) England and (b) the United Kingdom, in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and how those figures compare with such comparable figures as are available to him for each of the member countries of the European Community over the same period.

Mr. John Patten: Following are figures supplied by the European Dialysis and Transplant Association (EDTA) for the annual acceptance rate per million population for new renal patients in the United Kingdom and other member states of the European Community from 1979 to 1983:

	New renal patients receiving treatment per million population
	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983
United Kingdom	22·0	24·5	27·1	29·5	33·0
Belgium	48·2	41·5	48·4	39·6	61·0
Denmark	25·7	28·8	37·1	26·9	40·4
Federal Republic of Germany	37·0	44·5	49·7	44·0	55·8
France	36·1	42·6	42·3	30·9	44·3
Greece	26·7	20·8	31·6	18·8	40·8
Ireland	16·2	22·2	25·2	19·4	24·2
Italy	31·9	34·2	43·1	33·8	45·5
Luxembourg	62·5	47·5	32·5	47·5	72·5
Netherlands	26·8	32·4	34·8	27·4	45·7

Note:—
Figures are taken from EDTA published annual returns, although United Kingdom figures have been revised to take account of late returns. England data on a comparable basis are not readily available, but figures could be expected to be very similar to those for the United Kingdom.

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of renal patients on (a) hospital dialysis, (b) home dialysis and (c) peritoneal dialysis in (i) England and (ii) the United Kingdom in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. John Patten: According to information supplied by the European Dialysis and Transplant Association, the number of renal patients on dialysis in (i) England and (ii) the United Kingdom from 1978 to 1982 was as follows:

	Number of patients on treatment at 31 December
	1978	1979	1980	1981	1982
(i) England
(a) Hospital dialysis	796	902	1,005	1,114	1,226
(b) Home dialysis	1,606	1,716	1,758	1,858	1,911
(c) Peritoneal dialysis	103	193	421	764	1,024
(ii) United Kingdom
(a) Hospital dialysis	1,011	1,127	1,241	1,373	1,490
(b) Home dialysis	1,872	2,022	2,064	2,162	2,218
(c) Peritoneal dialysis	114	229	520	907	1,225

Ante and Post-natal Care

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will set out, for health authorities in south-east England, figures for expenditure on (a) ante-natal and (b) post-natal care for each of the years from 1979-80 to 1984-85.

Mr. John Patten: Separate information about the expenditure in these fields is not collected centrally.

Family Incomes

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Social Services in how many two-parent families in receipt of family income supplement both parents are in paid employment; in how many one parent is in paid employment; and in how many of these cases the woman is the sole earner.

Mr. Whitney: The table shows the position at the end of October 1984, the latest date at which this breakdown is available.

	Numbers
Two-earner couples receiving family income supplement	11,000
Man only earning in couple receiving family income supplement	109,000
Woman only earning in couple receiving family income supplement	2,000
TOTAL	122,000

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report (a) the numbers of families with one, two, three, four or more children, respectively, with means (i) below, (ii) at, and (iii) within 140 per cent. of their supplementary benefit level, (b) how many of the families in each case were in or out of work and (c) what were the total number of families with one, two, three or four or more children in Great Britain, at the latest date for which comparable figures are available.

Mr. Whitney: The information requested is shown in the table. All figures relate to 1981 which is the latest year for which information on low income families is available.

Great Britain 1981

	Employment status of family head	Estimated number of families with
		One child	Two children	Three children	Four or more children
(a) and (b) Income relative to supplementary benefit level
(i) Below 140 per cent.	Working full-time‡	[30,000]	60,000	[30,000]	[10,000]
	Not in work	60,000	[40,000]	[20,000]	[10,000]
(ii) At 140 per cent.*	Working full-time‡	nil	nil	nil	nil
	Not in work	230,000	240,000	110,000	[40,000]
(iii) Within 140 per cent.†	Working full-time‡	150,000	320,000	140,000	70,000
	Not in work	50,000	70,000	[40,000]	[20,000]
(c) Total number of families		2,920,000	2,970,000	940,000	300,000

All figures are subject to statistical error. Figures shown in square brackets are subject to very considerable proportionate statistical error.
* Receiving supplementary benefit.
† Excludes those given at (i) and (ii).
‡ Includes those who have been sick or unemployed for less than 13 weeks.

Board and Lodging Payments

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many single persons under and over 26 years and how many married couples (a) with children and (b) without children, respectively, in the borough of Newham are in receipts of Department of Health and Social Security board and lodgings payments.

Mr. Whitney: Separate figures are not readily available for the London borough of Newham and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Population Statistics

Mr. Sumberg asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the latest available figure for the total population of the Greater London Area, and of each of the six metropolitan counties, respectively.

Mr. John Patten: The latest available information relates to 30 June 1983 and is as follows:

Area	Estimated resident population
Greater London	6,754,500
Greater Manchester	2,598,500
Merseyside	1,500,800
South Yorkshire	1,310,500
Tyne and Wear	1,145,300
West Midlands	2,657,600
West Yorkshire	2,059,300

Equivalent figures for 1984 will be published in June.

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his most recent estimate of the cost saving to the National Health Service which will arise from limited list prescribing.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: £75 million.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the cost to the National Health Service of the proposals to permit the National Health Service prescription and dispensing of scheduled drugs in exceptional circumstances.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Chief Medical Officer's group of medical and pharmaceutical experts, set up to advise us on the contents of the selected list, considered that the drugs which remain available under the National Health Service met all clinical needs in the therapeutic categories concerned. We expect that implementation of our proposals for an appeal mechanism in exceptional circumstances would result in the prescription of very few scheduled drugs, with minimal effect on the selected list savings.

Housing (Health Effects)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether his Department has made any study of the impact on health of poor or overcrowded housing.

Mr. John Patten: We are aware of various studies which have been made into possible relationships between housing and health, and there is liaison between officials in this Department and in the Department of the Environment about the issues involved.

Legionnaire's Disease

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on Government-funded research into legionnaire's disease, giving details of each project funded since 1979, including the grant or budget, the number of researchers involved, the date of commencement of the project and the date of completion in the case of each project.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Human Tissue

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to seek to amend the law on the sale and purchase of living human tissue; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The offering of human tissues for profit is contrary to a Council of Europe resolution to which this country is signatory, and is opposed by the Transplantation Society and the British Transplantation Society. We have no hesitation in condemning this abhorrent practice, and are at present considering the most effective way of preventing it. Unethical conduct by medical practitioners is a matter for the General Medical Council.

Fostering

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidelines he issues to local authorities regarding the racial criteria to be used in the placement of children for fostering; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Drug Companies

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the return on capital allowed to pharmaceutical companies in the financial year 1984-85, and the figure he is assuming for 1985-86 in making the estimates for the current year.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Acute Beds (Bloomsbury)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on what criteria he based his conclusion that the Bloomsbury health district has a surplus of acute beds.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Ambulance Staff Organisation

Dr. Glyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress he has made with the chairman of the West Berkshire health authority in recognising the Association of Professional Ambulance Personnel for industrial relations purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We expect health authorities to recognise any organisation which a significant number of their staff have chosen to join. The association's request for recognition by West Berkshire is a matter for the health authority to determine and my hon. Friend may wish to write direct to the chairman.

NHS (Capital Assets)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has received the report of the working party of the Association of Health Service Treasurers on managing capital assets in the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend has received a copy of the working party's report which the association is distributing to all health service treasurers. The report points out that NHS revenue accounts do not at present show the annual cost of consuming and replacing capital assets, including equipment. It examines commercial practices in accounting for capital and sets out a number of proposals for introducing this principle into the accounts of health authorities. The working party emphasise that they are not merely seeking changes in the way information is presented but wish to provide a basis for the more efficient use by managers of the resources available for health care in this country.

I strongly endorse the report's central case that managers in the NHS need to be more fully aware of the value of the assets they manage and cost of using them, and I should like to thank the association for the important contribution they have made in exploring practical ways of achieving this.

EMPLOYMENT

Youth Training

Miss Boothroyd asked the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his reply of 30 April, Official Report, column 108, what attempts are made to ascertain whether the 85 per cent. of ex-trainees who are not sent a questionnaire find work after completion of their training schemes; whether the 35 per cent. of those sent questionnaires and who do not respond are further contacted by (a) the Manpower Services Commission or (b) officials of his Department in an attempt to ascertain whether they found work after completion of their training; whether he will take steps to ensure that a larger percentage of ex-trainees are contacted for the purposes of compilation of post-youth training scheme statistics; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The 15 per cent. sample size for the regular follow-up survey of young people who leave the youth training scheme was chosen because it provides an accurate national picture of what happens to all leavers in each month, including those who are not contacted. It also generates reliable regional and area information each quarter.

At an early stage in the follow-up programme the Manpower Services Commission contracted an independent research organisation to conduct an interview survey of non-respondents. This showed that non-respondents to the postal survey were no different from respondents in their likelihood of being either unemployed or in jobs. Hence, I am satisfied that the existing arrangements for establishing the destinations of young people leaving the youth training scheme provide the best available information.

Private Training Agencies

Ms Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the proportion and number of locally approved mode A places run by private training agencies in (a) Wolverhampton and Walsall, (b) Dudley and Sandwell, (c) Nottinghamshire, (d) Staffordshire, (e) Liverpool Outer, (f) Liverpool Inner, (g) Cheshire, (h) Oldham, Tameside and Stockport, (i) Bolton, Bury, Rochdale and Wigan, (j) Glasgow City, (k) Edinburgh Central and Fife, (l) Sheffield and Rotherham and (m) Northumberland, North Tyneside and Newcastle.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The information requested is in the table (the figures relate to 1984-85).

Area	Total contracted mode A places	*Contracted places private training organisations	Percentage private training places of total mode A
Wolverhampton and Walsall	4,200	1,193	28·4
Dudley and Sandwell	4,085	1,531	37·5
Nottinghamshire	6,363	1,008	15·8
Staffordshire	8,819	2,492	28·3
Liverpool Outer	3,705	1,295	35·0
Liverpool Inner	4,855	2,624	54·0
Cheshire	3,435	2,215	64·5
Oldham, Tameside and Stockport	3,679	1,169	31·8
Bolton, Bury, Rochdale and Wigan	4,176	869	20·8
Glasgow City	6,706	1,634	24·4
Edinburgh, Central and Fife	7,600	1,584	20·8
Sheffield and Rotherham	5,288	824	15·6
Northumberland, North Tyneside and Newcastle	2,751	1,050	38·2

* Private training organisations are defined as private companies whose business is wholly or partly the provision of training services to commerce and industry. Group training associations and other industrial training bodies are excluded.

Private training organisations either existed prior to the youth training scheme as commercial training providers or have been set up in order to provide training for the scheme. In most cases the organisations provide the off-the-job training in their own centre and send trainees to other organisations for work experience.

Licences

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list in the Official Report all the different types of licences operated or granted by his Department and the year in which they first came into operation.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This Department has been responsible for issuing licences for employment agencies and employment businesses since 1976.

The Health and Safety Executive is responsible for issuing several types of licences. These are listed, together with the year of origin in each case.

	Year
Licences to store explosives in factories and magazines	1875
Licences to import explosives	1875
Licences to manufacture ammonium nitrate fuel oil	1958
Licences to operate a nuclear installation	1960
Licences to import compressed acetylene	1978
Licences to work with asbestos coating	1984
Licences to work with asbestos insulation	1984
Licences to store petroleum spirit at sites*	1985

* Subject to the Notification of Installations Handling Hazardous Substances Regulations 1982.

Earnings

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will set out the number of workers in England and Scotland who now earn less than the Council of Europe's decency thresholds on the same basis as his answer of 13 May, Official Report, columns 5-6.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The new earnings survey indicates that in April 1984 about 25 per cent. of full-time adult employees in England and 30 per cent. of full-time adult employees in Scotland had gross weekly earnings for a full week of less than £108·30; the latter figure corresponding to 68 per cent. of the national average for all full-time adult employees. Although an advisory committee of the Council of Europe has suggested the figure of 68 per cent. of national full-time adult average earnings as significant in considering low pay, the figure has not been accepted or recognised by the United Kingdom or any other European country.

SCOTLAND

Rates

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the amount of rates collected in Scotland in each year from 1981-82; and if he will express the costs of both (a) lands valuation and (b) collection of rates as a percentage of the total.

Mr. Ancram: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is the average level of rates in 1985-86 for (a) owner-occupied properties and (b) houses in the public sector in Scotland;

(2) what is the average factor by which valuations have risen in the case of (a) owner-occupied property and (b) council houses and other houses in the public sector;

(3) what is the average multiplier in Scotland; what are the upper and lower ends of the multiplier factor; and if he will publish a table showing any variations as between regions and districts;

(4) what is the average rates bill in Scotland in 1985-86 of (a) owners of domestic properties and (b) council house tenants, and other houses in the public sector; and if he will publish a table giving the information, local authority by local authority;

(5) what was the nature and scope of the evidence on rentals paid in the domestic sector on which the recent valuation was based;

(6) if he will make a statement on the reasons for the differential increase in rateable values as between (a) small commercial ratepayers and (b) large commercial concerns, which have resulted from the recent revaluation;

(7) what is the average increase in the rate poundage in 1985-86 as compared with 1984-85 in each district and region in Scotland for (a) domestic ratepayers, (b) commercial ratepayers and (c) industrial ratepayers; and if he will publish the information in the form of a table.

Mr. Ancram: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Licences

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report all the different types of licences operated or granted by his Department and the year in which they first came into operation.

Mr. George Younger: I regret that this information is available only at a disproportionate cost.

Kidney Patients

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the numbers on the waiting list for renal dialysis in (a) the Greater Glasgow health board area, (b) the west of Scotland and (c) Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: All patients referred for treatment for end-stage renal failure who are considered likely to benefit from renal dialysis are receiving appropriate treatment and there are no waiting lists.

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the total expenditure on hospital-based renal treatment in (a) the Greater Glasgow health board area and (b) Scotland in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. John MacKay: This information is not collected centrally. The hon. Member may wish to write to the health boards which provide renal treatment—Greater Glasgow, Lothian, Tayside, Grampian and Highland.

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report (i) the number of beds and (ii) the number of nurses allocated to renal dialysis units in hospitals in (a) the Greater Glasgow health board area, (b) the west of Scotland and (c) Scotland, in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. John MacKay: This information is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to approach the health boards which provide renal treatment for information on these points.

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what have been the numbers of renal transplant operations carried out in (a) the Greater Glasgow health board area, (b) the west of Scotland and (c) Scotland in each of the past five years for which figures are available;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report the number of renal patients on (a) hospital dialysis, (b) home dialysis, and (c) peritoneal dialysis in (i) the Greater Glasgow health board area, (ii) the west of Scotland and (iii) Scotland, in each of the last five years for which figures are available;

(3) what has been the annual acceptance rate per million of the total population of new renal patients for treatment in the following areas, in each of the past five years for which figures are available: (a) the Greater Glasgow health board area, (b) the west of Scotland and (c) Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: The services provided by Greater Glasgow health board for the treatment of end-stage renal failure cover, as well as its own area, the areas of Argyll and Clyde, Ayrshire and Arran, Dumfries and Galloway, Forth Valley (part), Lanarkshire and the Western Isles health board. The relevant statistics for the whole of the West of Scotland, so far as these are available centrally, are included in the figures for Greater Glasgow given in the accompanying table.

UHT Milk

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much UHT milk is currently consumed in Scotland; and how much of this consumption consists of milk produced in (a) Britain, (b) the European Economic Community and (c) the rest of the world.

Mr. John MacKay: The information requested is not available in the form requested. An estimated 6 million litres of UHT milk were sold in Scotland in the year ended 31 March 1984. Approximately 99 per cent. of total UHT milk sold in Great Britain in 1984 was produced in Great Britain with the balance being accounted for by imports from the European Economic Community.

Speech Therapy

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he is satisfied with the provision of speech therapy facilities in Drumpark and Deanbank schools, Lanarkshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: Speech therapy provision is the responsibility of Lanarkshire health board. Whilst the Scottish Home and Health Department is not aware of any difficulties in recruitment of speech therapists their deployment to schools such as Drumpark and Deanbank is a matter for the health board in conjunction with the local education authority.

Defective Houses

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy with regard to the time scale within which defective houses should be repaired under the Housing Defects Act.

Mr. Ancram: The designation order made under the Housing Defects Act specifies a period of 10 years from 1 December 1984 within which persons may seek assistance under the Act. Now that the warranty scheme for the repair of houses covered by the Act has been approved by the National House-Building Council, designers and builders will shortly be invited to submit systems of repair of PRC houses for approval. I would hope that the first approval of repair systems can be given within the next few months so that a start can be made on repairs to houses before the end of the year.

Birth Statistics

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of total live births in Scotland for each of the last 20 years was represented by children who were born to unmarried parents.

Mr. John MacKay: The information is as follows:

Illegitimate births: 1965-84

	Total births	Illegitimate births	Percentage
1965	100,660	5,883	5·84
1966	96,536	6,160	6·38

WALES

School Meals

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the average price of school meals in primary and secondary schools in each local education authority and in Wales as a whole at the latest date for which information is available.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: At September 1984, average prices of a fixed school meal for pupils in Wales were:

Local Education Authority	Primary (pence)	Secondary (pence)
Clwyd	55	55
Dyfed	60	60
Gwent	55	55
Gwynedd	55	60
Mid Glamorgan	50	60
Powys	55-70	55-70
South Glamorgan	55	60
West Glamorgan	55	55

The Wales average is about 55p in primary schools and 60p in secondary schools.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Ethiopia and Sudan

Sir Patrick Wall asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what aid has now reached Eritrean refugees in Ethiopia and in the Sudan.

Mr. Rifkind: Only a very small proportion of the emergency assistance that Britain and other donors are providing for victims of the famine in Ethiopia has been directed specifically to Eritrea. The Ethiopian Government have estimated that 12,500 tonnes of grain are needed in Eritrea each month. We understand that much less than this is being delivered, and we support the efforts of the UN Co-ordinator to improve the distribution of relief supplies to Eritrea. In recent months we have provided about £4 million to victims of the famine in Ethiopia who have sought refuge in east Sudan, including those from Eritrea.

Aid Expenditure

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the real value of United Kingdom overseas aid expenditure to recipient countries in each year since 1979-80, after allowing for inflation.

Mr. Rifkind: Since 1979-80 overseas aid expenditure in cash and in constant 1984-85 prices using the index of inflation derived from changes in United Kingdom gross domestic product has been as follows:

Year	Current Prices	Constant 1984-85 prices
1979-80	834	1,273
1980-81	968	1,245
1981-82	1,016	1,189
1982-83	1,033	1,131
1983-84	1,100	1,152
1984-85*	1,174	1,174

* Gross aid programme allocation: actual expenditure figures for 1984-85 are not yet available.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Manufactures (Statistics)

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year since 1980 and the latest month for which figures are available the United Kingdom export price index for manufactures on local currency terms and similar figures for principal industrial countries, together with such equivalent information as is available to him about (a) Norway, (b) Sweden, *(c)*Austria, (d) Switzerland and (e) Finland, respectively.

Mr. Channon: The available information is in the table.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Mr. W. Wakeham (Decommissioning Grant)

Mr. Steen asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fishers and Food if he will now make payment of the decommissioning grant of £28,844 promised to Mr. W. Wakeham of 53 Hill Park Road, Brixham, Devon, and contained in a letter to Mr. Wakeham dated 31 October 1984 reference SW/84/12/D and signed by C. R. George on behalf of his Ministry; and if he will make a statement;

(2)if he will investigate the circumstances in which Mr. W. Wakeham of 53 Hill Park Road, Brixham, Devon, has still not received the decommissioning grant on his ex-fishing vessel Devon Ray, on which a grant of £28,844 is payable.

Mr. MacGregor: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Service (Chief Education Officer)

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department why the post of chief education officer for the prison service has been down graded from assistant secretary level to that of senior principal; what changes in duties and responsibilities the downgrading of this post signifies; if the downgrading of this post indicates that prison education is to be given a lower priority; and what implications it has for the management structure of the chief education officer's branch.

Mr. Mellor: The post—which was not previously graded at assistant secretary (grade 5) level but was pitched as a departmental grade in between grade 5 and grade 6—is being brought into the unified grading structure at level 6. The alternative, which would have been to upgrade the post, was not considered appropriate. There will be no change in the duties of the post or in the management structure of the chief education officer' sbranch, nor does this signify any change in the priority given to prison education.

Local Government (Grants)

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the grant paid under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 to each local authority in receipt of such funding for each of the last three years.

Mr. Waddington: Grant paid to local authorities up to and including 15 May in respect of the last three financial years for which information is available is shown in the table.

In some cases the sums paid are not final settlements. These will be determined after audit, or further scrutiny by the Home Office, of the claims on which they are based.

Prisoners (Police Cells)

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer of 8 May, Official Report, column 407, what are the industrial relations problems that make it necessary to detain remand prisoners in police and court cells.

Mr. Mellor: Industrial action by prison staff leading to prisoners being held in police cells has taken place at five establishments during 1985. The issues were as follows:

(a) attempts to reduce operating capacity;

(b) refusal to admit prisoners after a given hour;

(c) refusal to admit prisoners diverted from another establishment;

(d) the reception and management of prisoners possibly suffering from AIDS or hepatitis.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer of 8 May, Official Report, column 407, what are the transport and other logistical problems that make it necessary to detain remand prisoners in police and court cells.

Mr. Mellor: Prisoners from London magistrates' courts pass through a central clearing house from whence they are delivered to the appropriate establishments. This operation can occasionally be disrupted by factors such as the late sitting of a court, traffic delays, vehicle breakdowns or staff sickness with the result that prisoners sometimes cannot be delivered before the prison reception closes for the night.

Board and Lodging Payments (Regulations)

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the implications of the new regulations on board and lodging accommodation payments for the electoral registration of supplementary benefit claimants living temporarily in such accommodation.

Mr. Mellor: Generally speaking, someone living at board and lodging accommodation for the periods mentioned in the regulations would be unlikely to qualify to register as an elector for that address, although he could qualify to register as an elector elsewhere. The decision in any individual case would be a matter for the electoral registration officer, who is answerable to the courts.

Shoplifting

Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to change the penalties available to the courts for the offence of shoplifting.

Mr. Mellor: No.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the number of people currently engaged in Sunday trading; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: This information is not collected by the Department on a routine basis.

Unconvicted Male Prisoners

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department why, in the light of his statement of 25 January in reply to the hon. Member for Knowsley, North, Official Report, columns 533-34, that the problem of unconvicted adult male prisoners being held in police cells had been dealt with, there were 34 unconvicted adult males held in police cells on the night of 25 January.

Mr. Mellor: There was a sudden surge in the population that day which could not be accommodated because of essential maintenance work in B wing at Brixton.

Vietnamese Refugees

Sir Patrick Wall asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what reply he has made to the request to Her Majesty's Government by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to take in more Vietnamese refugees from closed camps in Hong Kong.

Mr. Waddington: The Government's policy towards Vietnamese refugees in Hong Kong is currently being reviewed in the light of recommendations made by the Home Affairs Committee in its report on refugees and asylum, with special reference to the Vietnamese.

BBC (Peacock Committee)

Mr. Brinton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is now in a position to announce the membership of the Peacock committee reviewing the finances of the British Broadcasting Corporation.

Mr. Brittan: I am pleased to announce that the following have accepted my invitation to serve as members of the committee on financing the BBC under the chairmanship of Professor Peacock:

Mr. Samuel Brittan
Miss Judith Chalmers
Mr. Jeremy Hardie
Professor Alastair Hetherington
Lord Quinton
Sir Peter Reynolds

EMPLOYMENT

Work Permits

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many work permits have been granted to foreign nationals working in Inner London and the rest of the United Kingdom in the last 12 months.

Mr. Alan Clark: Separate statistics of work permit issues for work in the inner London area are not maintained. In the year ending 31 March 1985 approval was given for 11,839 foreign nationals to work in the United Kingdom.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will carry out a survey into the number of job vacancies in inner London and the reasons why these are not being filled by United Kingdom residents.

Mr. Alan Clark: There is no evidence that the cost of such a survey would be justified.

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the number of European Community nationals working in inner London and the rest of the United Kingdom at the present time.

Mr. Alan Clark: The latest available information comes from the 1983 Labour force survey which showed that an estimated 350,000 nationals of member states of the European Community, other than the United Kingdom, were in employment in the United Kingdom. Of these, it is estimated that 130,000 were resident in Greater London and 220,000 elsewhere, but the location of their employment was not identified in the survey.

Skillcentres

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the skillcentres covering the Greater London council area at 1 May.

Mr. Peter Morrison: At 1 May there were six skillcentres and one skillcentre annexe covering the Greater London area. They are as follows:

Barking, Deptford, Enfield, Perivale, Twickenham, Waddon and Waddon Annexe in Sydenham.

Additionally, a number of skillcentre classes for adults were running at the young persons training centre in Lambeth.

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number of (a) men and (b) women at present taking courses at skillcentres in the Greater London council area.

Mr. Peter Morrison: At 13 May there were 744 men and 64 women undergoing training in skillcentres in the Greater London council area.

Trans Promotions Ltd.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what information he has on the number of staff employed by Trans Promotions Ltd. in running its youth training schemes in each relevant Manpower Services Commission area; how this information compares with the average figures given in the report to the Manpower Services Commission youth training board of the Manpower Services Commission survey of scheme providers, paper YTB 85/14, annex A, paragraph 1.1; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether the Manpower Services Commission undertook any financial checks into the standing of the youth training scheme managing agent Trans Promotions Ltd. prior to the signing of a contract between Trans Promotions Ltd. and the Manpower Services Commission; and whether there are any plans to conduct such a check in the future;

(3) what steps he has taken to satisfy himself that the youth training schemes run by Trans Promotions Ltd. meet the minimum criteria of the Manpower Services Commission; and if he will make a statement;

(4) on what dates the large companies unit, the large companies sub group of the youth training board, and the youth training board of the Manpower Services Commission approved a contract to provide youth training scheme places between the Manpower Services Commission and the managing agent Trans Promotions Ltd.; on what dates the renewal of the contract for 1984-85 was approved; on what dates a list of work experience provides for 1984-85 was approved; and what steps he has taken to satisfy himself as to the actions of the above bodies and as to the adequacy and accuracy of the list of work experience providers;

(5) how many places on the youth training scheme are being offered by the managing agent Trans Promotions Ltd. nationally and by Manpower Services Commission area in the current year; how many trainees were in training in these places nationally and by Manpower Services Commission area on the latest available date; and how many trainees have entered such places by Manpower Services Commission area and nationally in the current year.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Home Helps

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what was the average hourly pay for home helps in each of the years 1974 to 1984 in Northern Ireland;

(2) how the average hourly pay for home helps in Northern Ireland relates to the average hourly pay for (a) full-time female manual workers and (b) full-time male manual workers in each of the years 1974 to 1984;

(3) what has been the real percentage change in the average hourly rate of pay for home helps in Northern Ireland in each of the years 1974 to 1984 measured against the retail pay index;

(4) if he will make a statement on the recent report of the joint working group on the home help service in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement on the future of the service;

(5) what has been the total number of recipients of the home help service in Northern Ireland for each of the years 1974 to 1984;

(6) what has been total expenditure, in real terms, on the home help service in Northern Ireland for each of the years 1974 to 1984;

(7) what has been the real cost of the home help service, in Northern Ireland, per recipient for each of the years 1974 to 1984;

(8) what percentage increase there has been in (a) the total number of recipients and (b) the total real expenditure on the home help service in Northern Ireland between 1974 and 1984.

Mr. Chris Patten: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

PRIVATISATION

Mr. Fry asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the cost to public funds, and what extra cost is anticipated, in relation to the pension rights of employees and former employees of (a) the National Freight Corporation, (b) Sealink and (c) industrial training boards.

Mr. Fry asked the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the gross benefit to public funds of the sale of (a) the National Freight Corporation and (b) Sealink to the private sector: and what was the net benefit after obligations for present and future pensions were taken into consideration.

Mr. Moore: I am also replying, on behalf of the Secretary of State for Transport, to a similar question tabled to him.

Gross proceeds from the sale of the National Freight Corporation were £53·5 million. Deficiencies of some £48·7 million in the National Freight Corporation pension funds were met from the proceeds of sale. After deduction of sale expenses, net sale proceeds were about £4·6 million. In addition, payments are made from public funds to national Freight Company pension funds to cover that part of their annual outgo attributable to the unfunded element of the National Freight Corporation's obligations to its pension funds incurred before 1 April 1975. These historic support payments, which total about £5 million a year, relate to employees who were transferred from British Rail to the National Freight Corporation in 1968, and are unaffected by the privatisation. Proceeds from the sale of Sealink were retained by British Rail and did not accrue to central Government. Payments are made from public funds to British Rail pension funds to cover that part of their annual outgo attributable to the unfunded element of the board's obligations to its pension funds incurred before 1 January 1975. These historic support payments, of which about £1 million a year relate to Sealink former employees, are unaffected by the privatisation. In addition, a once-for-all payment of some £5 million to £6 million will be required in respect of that part of the pension transfer value of British Rail pension fund members employed by Sealink at the date of privatisation which relates to pre-1975 unfunded obligations.

In respect of the industrial training boards the cost of the employer's contributions to the industrial training boards pension funds required under the pension scheme rules,during the period April 1975 to December 1982 when the operating costs of the boards were met from the Exchequer, was £44 million.

In 1983 the industrial training boards pension funds were divided into an open fund which covers the employees of those boards which continue in existence; and a closed fund covering existing pensioners and the preserved benefits of former employees. Employers' contributions to the open fund are the responsibility of the boards and are met from income from levies on industry. No employers' contributions are made to the closed fund, but, since the industrial training boards operational funding had been the direct responsibility of the Government, they have given an undertaking that the pension entitlements due from the closed fund will be safeguarded should the fund at its actuarial reviews be shown to be deficient to meet its liabilities. So far this undertaking has not led to any cost on public funds and is not expected to do so in the foreseeable future.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Open University (Undergraduate Places)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of Open University new undergraduate places are already allocated, by overflow from previous years' applications, for the years 1986 and 1987; and if he will give the percentages for each region in Scotland.

Sir Keith Joseph: The university has not yet completed the admissions process for 1986 but estimates that about 42 per cent. of new undergraduate places will be filled by previous years' applicants. The estimated percentage for Scotland is 67 per cent. Information for 1987, or for the regions in Scotland, is not available.

Discretionary Grant Awards

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to how many applications for discretionary grant awards have been made for each year since 1978-79; and how many have been granted (a) in full and (b) in part.

Mr. Brooke: Statistics on the number of applications are not collated. The number of new discretionary awards made in each year was as follows:

England and Wales

	1978-79	1979-80	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83
Number of students (000's) receiving a full-value discretionary award	31·0	29·3	27·7	28·4	29·6
receiving a lesser value discretionary award	47·3	50·0	47·0	57·9	60·7

Figures for 1983-84 are not yet available.

School Meals

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list the proposed and actual expenditure on school meals for each year since 1979 in England in real terms.

Mr. Dunn: The actual expenditure on school meals for each year from 1980-81 to 1984-85 and the provision made by Government in the public expenditure White Paper immediately preceding that year are given in the table. The figures have been repriced to 1984-85 real terms using the gross domestic product (market prices) deflator.

	Planned Expenditure (1984-85 prices) £ million	Actual Expenditure (1984-85 prices) £ million
1980-81	351	508
1981-82	303	461
1982-83	354	448
1983-84	285	449
1984-85	263	415

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list, for each year since 1980, the number of local education authorities which provide free school meals (a) to the statutory minimum of children only and (b) to more than the statutory minimum.

Mr. Dunn: The information requested on provision in England is available in the annual school meals censuses, reports on which are available in the Library.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the average price of school meals in primary and secondary schools in each local eduation authority and in England as a whole at the latest date for which information is available.

Mr. Dunn: English local education authorities, returns of the price of a fixed meal in their primary and secondary schools are in book 2 of the report on the 1984 school meals census, which is available in the Library. The average of the school meal prices reported is 55p.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Tax Allowances

Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) by how much the value of income tax personal allowances has increased in real terms since 1979; how this amount has been distributed to each band of income taxpayers, both in total and in amount per taxpayer; and if he will make a statement;

(2) which income tax allowances have been increased by more than the rate of inflation since 1979; what were the real increases in each case; and what estimate he has made of the redistributional effects of these changes.

Mr. Moore: Information is in the following table:

	*Percentage increase in real terms
Married man's allowance	21
Single person's and wife's earned income allowance	20
Additional personal allowance	22
Married age allowance	10
Single age allowance	11
Blind person's allowance	7

* Compared with movement in the retail prices index (RPI) between 1978-79 and 1985-86, assuming an increase of 5½ per cent. in the RPI between 1984-85 and 1985-86.

Information on the distribution of income tax reductions resulting from increases in allowance levels is shown in the following table. This has been compiled by comparing estimates of tax yields at 1985-86 levels of incomes with estimates of yields on the same incomes if 1978-79 levels of allowances, indexed according to the statutory formula, were to be substituted for the proposed 1985-86 allowances. The 1978-79 indexed allowances are calculated by reference to movements in the RPI between December 1977 and December 1984 reflecting the statutory formula.

Reductions in income tax in 1985-86 compared with 1978-79 indexed tax regime

Range of total income in 1985-86 £	Reduction in tax due to allowance changes £m.	*Tax units * million*	*Average reduction per tax unit	Reduction as percentage of average income in the range
Under 5,000	440	3·9	†95	2·6
5,000-10,000	1,150	8·4	135	1·8
10,000-15,000	840	4·6	180	1·5
15,000-20,000	360	1·8	200	1·2
20,000-30,000	230	1·0	240	1·0
30,000-50,000	80	0·3	275	0·7
Over 50,000	30	0·09	330	0·4
Total	3,130	20·1	150	1·5

* Counting married couples as one.

† By reference to the estimated numbers of tax units who would be liable to pay tax under the indexed 1978-79 regime; this number is some 850,000 greater than the numbers paying tax in 1985-86 under the Budget proposals.

Business Expenses

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the current amount of interest deducted from trading profits as a business expense.

Mr. Moore: This figure is not available from tax records. Estimates of interest payments by the company sector and public corporations are derived from alternative sources by the Central Statistical Office and published in tables 5·1 and 6·2 respectively of the national income Blue Book. No corresponding estimates are available in respect of trading by unincorporated bodies.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the amount expected to be claimed as a business expense for the purchase and operation of cars used for business purposes in the current financial year.

Mr. Moore: I regret that the expenses of operating cars for business purposes are not distinguished from other business expenses in tax records.

Capital allowances arising from the purchase of cars by private business are tentatively estimated at £2 billion in 1980, the latest year for which reliable figures are readily available.

Exchange Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the changes in the real exchange of the pound sterling against (a) the United States dollar, (b) the deutschmark and (c) the yen from January 1985 to the most recent available date.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The information requested is as follows:

Real Exchange Rates (percentage changes between January and February 1985)*

	Per cent.
Sterling/Dollar	+2·6
Sterling/Deutschmark	—1·0
Sterling/Yen	+0·2

* Calculated using bilateral exchange rates and relative wholesale export prices. Real exchange rate data are not available beyond February because no more recent relative export price figures have been released.

Building Societies (Directors)

Mr. Cohen asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce legislation to provide a uniform system whereby all building society ordinary investors have an equal opportunity to nominate directors to their building societies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Paragraph 5.14 of the Green Paper "Building Societies: A New Framework" (Cmnd. 9316), setting out the Government's proposals for building society legislation, suggested provisions to ensure that outside candidates have a fair chance to stand against those of the board. The Government are now considering the representations which they have received on the Green Paper. If the hon. Member wishes to raise particular points, perhaps he would write to me.

Business Expansion Scheme

Mr. Moynihan asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether personal tax relief is available under the terms of the business expansion scheme for qualifying individuals investing non-interest bearing loan capital in eligible companies without participation in the share capital of the company.

Mr. Moore: The business scheme provides income tax relief for individuals who invest in new, full risk, ordinary shares or qualifying companies with which they are not connected. Investments of loan capital, whether or not they carry interest, do not come within the scheme.

However, where a loan advanced to a person carrying on a trade, profession or vocation, and used wholly for the purposes of that activity, becomes irrecoverable, the loss may be set against other gains in determining the lender's liability to capital gains tax.

VAT (Hot Take-away Food)

Mr. Dover asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to the answer of 12 November 1984 Official Report, column 189, when he will be in a position to give information on the estimated revenue received as a result of the value added tax being imposed on hot take-away food.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Financial Statement and Budget Report

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, in the light of the projected privatisation of British Gas, he has made, or intends to make, any adjustment to his calculation of the implied cumulative fiscal adjustment, 1985-89, as outlined in table 2.5, line 13, of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report, 1985-86"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: The estimated fiscal adjustment depends on the projections for Government expenditure and receipts and upon the path for public sector borrowing which the Government consider appropriate. These are reconsidered at Budget time in the light of all relevant factors, including the prospective receipts from the sale of British Gas and other asset sales.

Customs and Excise

Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the provisions under which Her Majesty's Customs and Excise seek to require a person, in connection with any assigned matter, as defined in the Customs and Excise Managment Act 1979, to produce, furnish or deliver any document, or cause any document to be produced, furnished or delivered, or permit the Commissioners of Customs and Excise, or a person authorised by them, to inspect any document or to make or take extracts from or copies of or remove any document; and (a) which of these provisions is not concerned with the assessment, collection and enforcement of value added tax, car tax, customs duties, excise duties, betting and gaming duties or any penalties or interest related thereto and (b) which of these provisions Her Majesty's Customs and Excise seeks to apply to third parties.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Faulds asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will specify when and how parliamentary sanction was obtained to incur direct public expenditure for the surrendered balances of £1,695,000 in 1980-81, £62,000 in 1981-82 and £1,185,000 in 1983-84 on Votes under the equivalents of the current sub-heads Class V, Vote 10, Subhead C2 and Class VIII, Vote 4, Sub-head B5, by means of identical sums being credited to the non-surrenderable grants-in-aid which had been the subject of a Vote under the then equivalents of subheads C1 and B4; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Rees: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

ENVIRONMENT

Disabled People (Sporting Events)

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, when the Minister with responsibility for sport next meets the chairman of the Sports Council, he will discuss the provision of spectator places for disabled people at major sports events.

Mr. Macfarlane: Decisions on seating arrangements at major sporting events are a matter for the organisers. I am not aware of any general problem in the provision of places for disabled people at such events, but the hon. Member has recently written to me about a specific case and I shall be replying to that letter very shortly.

County Councils (Assets)

Mr. Alan Howarth asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the value of the property assets of each county council and the aggregate value of these assets.

Mr. Waldegrave: This information is not held centrally.

Fluoride

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the sources of imported fluoride used for fluoridating the public water supply; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macfarlane: One of the compounds currently used for fluoridation of water supplies, disodium hexafluorosilicate is imported. It is manufactured by a phosphate fertiliser company from mineral rocks containing both phosphate and fluoride.

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps are taken to monitor the fluoride content in the air in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waldegrave: Monitoring of ambient levels of fluoride is carried out around specific industrial plants which give rise to fluoride emissions. Such plants also monitor stack emissions of fluoride as part of the control requirements laid down by the Industrial Air Pollution Inspectorate. Elsewhere, monitoring is not routinely carried out, because ad hoc studies have indicated that concentrations of fluoride in the atmosphere are generally very low, that is, between 0·5 and 1 microgrammes per cubic metre.

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the fluoride level in the air breathed by people in the Birmingham conurbation.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am advised that no industrial plants liable to give rise to fluoride emissions are situated in the Birmingham conurbation and, consequently, no monitoring of ambient levels of fluoride is carried out in this area.

Water (Nitrate Pollution)

Mr. Body asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he proposes to take any action about the level of nitrates in the water supply in accordance with the polluter pays principle.

Mr. Macfarlane: My Department has established a nitrate co-ordination group in conjunction with the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to look further into this and related questions.

Cormorants

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to ensure that section 16(1)(k) of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, relating to the issuing of licences for the killing of cormorants, is applied uniformly both in Scotland and in England and Wales.

Mr. Waldegrave: All licensing authorities comply with general guidelines agreed by the Nature Conservancy Council. However, the problems caused by cormorants differ between Scotland and England and Wales. In England and Wales, the problems arise at fish farms and reservoirs, where deterrents to move the birds can be effective. In Scotland the problems affect extensive open water fishery systems where such deterrents are not effective. It is impracticable to adopt a completely uniform approach.

Water Rates

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average water rate levied in each water authority area and in the United Kingdom as a whole; and by how much those rates have increased in real terms since 1979.

Mr. Macfarlane: This information is set out in the table in respect of water authorities in England and Wales. For the rest of the United Kingdom, I will ask the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Northern Ireland to write to the hon. Member.

House Transfers

Mr. Watson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce the conclusions of the review of the house transfer system announced by his right hon. and learned Friend the Solicitor-General, Official Report, 17 February 1984, column 347; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: The report of the interdepartmental group on simplifying house buying has been published today. Copies have been placed in the Library. I hope that this report will contribute to simpler and cheaper procedures for buying and selling property in this country. The Government will consider this report along with the second report of the conveyancing committee, chaired by Professor Farrand, in consultation with those affected by their recommendations.

TRANSPORT

Assessment Studies

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport what respective priority he will give to (a) local residents and (b) through traffic when the problems of local people are identified in the assessment studies.

Mrs. Chalker: It would not be sensible for anyone to anticipate the findings of the consultants' reports. I have already said that we shall seek to achieve a balance between all the conflicting priorities.

Traffic Management Systems (London)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will detail the circumstances under which he will use his reserve powers to take control of traffic management systems in London.

Mrs. Chalker: I shall answer this question shortly.

Directional Signs (Fencing)

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current cost of erecting fencing around individual directional signs; and what is the estimated cost of so doing on all directional signs on the A38 between Exeter and Plymouth.

Mrs. Chalker: It is the Department's policy to erect safety fencing to protect large directional signs. Average costs are not available as there is considerable variance according to the size and location of the signs to be protected. The A38 between Exeter and Plymouth has 121 signs which require protection at a cost of £145,000. The sum of £80,000 has already been spent protecting 67 of these signs as part of a continuing programme.

A38 (Safety Fencing)

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish the results of his review into the criteria relating to the provision of safety fencing on the A38 between Exeter and Plymouth.

Mrs. Chalker: I shall answer this question shortly.

Motorways (Use)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1), pursuant to the answer of 10 may to the hon. Member for Leicester, East, Official Report, column 515, whether his Department asked for or received any payment in return for the use by a film company of an unopened stretch of the Leatherhead interchange section of the M25 on 1 May; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is his policy with regard to (a) the granting of permission to and (b) requesting payment from private organisations or individuals for the use of unopened sections of motorways or other public roads for which he has responsibility; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We consider each request to use unopened sections of trunk road on its merits. Permission is not given where there is a danger of significant nuisance to local residents or the road might be damaged. No charge is made, but the organisation must agree to indemnify the Department against any claims. No charge was therefore made for the use of the Leatherhead interchange on 1 May.

Road Building

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will assess the effect on the opportunities for and ease of major road building in London of the proposed powers contained in the Local Government Bill for trunking roads without inquiry.

Mrs. Chalker: As was made clear to the Commons Committee on the Local Government Bill, of which the hon. Member was a member, the proposed powers are concerned only with transfer of ownership of the roads and can have no effect on established procedures for public consultation and inquiry for any traffic or highway schemes that might be proposed.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport what changes he envisages to the planning inquiry system currently under review to accelerate the planning process for major road schemes in urban areas.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Transport and for the Environment are considering whether any changes should be made in the light of the Civil Engineering Economic Development Committee's report on pre-construction procedures for motorway and trunk road schemes. They hope to announce their conclusions by the autumn.

Snow Hill Tunnel

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects to decide on British Rail's proposals for the Snow Hill tunnel.

Mr. David Mitchell: Before long.

Irradiated Fuel Leak (Temple Mills)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of the incident which occurred at Temple Mills in east London on 9 May, involving an irradiated fuel tank belonging to the Central Electricity Generating Board.

Mr. David Mitchell: CEGB experts attended Temple mills goods yard on 9 May after a pool of water was observed under a wagon carrying a CEGB irradiated fuel flask. They confirmed that the water was not contaminated and that there had been no leakage whatever from the flask.

Council of Ministers (Attendances)

Mr. Alexander asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many of the meetings of the EEC Council of Transport Ministers he has attended in person, since his appointment as Secretary of State.

Mr. Ridley: I have attended four of the five full Council meetings and both of the two informal Council meetings of Community Transport Ministers that have been held since my appointment. There was also a special Council meeting held in March 1984 on the French lorry drivers' strike, which I did not attend.

Motorways (Telephones)

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many coin-operated public telephones the lessee operating each motorway service area on the M1 motorway between london and Leeds is required to provide on each side of the motorway under the terms of section 3.27(v) of their lease.

Mr. Ridley: The operators of the motorway service areas on the M1 between London and Leeds area required under their leases to provide the minumum number of public con-operated telephones as follows:

Motorway service area	Minumum number of telephones
Scratchwood (single sided site)	12
Toddington	4 on each side
Newport Pagnall	5 on northbound side 6 on southbound side
Rotherthorpe	4 on each side
Watford Gap	5 on each side
Leicester Forest East	7 on each side
Trowell	3 on each side
Woodall	4 on each side
Woolley Edge	3 on each side

The operators are free under the terms of their lease to provide additonal public telephones if they so wish.

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he takes to satisfy himself that the terms of section 3.27(v) of the standard motorway service lease, relating to the minimum number of coin-operated public telephones to be provided on each side of the motorway, are complied with at each service area.

Mr. Ridley: My officials inspect each service area annually and check that the minimum number of public telephones required under the lease is provided. The inspectors ensure that telephones are working properly at the time.

National Road Maintenance Condition Survey 1984 (Defects Index)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a list showing, by class of road for each year since 1979, the defects index of table 1, National Road Maintenance Condition Survey 1984; recalculated for 1979 as the base year.

Mrs. Chalker: The following is the information:

National defects indices: England and Wales

Cars (Mileage)

Mr. Maude asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is his Department's latest estimate of the annual mileage of a domestic car user.

Mrs. Chalker: The average annual mileage of a household car is about 8,500.

Royal Victoria Dock Swingbridge

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport what investigation is being undertaken on the Royal Victoria dock swingbridge by or after consultation with the London Docklands Development Corporation; under whose authority the adjacent highway was closed; and when it and the swingbridge will be reopened for traffic.

Mrs. Chalker: This is not a matter for my Department. However, I understand that the Connaught road swingbridge has been closed since 10 April by a temporary traffic order made by the local highway authority, the London borough of Newham, under the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984. The road is expected to be reopened on 1 June.

Midlands Link Motorway

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the reply on 28 March, Official Report, column 287, if the holding down bolts of the central reservation barrier of the Oldbury viaduct on the midland links motorway have been checked.

Mrs. Chalker [pursuant to the reply, 13 May 1985, c. 64]: Not as yet.

Performance to date of the central reservation barrier has been satisfactory here and elsewhere on the midland links, but tests will be carried out at the Oldbury viaduct in the current programme of investigation.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

SWAPO (Prison and Refugee Camps)

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will request the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to make available to Her Majesty's Government the reports he has received of the maltreatment of inmates of prison and refugee camps maintained by the South West Africa People's Organisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: We are, of course, concerned at reports of maltreatment of refugees, wherever this may occur. It is for the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to consider reports such as the ones referred to by my hon. Friend, and to decide what action, if any, to take in response.

Immigration (Entry Clearance)

Mr. J. Enoch Powell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many applications by Commonwealth citizens for entry clearance into the United Kingdom were dealt with in 1983 and 1984 by the visa and passport department of Her Britannic Majesty's Consulate in Frankfurt, West Germany.

Mr. Luce: The information is as follows:

	Received	Issued	Refused
1983	391	270	8
1984	396	239	19

SOCIAL SERVICES

Suffolk Family Practitioner Committee

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Social Services in how many cases, during the last 10 years, the Suffolk family practitioner committee has found a practitioner to have acted in breach of his contract of employment; and in how many of these cases the committee has exercised its power to withhold remuneration.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not collect detailed local information of this kind centrally. However, the Suffolk family practitioner committee has provided information for the years from 1 April 1982, which is as follows:

	numbers
Dental breaches	1
Medical breaches	2
Pharmaceutical breaches	2
Ophthalmic breaches	1

FPCs have no power to withhold remuneration, though they may recommend to the Secretary of State that a withholding be made in a particular case. A withholding was recommended in three of the six cases.

NHS (Expenditure)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on what index of prices he calculates real increases in National Health Service expenditure.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We are firmly of the view that real increases in National Health Service expenditure as a whole should be measured in economic cost terms, that is, on the basis of general inflation, as measured by the GDP deflator. This approach, which is consistent with the real terms analyses in the public expenditure White Paper, measures changes in the real cost to the economy as a whole of expenditure on the National Health Service.

Private Detectives

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the practice of his Department in relation to the hiring of private detectives to investigate claims for social security and supplementary benefits; how much has been spent on investigations by private detectives; and how much such investigations have taken place in the last five years for which information is available.

Mr. Whitney: The Department does not employ private detectives to investigate claims for social security benefits.

Abortions

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish data on the number of abortions for each week over 19 weeks for each of the last five years; and if he will sub-divide the data according to whether the abortion was carried out in a private or a National Health Service hospital, and whether or not the foetus was deformed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mental Health Act 1983 (Orders)

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many orders have been made since October 1983 by the courts under section 37 of the Mental Health Act 1983 placing a convicted person under guardianship of a local social services authority or other approved person; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Between 30 September 1983 and 31 March 1984 four new guardianship orders under section 37 of the Mental Health Act 1983 were accepted or approved by local authorities. Later figures are not yet available.

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many patients have been discharged or transferred from special hospitals on recommendation of the responsible medical officer since October 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In the period 1 November 1983 to 30 April 1985, 220 patients were discharged or transferred from special hospitals on their responsible medical officer's recommendation and 19 patients went to complete prison sentences when their responsible medical officer considered they no longer needed treatment. A further 65 patients were discharged by mental health review tribunals—which may or may not have been the course favoured by the responsible medical officer.

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans the Government have to remedy the delays to which patients, detained under sections 3, 37 and 41 of the Mental Health Act 1983, are subjected when an application for a mental health review tribunal is made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Delays in convening tribunal hearings are not all within our control. In some cases those representing applicants have required substantial time to prepare their cases. Delays which have occurred have in the main involved restricted patients, where the tribunal president must be a judge. Some additional judge time has been made available for dealing with these applications. There have been increases in the staff servicing tribunals and we have now authorised further increases. Other measures are also being taken to speed up the processing of applications and we will continue to monitor the situation closely. The Mental Health Act 1983 gave rise to a considerable increase in the work of tribunals. In 1984 they dealt with 2,208 cases compared with 911 in 1982. The 1984 figure included some 900 applications by patients detained under section 2 of the Act, which must be heard within seven days of receipt of the application.

NHS (Drugs Bill)

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will state the assumed level of direct purchases and of private prescriptions upon which his current calculations of savings on the National Health Service drugs bill are based.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In view of the comprehensive nature of the selected list, we would not expect there to be a significant reduction in NHS prescriptions resulting from patients buying drugs over the counter or on non-NHS prescription.

Social Security (Member's Correspondence)

Mr. John Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to reply to a letter sent to his Department by the right hon. and learned Member for Aberavon, dated 17 December 1984 and marked "Urgent", regarding the social security case of a constituent.

Mr. Newton: I wrote to the right hon. and learned Member on 15 May, and regret that my reply had been delayed.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing the numbers of unemployed supplementary benefit claimants in receipt of a payment for mortgage interest according to the amount of mortgage interest payment made in bands of £5.

Mr. Whitney: Estimates of average payments for mortgage interest and ground rent can be produced, but available data are not sufficiently reliable to provide a satisfactory analysis of the type requested.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average payment made for mortgage interest to (a) unemployed supplementary benefit claimants on benefit for less than six months, (b) all unemployed supplementary benefit claimants, (c) other supplementary benefit claimants and (d) all supplementary benefit claimants.

Mr. Whitney: Information is not available in the precise form requested. The estimated average weekly payments of supplementary benefit for mortgage interest and ground rent in 1982, which are the latest figures available, are as follows:

Claimant Group	Average payment for mortgage interest £
a. Unemployed supplementary benefit claimants on benefit for less than six months	17·09
b. All unemployed supplementary benefit claimants	16·92
c. Other supplementary benefit claimants	9·34
d. All supplementary benefit claimants	13·87

Source: Annual Statistical Enquiry.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average payment for (a) rates and (b) water rates for people in receipt of supplementary benefit; and if he will provide a table showing the numbers receiving payment for (i) rates and (ii) water rates according to the amount received in bands of £2 in each case.

Mr. Whitney: The information is not available in the precise form requested. It is estimated that in May 1983, the latest date for which figures are available, about 2,870,000 supplementary benefit recipients received rate rebates, at an average weekly rate of about £4·30. The estimated distribution by amount of rate rebate was as follows:

Estimated number of recipients Thousands	Amount of weekly rate rebate
300	under £2
1,050	£2-£3·99
1,050	£4-£5.99
450	over £6

The latest information for water rates relates to the amount taken into account in calculating supplementary benefit and is contained in table 6.14 of the December 1982 edition of the Supplementary Benefit Annual Statistical Enquiry, a copy of which is in the Library. I regret that this table excludes certain recipients affected by the partial start of housing benefit for whom the information is not available.

"Social Security Statistics"

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will update tables 32·36 and 32·40 of the "Social Security Statistics" 1984 to the latest date for which information is available.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that no later information is available for table 32·36. The following is the information for table 32·40 at the end of October 1984, the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will update table 34·41 of the "Social Security Statistics" 1984 to December 1983;

(2) if he will update table 34·31 of the "Social Security Statistics" 1984 to December 1983.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that the information to update these tables is not yet available. I will let the hon. Member have a reply when it is.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many unemployed supplementary benefit claimants in receipt of an addition for mortgage interest have been on supplementary benefit for less than six months; and what was the total cost of mortgage interest payments to this group.

Mr. Whitney: Information is not available in the precise form requested. The estimated number of unemployed supplementary benefit claimants who were in receipt of an addition for mortgage interest and ground rent and had been on supplementary benefit for less than six months at December 1982, which are the latest figures available, is 74,000. The estimated annual cost of mortgage interest payments to this group is £72 million.

EC Directives

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report the details of each directive relevant to his Department from the EEC since 1979; and what action he has taken in each case.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 2 May 1985, c. 237]: the following directives for which the Department has the primary responsibility have been adopted by the council since 1979.

Number	Subjects	Action taken
80/154/ EEC	Mutual recognition of diplomas, certificates and other evidence of formal qualifications in midwifery.	Implemented by Orders in Council—No. 1983 884 of 1 July 1983 and No. 1983 921 of 1 July 1983.
80/155/EEC	Co-ordiation of national provisions relating to the taking up and pursuit of the activities of midwives.	Implemented by Orders in Council—No. 1983 884 of 1 July 1983 and No. 1983 921 of 1 July 1983.
80/1273/EEC	Amendment to Directive 80/154/EEC consequent upon the accession of Greece to the European Community	Implemented by Order in Council No. 1983 921 of 1 July 1983.
81/464/EEC	Approximation of national rules relating to the colouring matters which may be added to medicinal products.	Implemented by administrative action.
81/1057/EEC	Amendment to Directives 75/362/EEC, 77/452/EEC, 78/686/EEC and 78/1026/EEC concerning mutual recognition of diplomas, certificates and other evidence of the formal qualifications of doctors, nurses responsible for general care, dental practitioners and veterinary surgeons. This Directive provides for mutual recognition of qualifications awarded after the implementation of the relevant Directives but for which training began prior to implementation.	Implemented by Order in Council No. 1982 1076 of 30 August 1982.
82/76/EEC	Technical amendments to Directives 75/362/EEC, 75/363/EEC on the mutual recognition of qualifications of doctors and freedom to provide services and introduces provisions to regulate part-time training of specialists.	Implemented by administrative action.
83/128/EEC	Introduction of an EC pattern approval procedure into Directive 76/764/EEC, relating to the technical requirements for the approximation of Member States' laws for manufacture and performance of clinical mercury-in-glass maximum-reading thermometers.	Work on implementation in progress.
83/570/EEC	Improvements in the operation of Directives 65/65/EEC, 75/318/EEC and 79/319/EEC, which aim to reduce barriers to trade in medicinal products within the Member States.	Arrangements are in hand for implementation, mainly by administrative action and partly by subordinate legislation.
84/466/EURATOM	Basic measures for the protection from excessive ioninsing radiation of persons undergoing medical examination or treatment.	Work on implementation in progress.
84/539/EEC	Harmonisation of technical specifications for certain items of electro-medical equipment manufactured in Member States, for use in human or veterinary medicine.	Work on implementation in progress.

Drugs

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply of 4 April, Official Report, column 768. what were the names of the drugs in respect of which manufacturers gave the top 10 highest discounts in 1983; what was the cost of prescribing those drugs to the National Health Service per dispensing doctor and per ordinary general practitioner in 1983; and what was the cost in the last year before discounts were introduced.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 16 May 1985, c. 218]: We do not have the information requested on the discounts of individual drugs.

Family Practitioner Committees

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what financial and other assistance is given to general practitioners and family practitioner committees to enable general practitioners to improve their facilities and purchase or construct health centres; in whom the ownership of such health centres is vested; to whom the capital gains of such centres accrue; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 16 May 1985, c. 221]: Under the improvement grant scheme doctors may receive a grant of one third of the cost to them of approved work aimed at the significant improvement of existing premises. In November 1983 an enhanced improvement grant scheme of three years duration was introduced in inner cities under which a grant may be given of 60 per cent. of the cost up to a maximum to doctors of the approved work.

General practitioners who purchase practice premises receive the equivalent of current market rent for the use of their premises. Those who are willing to invest in new purpose-built premises or their equivalent may receive payments under the cost rent scheme which in most cases will cover the interest on the capital borrowed for the project and provide a return on the capital invested. Capital gains accrue to the owner of the premises.

District health authorities also provide practice accommodation for some general practitioners in health centres which the health authorities own and maintain.

Doctors

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the maximum fixed expenses for which general practitioners are eligible under section 63 of the National Health Service Act 1977; and if he will list the same.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 16 May 1985, c. 215]: There are no maxima for individuals, but the total is cash limited.

SCOTLAND

Water Rates

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average water rate levied in each water board region and in the United Kingdom as a whole; and by how much those rates have increased in real terms since 1979.

Mr. Ancram: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

School Meals

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the average price of school meals in primary and secondary schools in each local education authority and in Scotland as a whole at the latest date for which information is available.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The amounts charged for fixed price set meals at the time of the school meals census in January 1984 are shown in the table. A number of schools also provide cafeteria-style self-service meals, the cost of the meal varying according to choice of items. Education authorities' estimates of the average amount spent per pupil on such meals range from 25p to 64p.

Education Authority	Fixed Price Meal Pence
Borders	44
Central	45
Dumfries and Galloway	50
Fife	48
Grampian*	55
Highland	50
Lothian	45
Strathclyde	53
Tayside*	50
Orkney	50
Shetland	45
Western Isles	60

The average of the figures in the column above is 49·6p.

*Pupils in primary classes in Grampian and Tayside were charged 45p and Grampian region pupils at special schools were charged 23p for set meals.

Rates

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current average rate poundage for industrial and commercial premises in Scotland.

Mr. Ancram: The estimated average rate poundage in 1985-86 for industrial and commercial properties in Scotland is 65·5.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is the average increase in the rate poundage in 1985-86 as compared with 1984-85 in each district and region in Scotland for (a) domestic ratepayers, (b) commercial ratepayers and (c) industrial ratepayers; and if he will publish the information in the form of a table;

(2) what is the average factor by which valuations have risen in the case of (a) owner-occupied property and (b) council houses and other houses in the public sector;

(3) what is the average rates bill in Scotland in 1985-86 of (a) owners of domestic properties and (b) council house tenants, and other houses in the public sector; and if he will publish a table giving the information, local authority by local authority;

(4) what is the average level of rates in 1985-86 for (a) owner-occupied properties and (b) houses in the public sector in Scotland.

Mr. Ancram [pursuant to his answer, 16 May 1985, c. 229]: I shall make this information available as soon as possible.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the nature and scope of the evidence on rentals paid in the domestic sector on which the recent valuation was based.

Mr. Ancram [pursuant to his answer, 16 May 1985, c. 229]: This is a matter for the individual local assessors, upon whom the task of assembling such evidence is laid by statute, and who have to defend their valuations on appeal by reference to it.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the reasons for the differential increase in rateable values as between (a) small commercial ratepayers and (b) large commercial concerns, which have resulted from the recent revaluation.

Mr. Ancram [pursuant to his answer, 16 May 1985, c. 229]: I do not have any basis for trying to comment comprehensively on the differing trends which may have affected different sub-classes of ratepayers in the recent revaluation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average multiplier in Scotland; what are the upper and lower ends of the multiplier factor; and if he will publish a table showing any variations as between regions and districts.

Mr. Ancram [pursuant to his answer, 16 May 1985, c. 229]: Over all property in Scotland, the 1985 revaluation has led to an average multiplier of 2·3. There will, however, be a very wide range of multipliers applying to individual properties. In theory these could range from zero where a property has dropped out of valuation altogether to infinity where a previously exempt property has become rateable. Information on multipliers on the detailed local basis requested is not held centrally, but my hon. Friend may wish to write to the individual regional assessors to see what figures they can provide.

DEFENCE

Royal Marines Detachment

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Defence which of Her Majesty's ships now carry a Royal Marines detachment.

Mr. Lee: Royal Marines detachments are normally carried in the royal yacht Britannia, HMS Endurance, the assault ships Fearless and Intrepid, the Falkland Islands patrol vessels and some frigates. They are also deployed in other vessels from time to time to meet specific operational tasks.

United States Aircraft

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether figures 9 and 10 of annex A to the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1985", Cmnd. 9430-I, include United States aircraft assigned to co-locating operating bases in Europe; and how many aircraft are so assigned.

Mr. Lee: Figures 9 and 10 show in-place equipment only. Some 1,750 fixed wing combat aircraft presently based in the United States and Canada are allocated to the reinforcement of Europe, although not necessarily just to the areas covered in figures 9 and 10.

Reserve Forces

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence what assumptions were made concerning available reserves for the West German, the Netherlands, Belgian and British armies and category 2 and 3 divisions of Warsaw Pact nations when drawing up figures 9 and 10 of annex A in the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1985", Cmnd. 9430-I.

Mr. Lee: The manpower statistics given in figure 9 contain no reserves for either NATO or Warsaw pact armies. Figure 10 shows divisions which would be augmented by reserves on mobilisation. This applies to most of the NATO and Warsaw pact divisions, including those of the Warsaw pact deemed as category 2 or 3.

Spain (Military Aircraft)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to the number of fixed wing military aircraft possessed by Spain.

Mr. Lee: It is not our practice to comment on the detailed military capabilities of our allies.

NATO (Aircraft)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to the total number of (a) North Atlantic Treaty Organisation and (b) Warsaw pact land-based and maritime aircraft based in the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation area.

Mr. Lee: The total number of fixed wing combat aircraft both land and sea based in or facing NATO Europe or the NATO sea areas is as follows:

	Number
NATO	4,900
Warsaw pact	8,100

Additionally, there are some 1,750 NATO combat aircraft presently based in the United States and Canada.

NATO-Warsaw Pact Forces

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence why the standard graphic representation used to depict the balance of North Atlantic Treaty Organisation-Warsaw pact forces in figure 11 of annex A of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1985", Cmnd. 9430-I, was not used also when representing the forces of France and Spain.

Mr. Lee: In figure 11 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1985", French and Spanish naval forces are depicted in numerical, rather than representational, form primarily because of limitations of space; but also in order to distinguish France and Spain from other NATO countries since they do not participate in NATO's integrated military structure.

US Forces and Facilities

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now publish a comprehensive list of those United States forces and facilities in the United Kingdom and on United Kingdom territories overseas which are not formerly committed to a NATO command.

Mr. Lee: With minor exceptions, such as light transport and search and rescue units, all United States forces in the United Kingdom are here in support of NATO. Facilities as such are not normally committed to NATO. On United Kingdom territories overseas, only those United States facilities on Bermuda are regularly used by US forces in their NATO role.

NATO (Ministerial Meetings)

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will in future make it his practice to make a statement to the House on his return from ministerial level meetings on the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.

Mr. Lee: No. Details of the discussions which take place at ministerial level meetings of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation are contained in the communiqués issued after each meeting, copies of which will be placed in the Library.

Military Personnel

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many military personnel, by service, have been removed from nuclear-related tasks because of their psychological problems, or alcohol-related problems, or their use of non-prescribed drugs, in the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Lee: Statistics on the number of service personnel removed from nuclear related tasks, for whatever reasons, are not centrally recorded and could not be provided without disproportionate effort.

There are, of course, comprehensive physical and procedural safeguards to prevent any form of unauthorised action by an individual in relation to nuclear weapons for whatever reason.

European Fighter Aircraft

Sir Patrick Wall asked the Secretary of State for Defence what progress was made over the development of the European fighter aircraft during his talks on 15 May with his European colleagues.

Mr. Lee: My right hon. Friend attended the meeting in Rome yesterday evening and will reply shortly.

RN Ships (Plastic Armour)

Sir Patrick Wall asked the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to fit plastic armour over vital spaces in Her Majesty's ships.

Mr. Lee: Means of protecting Her Majesty's ships from projectiles, including the possible use of ceramic ("plastic") armour, are kept under continuous review.

Strengthened steel is used in certain cases to give protection to vital spaces but currently there are no plans to fit ceramic armour.

RAF Molesworth

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate of the cost per week of the security operation at Molesworth cruise missile base.

Mr. Lee: This task, which varies from week to week according to the level of demonstrator activity, is carried out as part of the Ministry of Defence's continuing role in respect of the security and administration of defence installations, and is not costed separately. Thus, the information required could be extracted only at disproportionate cost.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to the countries which have a chemical warfare capacity.

Mr. Lee: The technology involved in producing most chemical weapons is not very advanced and any industrialised nation could probably develop such weapons if it so desired.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence by what method his Department estimates the Russian chemical stockpile to include over 300,000 tonnes of nerve gas.

Mr. Lee: Careful assessment of all information available.

Trident Missile

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence to what extent the efficiency and operational effectiveness of the Trident II system will be influenced by the arrangements for through-life logistic support to be provided by the United States of America.

Mr. Lee: The United States of America will provide the United Kingdom Trident II force with continuing spares, supply and maintenance support on a similar basis to that which applies to our current Polaris force. Furthermore, as a result of the Kings Bay decision, the United Kingdom will be able to make substantial savings in capital and running costs by processing its missiles in the United States of America. Our access to the United States own large-scale logistics support system, with all the associated benefits which arise from the very high priority accorded by the United States to its strategic nuclear systems, will allow us to take advantage of developments based on the United States experience of operating its own much larger Trident II force, and will contribute to the efficiency and operational effectiveness of our Trident II force.

Soviet Defence Expenditure

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is Her Majesty's Government's latest estimate of Soviet defence expenditure; and what proportion of this it estimates is spent on (a) defensive and (b) offensive systems.

Mr. Lee: Our most recent estimate for Soviet defence expenditure is 96 billion to 103 billion roubles in 1983 at current prices. Since many systems may be used in a defensive or offensive role, subdivision of the estimates on this basis would not be meaningful.

Animals (Experiments)

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many animal experiments were carried out at the Porton Down chemical defence establishment in 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984.

Mr. Lee: The number of experiments subject to the Cruelty to Animals Act 1876 in each year is as follows:

	Number
1980	17,800
1981	17,200
1982	13,400
1983	9,500
1984	10,900

The increase from 9,500 experiments in 1983 to 10,900 experiments in 1984 reflects the need to ensure that effective protection and treatment remain available to our forces to meet continuing developments in the threat posed by the Soviet Union's chemical warfare capability.

Exercise Brave Defender

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence, how many United States service men will be involved in the Brave Defender exercise.

Mr. Lee: It is currently planned that about 1,000 United States service men will take part in the exercise.

Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence what contributions were made by the British delegation to the preparatory committee meeting held in April for the non-proliferation treaty third review conference; and if he will make a statement on the outcome of this meeting.

Mr. Luce: I have been asked to reply.

At the recent meeting of the preparatory commitee for the non-proliferation treaty review conference, the British delegation played a constructive role in contributing to the conclusion described in my reply to the hon. Member for Meironydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Thomas) on 8 May, at column 429.

Infant Mortality (BAOR)

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will list the infant mortality rate for families of men serving with the British Army of the Rhine.

Mr. John Lee [pursuant to his reply, 2 May 1985, c. 231-232]: The figures should be shown as per thousand and not per cent. as stated.

Written Answers to Questions

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Land Registration and Law of Property Bill

Mr. Evennett asked the Attorney-General whether Her Majesty's Government intend to introduce a further Bill in place of the Land Registration and Law of Property Bill 1984-85; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Government are awaiting the report of the Law Commission on overriding interests, rectification and indemnity before introducing further legislation.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Entry Clearance

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of decisions to allow or refuse entry under the primary purpose rule for each quarter since the rules were changed in 1983.

Mr. Waddington: Information is available only for the Indian subcontinent and is given in the table.

Applications from husbands and fiances for entry clearance for leave to enter the United kingdom decided under the 1983 immigration rules.*

	Indian subcontinent	Number of persons
1983
	1st quarter	410
	2nd quarter	380
	3rd quarter	500
	4th quarter	680
1984
	1st quarter	680
	2nd quarter	610
	3rd quarter	630
	4th quarter	540

*Applications granted initially or on appeal or refused initially.

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what percentage of all the decisions to allow or refuse entry clearance were based, either wholly or partly, on the primary purpose rule, in the second, third and fourth quarters of 1984;

(2) what percentage of all the refusals of entry clearance were based, either wholly or partly, on the primary purpose rule in the second, third and fourth quarters of 1984.

Mr. Waddington: The information requested is available only for the Indian subcontinent. Applications for entry clearance from husbands and fiances refused solely or partly because of the primary purpose rule accounted for about 40 per cent. of all applications decided, and about 80 to 90 per cent. of all applications refused in each of the last three-quarters of 1984.

Public Events (Policing)

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to the numbers of police estimated to have been in attendance at, and the number of arrests made in connection with, each of the public events listed in (a) appendix 10 to the report of the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis for 1982, (b) appendix 3(ii) of the Commissioner's report for 1983 and (c) appendix 11 to the Commissioner's report for 1981.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Information regarding the number of police officers deployed at each of these events is given in the appendices referred to. I understand from the commissioner that information regarding arrests in 1981 and 1982 is not readily available and can only be obtained at disproportionate cost. The information in respect of 1983 is as follows:

Date	Subject	Arrests
22 January	Demonstrations on 'G' district following the incident involving Colin Roach	22
22 March	State visit of the President of Zambia	Nil
17 April	London marathon	Nil

22 October	CND march and rally	Nil
12 November	Demonstration by the British Union for Abolition of Vivisection	24
31 December	New Year's eve festivities	32

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to (i) the public events which took place between 1 January 1984 and 25 February 1985 in the Metropolitan police district which required the attendance of more than 1,000 officers and (ii) the number of officers in attendance; the number of members of the public estimated by the police to have been in attendance; and the number of arrests made by the police in connection with each event, respectively.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the commissioner that the public order events requiring the attendance of more than 1,000 officers in the period specified were as follows

Date	Subject	Number of police	Number of participants (where appropriate)	Arrests
29 March 1984	NALGO—TUC Democracy day	1,485	9,000	34

Animals (Research)

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is yet in a position to publish the result of his consultations on his White Paper on the use of animals in research; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I would refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, North (Mr. Gale) on 15 May at column 126.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many civil servants in his Department and at what grades are currently engaged on work associated with the abolition of the Greater London council and the metropolitan county councils; and what is the total cost.

Mr. Brittan: At present one full-time principal, and the time of other staff, amounting to about eight posts in all. On the basis of the Treasury's "Ready Reckoner of Staff Costs" the total annual rate would be about £270,000.

Computerised Data Processing

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's annual budget for computerised data processing, including hardware, software, and out of house services; and how many people in his Department are employed in carrying out computerised data processing work.

Mr. Brittan: The information requested is not immediately available. I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Member's Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to reply to the letter sent to him on 5 March by the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton, with regard to restrictions on access to Downing Street.

Mr. Brittan: I did so today.

Exercise Brave Defender

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now list those police forces which have indicated that they will participate in Exercise Brave Defender.

Mr. Giles Shaw: So far, chief officers of the following police forces in England and Wales have indicated an intention to participate in Exercise Brave Defender:

Bedfordshire police
Cambridgeshire constabulary
City of London police
Cleveland constabulary
Derbyshire constabulary
Essex police
Hampshire constabulary
Hertfordshire constabulary
Humberside police
Leicestershire constabulary
Metropolitan police
Norfolk constabulary
Northamptonshire police
Northumbria police
North Yorkshire police
Nottinghamshire constabulary
South Yorkshire police
Staffordshire police
Suffolk constabulary
Surrey constabulary
Sussex police
Warwickshire constabulary

West Mercia constabulary
West Midlands police
West Yorkshire Metropolitan police

It is expected that most of the remaining police forces will also participate, although final decisions have not yet been taken.

Tamil Community

Mr. Maples asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy towards the return of Sri Lankan Tamils from the United Kingdom to Sri Lanka; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brittan: Since the outbreak of widespread communal violence in Sri Lanka in July 1983, we have kept the situation there under close review in considering applications for leave to enter or remain in this country from Sri Lankan Tamils who have expressed a fear of return to Sri Lanka. Since April 1984 no Sri Lankan Tamil who has expressed such a fear has been removed or deported to Sri Lanka against his will. As a result there are now some 900 Sri Lankan Tamils in this country who do not qualify to remain here but whose departure has not been enforced.

While the situation in Sri Lanka continues to cause concern, there is no reason to believe that Tamils returning to Sri Lanka face persecution, and few Sri Lankan Tamils are likely to qualify for refugee status in this country. A large proportion of the Tamil community in Sri Lanka has been relatively unaffected by inter-communal violence, and I do not consider that the situation is such as to justify a general policy of granting leave to enter or remain on an exceptional basis to all Tamils who express a fear to return there.

I have therefore decided that any case in which a Sri Lankan Tamil fails to qualify for leave to enter or remain under the immigration rules but expresses a fear of returning to Sri Lanka should be considered on its merits, in the light of all the circumstances of the case. Such a person will be granted leave to remain on an exceptional basis (for 12 months in the first instance) only if there is reason to believe that he would suffer severe hardship if he returned to Sri Lanka. If he is unable to satisfy this test, he will be returned to Sri Lanka. This policy will be applied immediately to new and recent arrivals.

Those Sri Lankan Tamils who have been here for more than a month without leave to enter or remain, but whose departure has not been enforced will be granted leave to remain exceptionally for six months. Their cases will then be reviewed on the basis outlined above. Normal appeal rights will apply.

The Government will continue to urge on all concerned the need for a political settlement of the difficulties between the communities in Sri Lanka.

PRIME MINISTER

Hospital Management

Mr. Dobson asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the discussions which have taken place between Her Majesty's Government and representatives of an American corporation concerning the possibility of setting up a pilot scheme whereby the management of a National Health Service hospital would be contracted out.

The Prime Minister: The Government favour greater collaboration between the National Health Service and the independent health sector, and many discussions have taken place on the topic, at both ministerial and official levels with private sector companies. We have no plans at present for a centrally promoted scheme of the type described, but if any health authority is satisfied that such an arrangement is in the interests of its NHS patients, the Government will look sympathetically at the proposals.

Nurses (Pay Review)

Mr. Meacher asked the Prime Minister when she now expects to publish the report of the pay review body for nurses, midwives, health visitors and professions allied to medicine.

The Prime Minister: In due course.

Public Expenditure

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Prime Minister if she will give an up-to-date statement of the expenditure per head for each person in Scotland, in England, and Wales; what is the per capita expenditure for each person resident in Scotland for every £100 spent on each person resident in England; and if she will publish a table giving the figures for each level of public spending.

The Prime Minister: In response to a question from my hon. Friend, the Member for Aberdeen, South (Mr. Malone) a full analysis of identifiable public expenditure in England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland was published in the Official Report on 22 February 1985 at columns 608-18. This included per capita comparisons and details of spending programmes. The latest available figures relate to 1983-84, and indicate that per capita expenditure in Scotland was £126 for every £100 in England.

Voluntary Organisations (Grants)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Prime Minister if she will list the total amounts given by Government Departments in grants to voluntary organisations during the financial year 1984-85.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave on 4 April to my hon. Friends the Members for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey) and Ruislip-Northwood (Mr. Wilkinson) at columns 715-16. I regret that the figures for 1984-85 will not be available for some months.

Bradford Fire (Appeal Fund)

Mr. Lawler asked the Prime Minister how the Government contribution to the Lord Mayor of Bradford's appeal fund will be financed.

The Prime Minister: A supplementary estimate on the Central Environmental Services Vote (class VIII, vote 2) will be presented in due course to cover the urgent expenditure on this new service. Pending parliamentary approval of this supplementary estimate, the Government's contribution of £¼ million to the Lord Mayor of Bradford's appeal fund will be met by a repayable advance from the Contingencies Fund. The cash limit is being increased by £250,000 from £143,025,000 to £143,275,000; this sum will be charged to the Reserve and therefore does not add to the planning total of public expenditure.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Ford Motor Company Ltd. (Report)

Mr. Park asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has yet received a report from the Director of Fair Trading arising from the findings of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the Ford Motor Company Limited; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: I shall make a statement on the position when discussions with Ford are concluded.

Child Buggy Pushchairs

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Welwyn Hatfield, Official Report, 15 April, column 19, if he will give details of the European Economic Community Commission's request for the introduction of new regulations on the safety of child buggy pushchairs to be suspended; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: The Commission of the European Communities notified the Government in a letter dated 20 March 1985 that it considered the proposed Pushchairs (Safety) Regulations would hamper the free movement of goods between member states in breach of article 30 of the Treaty of Rome. The Government have responded to the Commission that the proposed regulations are needed on grounds of public health and safety, and are thus fully warranted under article 36 of the treaty. The Commission has been asked to reconsider its position.

There is a further issue. The Commission had earlier notified member states of its intention to propose a directive relating to the control of chemical substances, dangerous to health, where these substances are present in objects manifestly intended for children. The Commission considers that pushchairs will be covered by the proposal and that article 9 of Directive 83/189/EEC suspends our proposed regulations until 30 October 1985.

As the Government believe the proposal is only marginal to the subject of pushchairs, and as any agreed directive may turn out to be compatible with the chemical hazards part of the new pushchairs regulations, the Commission has been asked to reflect again on its position.

South Africa

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the total cost of (a) direct and (b) indirect investment in (i) South Africa and (ii) Namibia by Britain in each year from 1979; and what was the rate of return on British investment in each of those years for (1) South Africa, (2) Namibia and (3) the rest of the world.

Mr. Channon: The value of United Kingdom outward direct investment in South Africa from 1979 to 1983 was published today in British business.

Information relating to indirect investment in South Africa and Namibia and rates of return on British investment in South Africa, Namibia and the rest of the world are not available.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how many (a) USA, (b) EEC, and (c) other foreign private sector enterprises were involved in manufacturing in the United Kingdom in (i) 1984, (ii) 1974 and (iii) 1964, respectively;

(2) what information he has as to the gross output of (a) United States, (b) European Economic Community and (c) other foreign private sector manufacturing companies in the United Kingdom in (i) 1964, (ii) 1974 and (iii) 1984, respectively;

(3) what information he has as to the capital expenditure by (a) the United States, (b) the European Economic Community and (c) other foreign and private sector manufacturing enterprises in the United Kingdom in (i) 1964, (ii) 1974 and (iii) 1984, respectively;

(4) how many people were employed by (a) United States, (b) European Economic Community and (c) other foreign and private sector manufacturing enterprises in the United Kingdom in (i) 1964, (ii) 1974 and (iii) 1984, respectively.

Mr. Butcher: The information sought is not available for the years specified. Available figures are shown in the following table:

Activity in the United Kingdom in 1963, 1973, 1981 of foreign private sector enterprises classified to manufacturing

South Africa (EC Code of Conduct)

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many of the companies submitting full reports for the period ending June 1984 on the European Economic Community code of conduct, for companies with dealings with South Africa used, in responding to section 3 of the code, the supplementary living level figures rather than the minimum living level plus 50 per cent.; and if Her Majesty's Government ask any further questions of such companies.

Mr. Channon: I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many of the companies submitting full reports for the period ending June 1984 used, in responding to section 3 of the code, the supplementary living level or minimum living level plus 50 per cent. for families of size five in areas where the average family size is shown in the supplementary living level minimum living level studies to be higher; and if Her Majesty's Government ask any further questions of such companies.

Mr. Channon: I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many of the companies submitting full reports for the period ending June 1984, in responding to section 3 of the code, compare their minimum wage levels with poverty levels other than the household subsistence level/household effective level or supplementary living level/minimum living level for families of five or six people; and if Her Majesty's Government ask any further questions of such companies.

Mr. Channon: I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many companies submitting full reports for the period ending June 1984 on the European code of conduct for companies with dealings with South Africa quote, in responding to section 3 of the code, separate levels for men and women and compare the two with different poverty levels; and if Her Majesty's Government ask any further questions of such companies.

Mr. Channon: I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many of the companies submitting full reports for the period ending June 1984 do not give figures for their total work force of all races as called for in the reporting format; and if Her Majesty's Government ask any further questions of such companies.

Mr. Channon: I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many of the companies submitting full reports for the period ending June 1984 make clear in the annual reports that their response to the code is available from the company; and what procedure is followed with those that do not.

Mr. Channon: I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Pirate Radio Stations

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce legislation to make it an offence to advertise the existence of a pirate radio station; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Section 5(3)(f) of the Marine & Broadcasting Offences Act 1967 already makes it an offence to publish details or promote the activities of unauthorised broadcasting stations operating on the high seas. I therefore assume that my hon. Friend refers to unlicensed broadcasting stations operating in the United Kingdom.

As a general principle it is preferable where possible, both on ground of clarity in establishing the nature of an offence and of fairness, to have enforce-powers against prime movers in the commission of an offence rather than those who give indirect assistance. Under the Wireless Telegraphy Act 1940 we have powers to take action against the unlicensed use of radio. These powers were significantly strengthened in the Telecommunications Act 1984, particularly with the introduction of the power to seize and detain, for the purpose of legal proceedings, the apparatus used by the unlicensed stations. Using these powers, we have considerably improved the effectiveness of our action aimed at removing this nuisance. I do not therefore propose to seek further powers at the moment.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many letters he has received from the general public complaining about pirate radio broadcasting; and what is the nature of the replies which he has sent.

Mr. Butcher: I have received numerous letters in the past, though the number has greatly diminished recently as the improved enforcement powers, which we took in the Telecommunications Act 1984, have proved themselves. Some have been written by people complaining that the transmissions of unlicensed broadcasting stations were interfering with their reception of programmes on authorised stations. Some have complained that unlicensed broadcasting stations offer unfair competition to authorised stations and do not pay fees for broadcast of records and news programmes.

I have replied that I am determined to take effective action to stop the unauthorised use of radio which causes interference, annoyance and sometimes danger, to authorised radio users. To illustrate this determination I have pointed to our record of activity. Since the start of 1985 the Department's Radio Investigation Service has taken action on 75 occasions against 41 unlicensed broadcasting stations. In the same period, 37 people have been prosecuted and convicted for their involvement in the operation of unlicenced stations.

Manufacturing Trade (Deficits)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what were the deficits in manufacturing trade with Germany and Japan, respectively, at the most recent annual period for which figures are available; and what were the comparable deficits or surpluses in the same period five and 10 years previously.

Mr. Channon: Trade with individual countries is available only on the Overseas Trade Statistics basis with imports, but not exports, valued inclusive of insurance and freight charges. The crude balance calculated on this basis are in the table.

*United Kingdom Crude Balance of Trade in Manufactures
£ Million Overseas Trade Statistics Basis

12 Months ending:	F R Germany	Japan

Bosporus Bridge

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what reply he has received from the Japanese Government about the complaints on unfair subsidising of the Turkish bridge project.

Mr. Channon: I will reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Japan (Trade Restrictions)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the level or range of tariffs imposed on British exports to Japan and on Japanese exports to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Channon: When the Tokyo Round tariff reductions are completed (in 1986-87), the weighted average of tariff rates on imports into the European Community of industrial products will be 4·7 per cent. The comparable figure for Japan will be 2·8 per cent.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what quota or voluntary restraint restrictions are placed by the United Kingdom through the European Economic Community on Japanese exports to the United Kingdom; and what comparable restrictions are placed on United Kingdom exports to Japan.

Mr. Channon: Japan has agreed with the European Commission to restrain her exports of video tape recorders and certain other industrial products. There is no voluntary restraint on United Kingdom or EC exports to Japan: we are striving to increase these. Japan has global quotas in several sectors, including for example, quotas on footwear and leather, which affect United Kingdom industry.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what evidence he has of tariff, non-tariff or other restrictions imposed by the Japanese authorites on the export of British goods to Japan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: I will reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

TRANSPORT

Licences

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report all the different types of licences operated or granted by his Department and the year in which they first came into operation.

Mr. Ridley: My Department operates or grants the following licences, permits and certificates to enable individuals or businesses to undertake particular activities. Road service licensing is to be abolished under the Transport Bill, against which the hon. Gentleman voted.

Licence etc	First Year of Operation (or date of current legislation)

In addition, the Department operates for safety reasons a number of systems for approving equipment and works.

The Civil Aviation Authority has statutory responsibility under the Civil Aviation Act 1982 for a wide range of licences in connection with aviation matters.

Roads (Reconstruction)

Mr. Waller asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the location and classification of the lengths of road which make up the 220 mile backlog of all-purpose trunk roads in need of reconstruction, where such lengths exceed half a mile.

Mrs. Chalker: The information is as follows:

Road Number	Location	County/London borough
A64	Malton	North Yorkshire
A19	Crathorne diversion	North Yorkshire
A63	Elloughton	Humberside
A646	Hebden	West Yorkshire

Trunk Roads (Review)

Mr. Waller asked the Secretary of State for Transport when the results of his review of the trunk road programme will be published.

Mrs. Chalker: I hope to announce the outcome of the review shortly.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. Maude asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total cost of collecting and administering vehicle excise duty.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The collection of vehicle excise duty and the registration of vehicles are operated as a single integrated system and the costs of each are not easily identified. The cost of vehicle excise duty collection and vehicle registration in the United Kingdom was £88 million in the financial year 1984-85.

Mr. Maude asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many civil servants are employed in the collection and administration of vehicle excise duty.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The collection of vehicle excise duty and the registration of vehicles are operated as a single integrated system and an assignment of staff to each system cannot easily be made. The number of civil servants employed in excise duty collection and vehicle registration in the United Kingdom was 4,180 in the financial year 1984-85.

Shipping Industry

Mr. Loyden asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the fall in deadweight tonnes of the United Kingdom-owned and registered merchant fleet between May 1979 and the end of 1984.

Mr. David Mitchell: The United Kingdom-owned and registered fleet of merchant vessels of 500 gross tons and over fell by 20·5 million deadweight tonnes between May 1979 and the end of 1984.

Mr. Loyden asked the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received from (a) the General Council of British Shipping and (b) the National Union of Seamen about the future of the British maritime industry.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have had a number of meetings and exchanges of correspondence with the General Council of British Shipping and the National Union of Seamen, most of which have in one way or another borne on the future of the United Kingdom shipping industry.

Mr. Loyden asked the Secretary of State for Transport what policy initiative he plans in order to promote an expansion of the share of the United Kingdom's coastal trade taken by merchant ships registered in the United Kingdom.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Government plan no such policy initiative. Our efficient coastal fleet is quite capable of defending its substantial share of this trade without intervention by the Government. Where we can—and will—help this fleet is by securing access to the closed coastal trades of our Community partners.

Engineering Works (Rayleigh Weir)

Sir Bernard Braine asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether in view of the continuing traffic congestion and its projected increase at the A127 and A129 road junction at Rayleigh Weir, Essex, he will consider advancing the start of the proposed engineering works before 1988.

Mrs. Chalker: After the current public consultations the full statutory procedures will follow. Much detailed design work will also be necessary. This makes a start of work before 1988 difficult. I am however conscious of increasing traffic congestion at the junction, and if it proves possible to advance the programme of work, this will be done.

Trunk Roads

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport what additional schemes he expects to include in the trunk road programmes which have not hitherto been justified by traffic forecasts, following his present review and his Department's revised traffic forecasts.

Mrs. Chalker: The review is not yet complete. The effect of the recently revised traffic forecasts, however, is not the only factor taken into account in deciding which schemes should be included in the national programme.

Mr. W. Rawlinson (Member's Correspondence)

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he proposes to reply to the hon. Member for Mid-Staffordshire in respect of the points raised by his constituent, Mr. W. Rawlinson of 5 Tilling Drive, Walton, Stone, Staffordshire, in his letter of 1 April 1985, in particular with regard to the pension rights of employees of the National Bus Company and its subsidiaries.

Mr. David Mitchell: Shortly.

Seat Belts

Mr. Dormand asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will include in the independent study of seat belt wearing, its implications for accidents involving pedal cyclists; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I invited Professors Durbin and Harvey to carry out an independent assessment of all the available statistical evidence on the effects of compulsory seat belt wearing. It will include the possible effects on casualty trends for all road users including cyclists and pedestrians.

Parking Restrictions

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the answer of 13 May, Official Report, column 63, what are the specific difficulties in implementing section 7 of the Road Traffic Act 1974.

Mrs. Chalker: The need to avoid new demands on public sector resources.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many civil servants in his Department and at what grades are currently engaged on work associated with the abolition of the Greater London council and the metropolitan county councils; and what is the total cost.

Mrs. Chalker: I shall reply to this question shortly.

London Regional Transport

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, pursuant to the reply of the hon. Member for Wallasey on 18 March Official Report, column 618, he will publish the basis on which the marginal estimated benefits and costs of Greater London council planned subsidy levels were computed.

Mrs. Chalker: The figures are contained in table 7A of the 3-year plan produced by the former London transport executive and approved by the Greater London council on 26 June 1984. This showed that, at the higher level of subsidy planned by the GLC, a marginal increase of £10 million in financial support would have produced £1·4 million in additional external benefits.

Traffic Management Systems (London)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will detail the circumstances under which he will use his reserve powers to take control of traffic management systems in London.

Mrs. Chalker [pursuant to the reply, 16 May 1985, c. 250]: The absence of satisfactory arrangements by boroughs.

A38 (Safety Fencing)

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish the results of his review into the criteria relating to the provision of safety fencing on the A38 between Exeter and Plymouth.

Mrs. Chalker [pursuant to the reply, 16 May 1985, c. 251]: The review is a national one and I shall make the results publicly available as soon as possible after its completion in about one year's time. However, the Department hopes to publish interim guidance updating existing criteria shortly.

Cars (Lead-free Petrol)

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received about the timetable for equipping new cars with the capacity to run on lead-free petrol.

Mrs. Chalker [pursuant to the reply, 13 May 1985, c. 62.]: The views of many interested organisations have been taken into account in determining the line the UK delegation should take in Community discussions about vehicle emissions and lead in petrol.

ENERGY

Oil and Gas (Enterprise) Act 1982

Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the volume and value of gas supplied by gas producers to customers by making use of the common carrier provisions of the Oil and Gas (Enterprise) Act 1982 in each year since the Act came into force.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: To date no directions have been issued under the relevant sections of the Oil and Gas (Enterprise) Act 1982. Arrangements for carriage of third party gas in BGC pipelines, achieved through commercial negotiations, are a matter for the BGC and the party concerned.

Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy what publications, and in what numbers, the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority has produced for educational distribution on the non-proliferation treaty in preparation for the non-proliferation treaty third review conference in September of the current year.

Mr. Goodlad: The United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority has produced no such publications.

Atomic Energy Authority Constabulary

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many special constables were employed by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority in each year since 1976.

Mr. Goodlad: The strength of the AEA constabulary for each year since 1976 is as follows:

	Numbers
1976	435
1977	469
1978	512
1979	516
1980	589
1981	591
1982	513
1983	635
1984	646
1985	*654

* at 1 April 1985

People's Republic of China

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give information as to the trade in nuclear materials and technology between the People's Republic of China and agencies responsible to or sponsored by his Department since 1979.

Mr. Goodlad: The United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority and the radiochemical centre (up to 1982) are the only organisations sponsored by my Department which have traded with the People's Republic of China since 1979. The trade has comprised the supply of very small quantities of radioisotopes used in industrial analysis and academic research.

Namibia

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether any nuclear material deriving from Namibia or South Africa has been reprocessed on the Magnox reprocessing line at Sellafield.

Mr. Goodlad: Some of the spent Magnox nuclear fuel reprocessed at Sellafield was produced from Namibian origin uranium.

Combined Heat and Power

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy what research his Department has conducted into combined heat and power technology.

Mr. David Hunt: The Government have been examining the feasibility and economic case for combined heat and power and district heating in the United Kingdom and has published the following reports.

Energy Paper No. 20 — District heating combined with electricity generation in the United Kingdom—1977

Energy Paper No. 35—Combined Heat and electrical power generation in the United Kingdom—1979

Energy Paper No. 53—Combined Heat and Power District Heating Feasibility Programme: Stage 1—1984

On 5 April 1984 my right hon. Friend announced that the Government were ready to encourage the formation of local consortia. As my right hon. Friend announced on 25 January 1985, the Government are prepared to offer grant assistance of up to £250,000 each to Belfast, Edinburgh and Leicester consortia to undertake further studies into CHP provided that the major participation in the development of such schemes comes from the private sector.

WALES

CEGB (Chairman)

2. Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales when he next expects to meet the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I have no immediate plans for a meeting.

Labour Statistics

10. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total number of unemployed in the Rhymney valley, Mid-Glamorgan and Wales at the latest available date for which information is available.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: On 11 April 1985, the numbers of unemployed claimants were 7,681, 35,560 and 180,031 respectively.

Rhondda Valley

15. Mr. Rogers asked the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to reduce unemployment in the Rhondda Valley.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The Government's economic strategy is designed to attack the underlying causes of unemployment in the economy as a whole and therefore in the Rhondda Valley, as elsewhere in Wales.

Licences

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list in the Official Report all the different types of licences operated or granted by his Department and the year in which they first came into operation.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: This information could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Welsh Language Act

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will clarify the objectives of the discussion his Department agreed to hold with the ad hoc committee working on a new Welsh Language Act; and if it remains his policy to consider the possibility of introducing legislation relating to the Welsh language.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I met representatives of the working party in April to discuss their demands for a new Welsh Language Act. I was not convinced that a valid case had been made for legislation but undertook to consider further any proposal which in my view would benefit the Welsh language.

All-Wales Strategy for Mentally Handicapped People

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether any proposals relating to the implementation of the all-Wales strategy for mentally handicapped people have been frozen by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No. In the main, proposals under the strategy are considered in the context of the comprehensive plans prepared in each of the counties and the vanguard districts. These plans are in various stages of preparation or implementation. Those for South Glamorgan, West Glamorgan and Clwyd were approved last June and that for Gwent was approved last week. Plans for the Gwynedd (non-vanguard area) and Rhondda (vanguard district) are under consideration within the Welsh Office and the remaining four plans have yet to be formally submitted to me by the relevant planning groups.

School Meals

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those local education authorities providing free school meals to children other than those covered by the statutory requirements; and what proportion of all local education authorities in Wales these represent.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: Three-quarters or six of the eight local education authorities in Wales make such provision. They are:

Clwyd
Gwent
Gwynedd
Mid Glamorgan
South Glamorgan
West Glamorgan

Labour Statistics

Mr. Rowlands asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many people there are in employment in Wales (a) in full-time employment, (b) in part-time employment and (c) in self-employment; and how these figures compare with the position in May 1979.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Comprehensive and comparable information is available only for June each year since, although most of the information is produced on a quarterly basis, in Wales that on self employment is an annual series for June. Separate information is not collected about male part-time employment.

Total employment (excluding HM Forces)

	Employees in employment 000s			Self employed 000s
	Male	All	Female part-time
June 1979	618	415	165	100
June 1984	504	397	173	142

Non-Government Bodies (Payments)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the payments made to those appointed to the various nominated bodies and non-departmental public bodies by him or any other Ministers in his Department (a) in recognition of their services and (b) towards their costs.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Details of remuneration, where appropriate, of those people appointed by me to executive bodies, advisory bodies, tribunals and health authorities in Wales and the Welsh water authority are included in "Public Bodies 1984" published by HMSO (December 1984). Information on expenses paid to appointees is not held centrally.

Tourism

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what financial assistance has been provided to support the development of tourism in Wales in each financial year since 1979; and what were the sources of such assistance.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: Support for the tourism industry comes from many sources. The Wales tourist board has spent the following amounts since 1979-80. The figures in brackets are the amounts spent on assisting specific projects under section 4 of the Development of Tourism Act 1969:

	£000s	(£000s)
1979-80	3,652	(1,696)
1980-81	4,316	(1,696)
1981-82	5,077	(1,911)
1982-83	5,562	(1,515)
1983-84	5,032	(1,209)
1984-85	6,365	(1,800)

For 1985-86 the board has been allocated £7·196 million of which £2 million is for section 4 support. Many projects that are supported by urban development grant while not specifically for tourism have incidental tourism benefits. It is not possible readily to identify the proportions of the total assistance that relates to tourism. Some local authorities have received support for their tourism schemes under the urban programme. The following commitments on such schemes have been given since 1979-80:

	£000s
1979-80	138
1980-81	144
1981-82	62
1982-83	465
1983-84	412
1984-85	63

Tourism and recreational projects can also receive assistance from the European regional development fund. Since 1979-80, the following amounts have been committed for such projects:

	£000s
1979-80	1,835
1980-81	1,075
1981-82	2,927
1982-83	1,067
1983-84	2,998
1984-85	1,774

Both the Welsh Development Agency and the Development Board for Rural Wales contribute to the development of tourism but it is not possible to identify within their budgets the amounts involved.

Details of local authority spend on tourism can be found in Summary Table 'B' of the CIPFA Leisure and Recreation Statistics for the period 1979-80 to 1984-85; copies of which are in the Library.

Departmental Grants

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what grants were made by his Department and who were the recipient organisations under each of the following Acts in 1984-85: the Development of Rural Wales Act 1976, the Education Act 1944, the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968, the Historic Buildings and Ancient Monuments Act 1983, the Housing Act 1977, the National Health Services Act 1977, the Road Traffic Act 1972 and the Town and Country Planning Act 1972.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I will write to the hon. Gentleman shortly, and place a copy of my reply in the Library.

Computerised Data Processing

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is his Department's annual budget for computerised data processing, including hardware, software and out of house services; and how many staff of his Department are employed in carrying out computerised data processing work.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: £1,316,000 is included in the 1985-86 Supply Estimates for current and capital computer expenditure. A total of 17 staff are assigned full-time to computing work within my Department. In addition, some 200 staff use computing equipment from time to time in the course of their duties.

Legionnaire's Disease

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many people in Wales are known by his Department or the communicable diseases surveillance centre to have died from legionnaire's disease in the last year.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: There was one death registered in Wales during 1984 for which the underlying cause of death was legionnaire's disease.

Water Rates

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average water rate levied in (i) the Welsh water authority area and, (ii) Wales as a whole; and by how much those rates have increased in real terms since 1979.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer provided by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, the Member for Sutton and Cheam (Mr. Macfarlane) on 17 May 1985 at columns 249-50. The information provided there was in respect of the Welsh water authority's areas, but information for Wales as a whole is not readily available.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was the increase in average water rates in the area of the Welsh water authority in 1985-86 over 1984-85.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The increase in the average household water bill in the area of the Welsh water authority in 1985-86 over 1984-85 is £11·14.

A5 (Bypasses)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to receive the final report of consulting engineers into routes for bypasses around the five villages on the A5 on Anglesey; if any route has yet been finalised; if it is proposed to finalise some routes earlier than others; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: As my hon. Friend knows, we expect to receive by the end of the year the consultants' formal report on the extent of the need for bypasses of the five villages. This will include an assessment of environmental benefits as well as the likely cost effectiveness of the proposals. Final decisions on routes and decisions on priorities must await this report.

Company Headquarters

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of the leading 1,000 companies in the United Kingdom had their headquarters in Wales from 1974 to 1984.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The hon. Gentleman is presumably referring to the companies listed in the publication entitled "The Times 1,000". The addresses of the headquarters of these companies are listed in this publication which is published annually and copies of which are in the Library.

Infant Mortality

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the latest estimate of the rates of infant mortality in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The infant mortality rate in Wales in 1984 was 8·8 per 1,000 live births.

Bankruptcies

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many bankruptcies in Wales his Department has been notified of in each year since 1979.

Mr. Butcher: I have been asked to reply.

Bankruptcy cases handled by courts in Wales from 1979 to 1984 are as follows:

	Number
1979	203
1980	231
1981	306
1982	334
1983	419
1984	547

These figures are published annually in the Digest of Welsh Statistics.

SCOTLAND

Glenochil Centre

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his inquiries into visiting conditions at Glenochil centre.

Mr. Ancram: As I explained to the House on 2 May at column 486, visiting entitlements were improved in most penal establishments last year. This included both Glenochil young offenders institution and Glenochil detention centre where the existing minimum scales for visits for all inmates are one 30-minute visit on reception and two 30-minute visits every month thereafter. Both institutions operate a grade structure by which inmates can progress to two 1 hour visits per month. Extra visits are granted on request at the Governor's discretion. All visits are open.

School Meals

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those local education authorities providing free school meals to children other than those covered by the statutory requirements; and what proportion of all local education authorities in Scotland these represent.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I assume that the question refers to school meals provided under education authorities' discretionary power in section 53(3)(b) of the Education (Scotland) Act 1980. At the time of the 1984 school meals census ten out of the 12 education authorities were providing free school meals under section 53(3)(b):

Rates

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) domestic ratepayers and (b) commercial ratepayers would be in a position to benefit from the scheme announced on Tuesday 14 May; and if he will publish a table giving figures for each category, region-by-region and district-by-district.

Mr. Ancram: I refer my hon. Friend to the figures my right hon. Friend gave the House at column 219 following the statement on 14 May. These are very approximate estimates which I would hope to revise when information is available from assessors as to the number of rateable subjects with valuation multipliers greater than 3. I can make no estimate by region or district.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if Edinburgh district council will receive further funds from Her Majesty's Government if they bring their rate fund contribution down to the Secretary of State's limit.

Mr. Ancram: If Edinburgh district council revises its budget such as to bring its estimated rate fund contribution for 1985-86 down to the figure in the Housing Revenue Account Rate Fund Contribution Limits (Scotland) Order 1985, the council's gross HRA capital allocation for 1985-86 will be increased from £12·362 million to £18 million.

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the amount of rates collected in Scotland in each year from 1981-82; and if he will express the costs of both (a) lands valuation and (b) collection of rates as a percentage of the total.

Mr. Ancram [pursuant to his reply, 16 May 1985, c. 229]: The information is given in the table.

	Cash amount of rates collected in Scotland after rebates and reliefs	Cost of (a) lands valuation and (b) collection of rates as a percentage of rates collected
	£ million	(a) per cent.	(b) per cent.
1981-82	1,205	0·7	1·0
1982-83	1,373	0·6	1·0
1983-84	1,308	0·7	0·9
1984-85	*1,445	0·7	1·0
1985-86	*1,611	0·6	1·0

* Estimate.

The percentages are based on the figures used in the answer to the hon. Member's question on 26 April 1985 at column 219.

Housing Associations

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what allocations have been made available to housing associations for each of the years from 1979 to date.

Mr. Ancram: Finance for housing association projects is provided through lending by the Housing Corporation and through a smaller programme of lending by local authorities. The gross provision for the housing association movement in Scotland as a whole for each financial year since 1979-80 is set out in the following table.

Financial year	£ million
1979-80	53·9
1980-81	70·3
1981-82	92·0
1982-83	119·8
1983-84	119·7
1984-85	111·4
1985-86	109·9

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total stock of housing association houses in Scotland; and how many housing association houses have been built in each of the years of from 1979 to date.

Mr. Ancram: It is estimated that the total stock of housing association houses in Scotland at the end of 1983 numbered 35,000. The table (drawn from returns by local authorities) shows the number of newly built dwellings completed by housing associations in each year since 1979.

Year	Completions
1979	544
1980	881
1981	1,928
1982	1,167
1983	1,271
1984	2,032

Education Expenditure

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how Scotland's spending on education, expressed as a percentage of gross domestic product, compares with Western European countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

NHS (Expenditure)

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the increase in spending on the National Health Service in Scotland in (a) funds and (b) the percentage terms for 1985-86 in comparison to 1984-85, giving figures for (i) Scotland and (ii) the Lothian Health Board, respectively.

Mr. John MacKay: The latest estimate of gross expenditure on the National Health Service in Scotland in 1984-85 is £1,901 million; the gross provision made for 1985-86 is £1,998 million, an increase of 5·1 per cent.

Estimated gross recurrent expenditure by health boards in 1984-85 is £1,282 million; the financial allocation to boards for recurrent expenditure 1985-86 is £1,353 million; an increase of 5·5 per cent.

Health Boards

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the allocations for individual health boards for 1985-86, and if he will submit a table indicating the increase in real terms for each health board over 1984-85 as well as the average for the whole of Scotland in both percentage and actual terms.

Mr. John MacKay: Gross recurrent expenditure allocations to boards for the hospital and community health services in 1985-86 amounted to £1,353 million. The net cash limited allocations to individual boards for recurrent expenditure, after expected income is taken into account, are shown in column (a) following. The average increase of 5·5 per cent. in resources shown at columns (b) and (c) is intended to cover inflation costs and to meet new demands for health care.

Health Boards	(a) 1985-86 Recurrent Expenditure Allocation (Net) £,000	(b) †Increase over 1984-85 Allocations Cash £,000	(c) Per cent.

* Includes £12·8 million allocated for specific commitments.

† As adjusted for changes in the course of the year.

In addition, £36·5 million has been allocated to boards for their ordinary capital programmes in 1985-86 and a further £25 million specifically for expenditure on upgrading the NHS estate.

Political Conferences (Policing Costs)

Mr. Ewing asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will call for reports from the chief constables of the relevant regions concerning the costs of policing (a) the Liberal party conference at Inverness, (b) the Scottish Trades Union Congress at Inverness, (c) the Labour party conference at Perth, (d) the Conservative party conference at Perth, all held in 1985, and (e) the Scottish National party conference at Inverness in September 1984.

Mr. Ancram: I understand that it is not the practice of the forces concerned to maintain separate records of the costs of policing such events. The information requested is not therefore readily available and could be obtained from the forces concerned only at disproportionate cost, because it would be a time-consuming exercise to extract it from financial records.

Legionnaire's Disease

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people in Scotland are known by his Department or the communicable diseases surveillance centre to have died of legionnaire's disease in the last year.

Mr. John MacKay: The provisional number of deaths in Scotland for 1984, reported to the Registrar General, in which the underlying cause of death is Legionnaire's disease, is four. A further two deaths have been attributed to this cause by the communicable diseases (Scotland) unit, Ruchill hospital, as a result of tests carried out after the death certificates were written.

Water Rates

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the increase in average water rates in each authority area in Scotland in 1985-86 over the preceding financial year.

Mr. Ancram: Since domestic water rate poundages all decreased between 1984-85 and 1985-86 because of revaluation, I assume the hon. Member is seeking information about average domestic water rate bills. This is as follows:

Average household domestic water rate bills

Authority	1984-85 £	1985-86 £	Difference £	Difference per cent.
Borders	25·81	22·57	−3·24	−12·56

Scotland	24·32	26·24	1·92	7·90

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average water rate levied in each water board region and in the United Kingdom as a whole; and by how much those rates have increased in real terms since 1979.

Mr. Ancram [pursuant to his reply, 17 May 1985, c. 261]: Average domestic water charges in England and Wales are to be found in "The Water Industry" and domestic water rates in Scotland in "Rating Review", both published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy and available in the Library. The figures north and south of the border are not however directly comparable.

In England and Wales water charges pay for sewerage, sewage treatment and disposal, land drainage and certain environmental services as well as water supply. In Scotland, after taking account of direct charges to industrial and commercial consumers about two-thirds of the net expenditure on water supply is met from domestic water rates; the remaining one-third plus the expenditure corresponding to the expenditure on sewerage etc. contained in water charges in England and Wales is met from regional rates (general rates in the islands) assisted by rate support grant. The one-third of net water expenditure met from regional and general rates in Scotland is, broadly, for the use of water by public services, for example, the fire service, street cleansing and the like.

In Northern Ireland water expenditure is included in the calculation of the regional rate for local government services collected by the Department of the Environment.

Education (Expenditure)

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the money spent by Her Majesty's Government on Scottish education in the years 1979 to 1984 and the latest available figures for 1985-86.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Information on expenditure on education in Scotland is contained in table 15·8 of the "Commentary on the Scottish Programme" which was published in February 1985. More detailed figures for central Government expenditure on education in 1985-86 are contained in Supply Estimates, class XV.

Teachers

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what sums Her Majesty's Government has allocated for in-service training in the teaching profession for the years 1979 to 1984; and what are the latest available figures for 1985-86.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Provision for the in-service training of teachers in Scotland is included in local authorities' rate support grant relevant expenditure, but is not separately identified. In addition, my right hon. Friend has recently introduced two schemes of assistance towards the expense of teachers attending approved in-service training; specific grants available under these schemes for the financial years 1984-85 and 1985-86 amounted to £720,000 and £763,000 respectively.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to introduce job sharing in the teaching profession; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: This is a matter for education authorities, as employers.

Schools (Behaviour Problems)

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what investigations have been made into pupils' emotional and behavioural problems at school; and what has been the result of these investigations.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Recent work in this field has included the 1977 Pack report on truancy and indiscipline, the 1981 report by the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities on discipline in Scottish schools and various detailed research projects commissioned by the Scottish Education Department. It is for education authorities to take account of such investigations in determining school policies and organisation.

Defective Houses

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the booklet giving guidance to owners of defective houses purchased from local authorities will be made available to Edinburgh district council and other local authorities in Scotland very shortly; and whether a satisfactory agreement has been arrived at involving the National Housebuilding Council and the Building Societies' Association.

Mr. Ancram: I hope that the booklet of guidance will be ready for issue to all local authorities around the end of this month. On the question of agreement between the National House-Building Council and the Building Societies' Association, the warranty scheme approved by the NHBC, to which I referred in the reply which I gave my hon. Friend on 16 May, has been agreed with the BSA.

Infant Mortality

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest estimate of the rate of infant mortality in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: Provisional figures for 1984 show a rate of 10·3 per 1,000 live births.

Shipbuilding Industry

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many jobs in the shipbuilding industry have been lost since June 1979 in (a) Scotland, (b) Strathclyde region and, (c) Greenock travel-to-work area.

Mr. Allan Stewart, [pursuant to his reply, 13 May 1985, c. 56]: The estimated net decreases in employment in the shipbuilding and marine engineering industry in manufacturing units with 11 or more employees between 1979 and 1984 were 12,000 in Scotland and 9,000 in Strathclyde region; estimates for the Greenock travel-to-work area are subject to disclosure restriction. The estimates are based on the regional data system.

EMPLOYMENT

Earnings

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Employment what have been the real increases in earnings in the public sector in each of the past three years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Estimates of the percentage increase in average gross earnings of full-time employees in the public sector, deflated by the increase in the retail prices index, are as follows.

Changes in real average gross weekly earnings of full-time adult employees working a full week

	Percentage
April 1981 to April 1982	*−1·0
April 1982 to April 1983	†+3·8
April 1983 to April 1984	+0·6

Source: New Earnings Survey.
* Based on males aged 21 and over and females aged 18 and over.
† Based on those on adult rates of pay.

Changes in average earnings in April of successive years may reflect changes in the timing of pay settlements. Also, changes in average earnings may reflect changes in the structure of employment and do not necessarily correspond to equivalent changes in rates of pay for comparable jobs.

Swindon

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Employment what were the 15 largest categories of employment in the Swindon constituency in 1971, 1976, 1981 and in the latest available year; how many were employed in each category; and what percentage of the total work force these represent.

Mr. Alan Clark: The available information is for the Swindon jobcentre area and is as follows.

Unemployment Statistics

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what is the latest number of those under 21 years in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the west midlands and (c) the black country area of the west midlands who have been unemployed for 12 months and more; what was the percentage increase in each case since the changes in recording these figures; and what was the date on which the change took effect;

(2) what is the latest number of those aged 45 years and over in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the west midlands and (c) the black country area of the west midlands who have been unemployed for 12 months and more; and what has been the percentage increase in each case since the change in recording these figures;

(3) what is the total amount in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the west midlands and (c) the black country area of the west midlands, who have been unemployed for 12 months and more; and what has been the percentage increase since the change in recording these figures.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is in the Library. Percentage increases are shown since 14 October 1982, when the unemployment count was first based on the numbers of claimants to benefit at unemployment benefit offices.

† Figures are not available for those aged under 21.
‡ Comparisons since October 1982 are affected by the 1983 Budget measures which mean that certain older men, mainly over 60, no longer need to sign on at an unemployment benefit office in order to receive supplementary allowance or national insurance credits.

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will list the latest unemployment figures and percentages in each region and the percentage of those in each region who have been unemployed for 12 months and more;

(2) if he will set out the unemployment figures and percentage in each region in May 1979, May 1982 and May 1984 and, in each case, the percentage of those who have been unemployed for 12 months and more.

Mr. Alan Clark: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Job Creation

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table showing the numbers of additional jobs for (a) employees and (b) self-employed that were created in (i) Scotland, (ii) England and (iii) Wales in the calendar years 1983 and 1984; and if he will publish similar tables for the number of part-time and full-time jobs created; and for men and women, respectively.

Mr. Alan Clark: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Personal Disposable Income

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is his latest estimate of personal disposable income, as a percentage of the United Kingdom average, in Wales and the regions of England.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Available information relating to normal weekly disposable household income per head from the 1982 and 1983 family expenditure surveys show the following percentages:

	Per cent.
North	92
Yorkshire and Humberside	90
North West	95

Trans Promotions Ltd.

Mr. Barry Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what information he has on the number of staff employed by Trans Promotions Ltd. in running its youth training schemes in each relevant Manpower Services Commission area; how this information compares with the average figures given in the report to the Manpower Services Commission youth training board of the Manpower Services Commission's survey of scheme providers, paper YTB 85/14, annex A, paragraph 1.1; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether the Manpower Services Commission undertook any financial checks into the standing of the youth training scheme managing agent Trans Promotions Ltd. prior to the signing of a contract between Trans Promotions Ltd. and the Manpower Services Commission; and whether there are any plans to conduct such a check in the future;

(3) what steps he has taken to satisfy himself that the youth training schemes run by Trans Promotions Ltd. meet the minimum criteria of the Manpower Services Commission; and if he will make a statement;

(4) on what dates the large companies unit, the large companies sub-group of the youth training board and the youth training board of the Manpower Services Commission approved a contract to provide youth training scheme places between the Manpower Services Commission and the managing agent Trans Promotions Ltd.; on what dates the renewal of the contract for 1984-85 was approved; on what dates a list of work experience provider for 1984-85 was approved; and what steps he has taken to satisfy himself as to the actions of the above bodies and as to the adequacy and accuracy of the list of work experience providers;

(5) how many places on the youth training scheme are being offered by the managing agent Trans Promotions Ltd. nationally and by Manpower Services Commission area in the current year; how many trainees were in training in these places nationally and by Manpower Services Commission area on the latest available date; and how many trainees have entered such places by Manpower Services Commission area and nationally in the current year.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 17 May 1985, c. 241]: The first agreement between Trans Promotions Ltd. and the large companies unit of the Manpower Services Commission was exchanged on 9 May 1983. Scheme approval was given by officials of the large companies unit using authority delegated by the youth training board large companies unit sub-group. A renewal agreement for 1984-85 was exchanged on 29 June 1984 under the same procedure.

Prior to the signing of agreements, the bulk of individual work experience placements were approved by officials of the large companies unit following consultation with officials of Manpower Services Commission training division area offices. As in all schemes, adjustments were made subseuently in the light of operational experience.

Action by officials and agreements were endorsed by the youth training board large companies unit sub-group on 15 June 1983 in respect of 1983-84 and on 31 July 1984 in respect of 1984-85.

The youth training board large companies unit sub group reports directly to the youth training board who are in turn responsible to the Commission.

Contracts for 1985-86 have not yet been signed. The 1984-85 agreement covered 323 places nationally. A total of 100 trainees were in training on 25 March 1985; 220 trainees had entered the 1984-85 scheme by that date. It is not possible to provide an analysis of these figures by Manpower Services Commission training division area offices other than at disproportionate cost.

The large companies unit applies national standards with regard to quality and financial status to the schemes that it negotiates. Routine checks were made to establish the company status of Trans Promotions Ltd. but a detailed investigation into its financial affairs was not made. Such an investigation would only be undertaken in the event of serious concern or doubt and there are no plans to make such an investigation in this case.

All youth training schemes are regularly monitored by Manpower Services Commission officials to establish whether they meet current requirements for content and design laid down by the Commission. The large companies unit's current assessment of the Trans Promotion Ltd. scheme is that it is meeting current requirements.

The report, presented to the Manpower Services Commission youth training board on 14 March 1985, showed that on average, the equivalent of eight full-time staff were employed by managing agents to manage, administer and provide training for each 100 trainees. However, the number of staff employed by individual managing agents varied depending on the extent to which elements of the programme were sub-contracted or offered in-house. Trans Promotions Ltd. has provided details of staffing in confidence and the large companies unit is satisfied that they are adequate.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Black Report

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if it is still intended to implement the Black report's recommendation that custodial and residential sentences for juveniles should be replaced by a single determinate residential order as announced by the then Minister of State to the Northern Ireland Committee on 5 November. 1980.

Mr. Scott: The Treatment of Offenders (Northern Ireland) Order 1980 replaced semi-determinate borstal training orders by provision for determinate sentences for young persons aged over 16 years convicted of imprisonable offences. Further legislation relating to the Black report recommendations on the sentencing of those aged 16 and under is still being considered.

European Social Fund

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what changes have been decided by the European Commission in the criteria for allocations from the European social fund; what are the implications for future allocations from the fund to Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Boyson: The review of the European social fund completed in late 1983 resulted in entirely new regulations and guidelines governing the funds's operations which remained unchanged in 1984 and 1985. New guidelines for the Management of the fund in 1986 have just been adopted by the Commission, but it is too early to say what effect they may gave on allocations to Northern Ireland in that year. The distribution of fund assistance is influenced by many factors including, notably, the overall pressure of demand on its resources. I would expect that Northern Ireland's status as an area of absolute priority will mean that it will continue to receive high levels of support from the fund.

Birds (Licences to Kill)

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many licences he issued in (a) 1983 and (b) 1984 and so far in 1985 to kill birds under section 16 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981; and if he will indicate in each case the species of bird involved, the number allowed to be killed, the location and the reason.

Mr. Chris Patten: None. The Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 does not apply to Northern Ireland.

Legionnaire's Disease

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people in Northern Ireland are known by his Department or the communicable diseases surveillance centre to have died from legionnaire's disease in the last year.

Mr. Chris Patten: In the year ending 31 December 1984 no death was registered.

Security

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the design capacity by modern standards for each prison in Northern Ireland, including the new prison; and what are the actual numbers in each prison at the present time.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 13 May 1985 c. 3]: The following is the normal capacity of each penal establishment and the present population:

Establishment	Capacity	Population
Armagh	114	56
Belfast	600	589
Maze (Compound)	—	197
Maze (Cellular)	800	720
Malligan	300	328
Maghaberry (Male)	450	—
Maghaberry (Female)	56	—
Hydebank	300	207

There is no established capacity to the Maze (compound)

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish in the Official Report a table to show the following information, for each year since 1 January 1982 (a) the value of goods produced by each prison workshop in each Northern Ireland prison, (b) the value of goods produced on a per capita basis in each case, (c) the average number of hours worked by each prisoner in each prison per week and the average for the United Kingdom as a whole, (d) the number of prisoners who did not work in each year in each prison in Northern Ireland and (e) the average number of prisoners who are in each prison in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 13 May 1985, c. 3]: The available information is as follows:

* The number of inmates available for work varied from day-to-day and the figure quoted is based on goods produced by the average number of prisoners working assuming a working year of 50 weeks.

† This figure is only for the first six months of 1982 thereafter all remand and untried prisoners were moved to Her Majesty's prison, Belfast.

‡ The information necessary to calculate these figures for the financial year 1982-83 is no longer available.

‖ As Her Majesty's prison, Belfast has become mainly a remand prison, prison industries ceased to operate there in November 1982. Some inmates continue to be employed in the laundry and the garden but these activities are not run on a commercial basis.

¶ Remand/Untried.

To obtain the information requested on the number of prisoners who did not work in each year would involve the examination of each individual's prison record, since there are forms of work other than in a prison industry. This could only be done at disproportionate cost.

Questions about the number of hours worked by prisoners in other parts of the United Kingdom are matters for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what have been the average hours worked in each week in each prison in Northern Ireland by civilian teachers and instructors in each of the years or financial years 1982 to date.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 13 May 1985, c. 3]: The weekly conditioned hours of full-time teachers in the Northern Ireland prison service consist of 18 to 22 hours class contact, depending on grade, but additional time is spent on preparatory work. The conditioned hours for civilian instructors are 42 a week. Since the escape from Her Majesty's prison Maze (cellular) in September 1983, however, it has not been possible to utilise fully these instructors.

Details of the hours actually worked by civilian instructors are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Home Helps

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the average hourly pay for home helps in each of the years 1974 to 1984 in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Chris Patten [pursuant to his reply, 17 May 1985, c. 241-242]: The figures are as follows:

Year	Hourly rate (at November) Pence
1974	75·93
1975	95·88
1976	102·12
1977	112·38
1978	121·13
1979	145·83
1980	165·63
1981	177·13
1982	190·77
1983	199·48
1984	209·74

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how the average hourly pay for home helps in Northern Ireland relates to the average hourly pay for (a) full-time female manual workers and (b) full-time male manual workers in each of the years 1974 to 1984.

Mr. Chris Patten [pursuant to his reply, 17 May 1985, c. 241-242]: The figures are as follows:

	Average hourly earnings
	Home helps pay	Full-time women manual workers on adult pay rates	Full-time men manual workers on adult pay rates
	Pence	Pence	Pence
1974	75·93	52·4	80·7
1975	95·88	75·7	107·7
1976	102·12	97·8	130·8
1977	112·38	105·9	142·7
1978	121·13	120·1	159·3
1979	145·83	129·6	179·9
1980	165·63	159·7	220·8
1981	177·13	184·3	246·7
1982	190·77	195·3	264·0
1983	199·48	206·3	280·9
1984	209·74	221·4	294·6

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the real percentage change in the average hourly rate of pay for home helps in Northern Ireland in each of the years 1974 to 1984 measured against the retail pay index.

Mr. Chris Patten [pursuant to his reply, 17 May 1985, c. 241-242]: On the assumption that the hon. Member is referring to the retail price index, the figures are as follows:

	Per cent.
1974	—
1975	+0·86
1976	−7·38
1977	−2·61
1978	−0·29
1979	+2·55
1980	−1·49
1981	−4·51
1982	+1·31
1983	−0·22
1984	+0·23

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the recent report of the joint working group on the home help service in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement on the future of the service.

Mr. Chris Patten [pursuant to his reply, 17 May 1985, c. 242]: The joint working group on the home help service in Northern Ireland recently presented its report to the Department of Health and Social Services. The group has identified the difficulties which have arisen in administering the service within the resources available and have considered alternative methods of providing help.

Their main recommendation is that a grant-based scheme should be introduced for new clients and that it should operate alongside the current model scheme for existing clients. In view of the importance of the service to so many people it was considered essential to consult a wide range of interested bodies before reaching any conclusion on the analysis contained in the report or on its recommendations.

In initiating this consultative process on 12 March 1985, the Department indicated that it was anxious to widen the debate and apart from listing a number of options, not all of which were drawn from the report, also invited interested organisations to suggest their own possible alternatives.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the total number of recipients of the home help service in Northern Ireland for each of the years 1974 to 1984.

Mr. Chris Patten [pursuant to his reply, 17 May 1985, c. 242]: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Number of recipients
1974	*10,897
1975	*13,104
1976	18,865
1977	19,982
1978	*20,827
1979	23,308
1980	22,476
1981	26,184
1982	28,234
1983	28,023
1984	N/A

* The figures for these years are incomplete.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the total expenditure, in real terms, on the home help service in Northern Ireland for each of the years 1974 to 1984.

Mr. Chris Patten [pursuant to his reply, 17 May 1985, c. 242]: Information covering all the costs of the home help service is not available. The information following represents expenditure on home help salaries and incidental expenses and does not include similar information on professional and clerical staff involved in the provision of the service.

Year ending 31 March	Expenditure on the home help service £ million
1975	4·63
1976	5·52
1977	4·50
1978	4·89
1979	4·85
1980	5·10
1981	5·32
1982	5·74
1983	5·88
1984	5·88

Notes:
1. Information for 1974 is not available.
2. Expenditure on the service is expressed in constant terms by reference to the retail price index (1975=100).

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the real cost of the home help service, in Northern Ireland, per recipient for each of the years 1974 to 1984.

Mr. Chris Patten [pursuant to his reply, 17 May 1985, c. 242]: As figures for the total number of recipients of the home help service in 1974 and 1975 are incomplete, it is not possible to give this information for these years. However, between 1976 and 1983 (the last year for which figures are available), the information is as follows:

Year	Cost per recipient £
1976	292·36
1977	225·24

Year	Cost per recipient £
1978	234·59
1979	207·93
1980	226·94
1981	203·24
1982	203·51
1983	209·78

Note:
The cost per recipient is expressed in constant terms by reference to the retail price index (1975=100).

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage increase there has been in (a) the total number of recipients and (b) the total real expenditure on the home help service in Northern Ireland between 1974 and 1984.

Mr. Chris Patten [pursuant to his reply, 17 May 1985, c. 242]:

(a) As the figures for the total number of recipients of the home help service in 1974 and 1975 are incomplete, it is not possible to state an accurate percentage increase for the years requested. However, between 1976 and 1983 (the last year for which figures are available) there has been a 49 per cent. increase in the number of recipients of the service.

(b) Information on expenditure in 1974 is not available. Between 1975 and 1984 there has been a 27 per cent. increase in expenditure expressed in constant terms by reference to the retail price index (1975=100).

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

O-Level Pupils

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of the pupils with five or more O-levels or O-level equivalents remain in full-time education for one or more years in each local authority in England.

Mr. Dunn: Information is not available in the form requested. The proportions of school leavers with five or more higher grade O level/CSE passes who had either stayed-on at school for sixth form study or who had left at the minimum school leaving age, intending to continue full-time education elsewhere are shown below.

Student Grants

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will estimate the additional cost of awarding all students in higher education a full maintenance grant in each of the categories (a) 18 years plus, (b) 19 years plus, (c) 20 years plus and (d) 21 years plus.

Mr. Brooke: The relevant information on which to base an estimate is not readily available. I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Teachers (Pay)

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement regarding the latest position in the teachers pay dispute.

Sir Keith Joseph: The Burnham committee met on 15 May, when constructive informal exchanges took place between the leaders of the two sides. The independent chairman noted that neither side had committed itself to a particular line or figure. Discussion is to be resumed on 23 May.

School Meals

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report the percentage of school meals which have been provided free of charge to pupils in each education authority in England for each year from 1979 to the latest available date.

Mr. Dunn: The percentage of pupils taking free school meals in primary and secondary schools in October 1984 are given in the following table. I would also refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) on 20 March at columns 485-492 for figures for the earlier years.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many children in receipt of free school meals (a) are in families receiving family income supplement and (b) are in families in receipt of neither family income supplement nor supplementary benefit at the latest date for which information is available.

Mr. Dunn: It is possible to estimate only the broad orders of magnitude, as there are fluctuations from year to year within the year in the number of pupils entitled to a free school meal and the proportion who take up the entitlement. At the time of the October 1984 school meals census in England an estimated breakdown of the main categories of entitlement would have been as follows (to the nearest 10,000):

	Numbers
(a) Pupils whose parents were in receipt of supplementary benefit	680,000
(b) Pupils whose parents were in receipt of family income supplement	170,000
(c) Other pupils	300,000
	1,150,000

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list those local education authorities providing free school meals to children other than those covered by the statutory requirements; and what proportion of all local education authorities in England these represent.

Mr. Dunn: The information requested on provision in England is available in book 2 of the report on the 1984 school meals census, a copy of which is in the Library.

Infant Classes

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science at what age each local authority admits children into full-time education in infant classes.

Mr. Dunn: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Schools (Building Work)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will update table 9 in his Department's study of school buildings 1977, to reflect building work which needs to be carried out at present.

Mr. Dunn: The information is not available in the Department to update the table which was drawn up in the circumstances of the time and based on sample surveys of the school building stock in 1975 and 1976.

THE ARTS

Sponsorship

23. Mr. Dafydd Wigley asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts how many representations the Minister for the Arts has received during this past six months concerning the sponsorship of the arts by tobacco companies.

Mr. Waldegrave: One.

Licences

Mr. Ashdown asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts if he will list in the Official Report all the different types of licences operated or granted by the Office of Arts and Libraries and the year in which they first came into operation.

Mr. Waldegrave: None. However, licences for the export of works of art are issued by my hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on the advice of my noble Friend the Minister for the Arts.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

"Official Report" (Delivery)

Mr. Allen Adams asked the Lord Privy Seal if he has any plans to extend the scope of delivery of the Official Report to the homes of hon. and right hon. Members who live outside London.

Mr. Biffen: No, but hon. and right hon. Members living outside London can have the Official Report delivered to them on a daily basis by first class post.

Parliamentary Questions (Costs)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Lord Privy Seal what would be the advisory figure at which Ministers might consider whether the expense of a full reply to a parliamentary question was justified if it was increased to retain in real terms the level set in 1982; and if Her Majesty's Government will make it policy to increase the advisory limit to this level.

Mr. Biffen: The advisory figure would need to be revised to around £225 to reflect in real terms the figure of £200 set in 1982. As the costings involved are necessarily approximate, and replies costing more than £200 are in no way automatically debarred, it is not considered necessary to revise the figure at this time.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will list the costs including overhead costs, taken into account by Ministers when assessing the cost of providing a full reply to a parliamentary question; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Biffen: The average cost of parliamentary questions is based on the estimated time spent on this work by the various grades of staff involved. The cost is calculated on the basis of average salary costs plus an allowance for overheads such as stationery, telephones and typing.

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Lord Privy Seal how many statutory instruments required affirmative approval as a requirement for coming into, or remaining in effect; how many were subject to the negative procedure; and how many statutory instruments subject to no parliamentary procedure were laid before either or both Houses of Parliament, in each of the last 30 years.

Mr. Biffen [pursuant to his reply, 14 May 1985, c. 90]: The information requested is only readily available for the last 13 years; these figures are listed below and are on a sessional basis. Information for earlier sessions could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Visitors

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Lord Privy Seal what guidance is issued to the police and security officers on the number of people permitted to accompany hon. Members, or official guides, on the line of route either at Norman Porch or St. Stephen's entrance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Biffen: Parties of six or fewer, personally accompanied by a Member may tour the line of route any time when it is open. On sitting Mondays to Thursdays during the months March to July inclusive, parties of not more than 16 who are in possession of a Member's special permit may tour the line of route when it is open. On sitting Fridays and on non-sitting weekdays other arrangements apply.

I draw my hon. Friend's attention to the booklets, "Regulations for Visitors" and "Line of Route on Non-Sitting Days" which are widely available.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Lord Privy Seal how many official guides have been issued with permits to accompany organised parties on the line of route; what is the maximum number of persons who are permitted to form a group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Biffen: The London Visitor and Convention Bureau has licensed guides to accompany organised parties on the line of route. In addition, Members make arrangements with some staff of the House to accompany parties while off duty. The maximum number of persons to form any one party is 16.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Housing Benefits

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) when he expects his hon. Friend the Minister for Social Security to be in a position to reply to the letter sent by the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed on 27 February about housing benefits for striking miners;

(2) why he has not answered the question from the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed tabled for answer on 22 April concerning his letter of 27 February about housing benefit for striking miners.

Mr. Newton: I regret the delay in considering the points raised by the hon. Member, and have written to him today.

Mr. Lionel Clarke

Mr. Ottaway asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about the circumstances surrounding the release from custody of Mr. Lionel Clarke on 8 May.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: On 8 May at Nottingham magistrates' court Mr. Clarke was found guilty of damage to property and assault, and sentenced to 28 days' imprisonment. In view of the time he had already spent on remand he was not required to be returned to prison, but was released into the community. Since then it has been found necessary to detain Mr. Clarke in hospital for treatment under the provisions of the Mental Health Act 1983. Following admission to Mapperley hospital our Department agreed to make a place available for him at Rampton hospital.

Waltham Forest District Health Authority

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the annual expenditure by the Waltham Forest district health authority on services undertaken by private contractors.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The annual accounts for Waltham Forest for 1983-84, the latest available, show a total expenditure of £1,456,285 for services undertaken by private contractors.

General Practitioners (Terms of Service)

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, in preparing his Green Paper on general practitioners' terms of service, he will consider the report of Professor Marinker published by the Office of Health Economics, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We are aware of Professor Marinker's published views and have taken them into account in considering the preparation of the Green Paper on primary health care.

Cervical Screening

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he last received advice from the Committee on Gynaecological Cytology on the age and frequency of screening; and what the advice was.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We received advice from the Committee on Gynaecological Cytology on the age and frequency of screening in April 1984. This advice is as set out in Health Circular HC(84)17 a copy of which is in the Library. The CGC reaffirmed this advice on 25 April 1985.

Glaucoma

Mr. Loyden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on recent developments in the treatment of glaucoma.

Mr. John Patten: There have been continuing improvements in the medical and surgical techniques employed in the treatment of glaucoma. These have been reported in the journals and will be taken into account by clinicians in deciding the care appropriate for each particular case.

Voluntary Repatriations

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will update his answer to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) of 1 December 1983, Official Report, columns 623-26, regarding the numbers of voluntary repatriations assisted under the Supplementary Benefits Act 1976.

Mr. Whitney: The table shows the number of people who have been assisted with voluntary repatriation, from 1 December 1983 to date, under the Supplementary Benefits Act 1976. Since August 1984, only British citizens born overseas or European nationals returning to Europe may be assisted under the DHSS scheme. Other people are now helped through a scheme run by the International Social Service of Great Britain on behalf of the Home Office.

Legionnaire's Disease

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on what basis details of the treatment for water supplies, Hatacide LP5, were excluded from his Department's guidelines to control legionnaire's disease circulated to area health authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Biocides have not been excluded from our Department's guidelines on the control of legionnaire's disease as they can play an important role in water treatment. However, where our guidance states that chlorine should be used, we do not consider that biocides are a suitable alternative. In our opinion, sufficient statistical evidence has not been published to support the claims of the manufacturers and to justify the substitution of the biocide Hatacide LP5, for chlorine in the six monthly disinfection of cooling towers and evaporative condensers. The best information available indicates that none of the reported outbreaks of legionnaire's disease has been associated with a water cooling system that has received regular conventional treatment. Comparisons of the conventional treatment of water in evaporative condensers and cooling towers with treatment using the large range of biocides available commercially would entail lengthy control tests in-situ.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people are known by his Department or the communicable disease surveillance centre to have died of legionnaire's disease in the last year.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: There have been 29 deaths from confirmed cases of legionnaire's disease where the onset of illness incurred in the last 12 months.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is now in a position to make a statement on the source of legionnaire's disease in Stafford.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall be making an announcement very shortly about the inquiry into the outbreak of legionnaire's disease. The source of the outbreak is something which the inquiry will want to consider.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, further to the Minister of State's answer of 14 May, Official Report, column 118, what was the source of infection in the cases of legionnaire's disease in Portsmouth, Bristol, Birmingham, Leicester, Sheffield and London, respectively.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The source of infection in these cases has not been confirmed and may never be confirmed. The history of this disease, since it was first identified, has always included a number of sporadic and sometimes isolated cases where the source of infection remains undetermined.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, further to the Minister of State's Answer of 14 May, Official Report, column 118, whether he will instruct the communicable disease surveillance centre to notify him of all cases of legionnaire's disease for the time being.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Arrangements have already been made for the communicable disease surveillance centre to advise us of all confirmed cases for the time being.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, further to the Minister of State's Answer of 14 May, Official Report, column 118, whether any more people have died of legionnaire's disease in Stafford.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: By 10 am on 20 May, a total of 37 people showing the symptoms of acute respiratory illness had died since the beginning of the outbreak of legionnaire's disease in Stafford. Of these, 14 were confirmed cases of legionnaire's disease.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the hospitals closed since 3 May 1979, the number of beds closed in each, and give the national totals.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: From the information we have centrally, the number of whole hospitals approved for closure and their total number of beds, is as follows:

	Hospitals	Beds
May-December 1979	18	1,255
January-December 1980	41	2,500

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the hospitals opened since May 1979, the number of beds brought into use in each, and give the national totals.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Thirty-eight major hospital schemes providing 12,035 beds have been completed since May 1979. They are:

State Earnings-related Pension

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what will be the level for persons retiring in each of the next 15 years on male manual average earnings, of the additional earnings-related component they will receive if they are contracted in to the state earnings-related pension scheme; and if he will estimate the cost each year of crediting in existing pensioners at this level or by some comparable criterion;

(2) how many persons are currently receiving an additional component under the state earnings-related pension scheme; what is the average amount of these pensions; how many of these pensioners are receiving an additional component of less than £1, £1 to £2, £2 to £3, £3 to £4, £4 to £5, £5 to £6, £6 to £7, £7 to £8, £8 to £10, £10 to £15 and over £15; and if he will estimate the equivalent figures for 1990, 1995 and 2000, respectively.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Irradiated and Novel Foods

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on what date he expects to receive the report of the advisory committee on irradiated and novel foods.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that the preparation of the advisory committee's report is well advanced but that a date cannot yet be given for its completion.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to reply to the questions from the hon. Member for Norfolk, North about social security payments and tax rates, tabled on 26 April for answer on 30 April.

Mr. Whitney: I replied to my hon. Friend on 15 May at columns 154-156.

Pensions

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many pensioners in Wales drew an additional pension of some kind under the 1975 scheme in September 1984.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Computerised Data Processing

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his Department's annual budget for computerised data processing, including hardware, software and out of house services; and how many staff of his Department are employed in carrying out computerised data processing work.

Mr. Whitney: The Department's annual budget for 1985-86 for computerised data prosessing is £45 million for hardware and software and £3 million for out of house services. A total of 3,030 staff of the Department are employed in carrying out computerised data processing work.

Blood Donors

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will consider introducing to all blood transfusion centres a form of consent, to be signed by all blood donors, which will allow them to indicate clearly if they wish their blood to be used for National Health Service or private patients; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. The National Blood Transfusion Service is based on the principle that blood is given by voluntary donors for use where it is needed by doctors for patients. The use of the blood is determined by clinical need and availability. Any suggestion that donors should impose conditions on the use of their own blood would be tasteless and impracticable.

Hatacide LP5

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what tests have been conducted by officials of his Department on the chemical Hatacide LP5 regarding its effectiveness in containing legionnaire's disease.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have not conducted tests on Hatacide LP5 or any other proprietary biocides. The best information available to us indicates that none of the reported outbreaks of legionnaire's disease has been associated with a water cooling system that has received regular conventional treatment using chlorine. In our opinion sufficient statistical evidence has not been published to support the claims of the manufacturers and to justify the substitution of Hatacide LP5 for chlorine in the twice yearly disinfection of cooling towers and evaporative condensers. Where our guidance states that chlorine should be used, we do not consider that biocides are a suitable alternative.

Communicable Disease Surveillance Centre

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has for the future of the communicable disease surveillance centre.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The communicable disease surveillance centre is the responsibility of the public health laboratory service board. We are not aware of any plans by the board to change its general role or functions.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give a breakdown of the number of families with children in receipt of supplementary benefit according to the number of children in the family at the latest date for which information is available.

Mr. Whitney: Provisional information at December 1983 is as follows:

Number of families receiving supplementary benefit

Number of dependent children in family	(thousands)
1	421
2	329
3	146
4	54
5 or more	25

Source: Annual statistical inquiry 1983.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many unemployed people in receipt of supplementary benefit, who are classified as householders, are aged under 26 years; and of these how many have (a) no child dependants, (b) no adult dependants and (c) neither adult nor child dependants.

Mr. Whitney: No information is available about the number of unemployed householder claimants aged under 26. At December 1983 it is provisionally estimated that there were 176,000 unemployed householder claimants aged under 25, of whom 98,000 had no adult dependants. No information about their child dependants is available.

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people are currently in receipt of supplementary benefit under regulation 15 of the Supplementary Benefit (Requirements and Resources) Regulations, broken down into Department of Health and Social Security areas.

Mr. Whitney: The information is not available in the form requested. The latest available information on mortgage payers relates to December 1982 and is contained in table 6.1 of the "Annual Statistical Enquiry 1982," a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether, under the new regulations relating to supplementary benefit single payments, a person under the age of 26 years who finds unfurnished accommodation will be eligible for a single payment for furniture and household equipment.

Mr. Whitney: Whether or not such a person would be eligible for a single payment for furniture and household equipment would be a matter for the independent adjudicating authorities, having regard to the provisions of the Supplementary Benefit (Single Payments) Regulations and to the facts of the particular case.

Correspondence

Mr. McWilliam asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to reply to the letter of 20 March and reminder thereto of 23 April about health issues affecting a constituent of the hon. Member for Blaydon, Dr. Ward.

Mr. John Patten: I have written to the hon. Member today.

Mr. McWilliam asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to reply to the letter of 24 January and reminders thereto of 6 March, 9 April and 29 April about health issues affecting a constituent of the hon. Member for Blaydon Mrs. Forster.

Mr. John Patten: I regret that we have no record of having received the hon. Member's letters of 24 January, 6 March and 9 April. On receipt of his letter dated 29 April my office tried unsuccessfully to telephone him and wrote to him on 14 May.

Drug Companies (Compensation Payments)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has on the amount of compensation payments which have been paid in each of the last five years by drug companies to (a) healthy volunteers and (b) patients who have taken part in drug trials and suffered serious side effects.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not collect this information.

Drug Trials

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce legislation to require drug companies to use the same procedures to gain informed consent to participation in drug trials as is used to gain the informed consent of patients.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The guidelines issued by the Royal College of Physicians recommend that volunteers be given a full explanation of the proposed procedure, including the risks, and that they should ordinarily give written consent to all but trivial procedures. We will consider the need for legislation on this and other aspects of drug trials involving healthy volunteers in the light of the updated advice we are awaiting from the College, the Association of British Pharmaceutical Industries and the Medicines Commission.

Drugs Testing

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce legislation to disband all drug company sponsored ethics committees and to require all proposals for testing new drugs on healthy volunteers to be approved by hospital or university ethics committees.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We will consider whether legislation or any other control is required in the light of the updated advice we are awaiting from the Royal College of Physicians, the Association of British Pharmaceutical Industries and the Medicines Commission.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has regarding ethics committees established by drug companies to approve drug tests using healthy volunteers.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall let the right hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Infant Mortality

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the latest estimate of the comparitive rates of infant mortality in the English regions.

Mr. John Patten: The information is shown in the table.

Infant mortality rate (per thousand live births) in 1984 for each Regional Health Authority (RHA) in England

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Argentina (Missing Persons)

Sir Bernard Braine asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has had any further information as to whether the Argentine Government are proposing to take any action regarding the disappearance in Argentina of Dr. Douglas Gillie and Mr. Walter Fleury whose names are listed in the report of the national commission on the disappearance of persons; what is the extent and nature of the evidence about them in the possession of the Argentine authorities; and whether this will be made public.

Mr. Renton: In January the Argentine Government informed the Swiss protecting power, which has made inquiries at our request, that evidence contained in the report of the national commission would be submitted to the judiciary: relatives would be duly informed of the court where they might present their case.

The Argentine authorities have not announced when this may happen nor have they released any information about the extent and nature of the evidence. The Swiss protecting power is pursuing the matter on our behalf.

Nuclear Arms Reduction Talks

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why, in view of its obligations under article VI of the non-proliferation treaty, the United Kingdom is not directly involved in the Geneva nuclear arms reductions talks.

Mr. Luce: The United Kingdom is committed to all articles of the treaty and fully supports the aim of the Geneva talks to prevent an arms race in space and terminate it on earth. As I told the Geneva conference on disarmament on 12 March,

"The Soviet Union and the United States possess between them the overwhelming preponderance of nuclear weapons and by far the greatest capability for the military use of space. It is therefore universally recognised that the primary responsibility for negotiations in these fields must fall to these two powers."

Underground Nuclear Testing

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will impose a temporary moratorium on United Kingdom underground nuclear testing.

Mr. Luce: No. A unilateral moratorium on nuclear testing by the United Kingdom would do nothing to achieve the goals of balanced and verifiable disarmament which the Government are determined to pursue.

Nuclear Explosions (Treaty)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of the three depository powers under the non-proliferation treaty towards the inclusion in a comprehensive test ban treaty of prohibition of nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes.

Mr. Luce: The working paper "Peaceful Nuclear Explosions in Relation to a Nuclear Test Ban", which the United Kingdom tabled at the Geneva conference on disarmament in June 1983, sets out the Government's policy in detail. I also refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 7 May at column 79, and to that which I gave the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Thomas) on 8 May at column 429.

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on progress of ratification by the United States of America of the threshold test ban treaty and the peaceful nuclear explosion treaty; and if he has proffered any advice to the United States of America on this matter.

Mr. Luce: We have remained in close touch with the United States Administration over their efforts to achieve improved verification arrangements for the two treaties referred to by the hon. Member and over President Reagan's proposal of September 1984 for exchanges of test-site observers.

Mr. Raoul Wallenberg

Mr. Franks asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions during each of the last 30 years his Department has made representations to the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics about the case of Mr. Raoul Wallenberg; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: The information referring to previous Administrations which my hon. Friend has requested could only be obtained at a disproportionate cost. However, in the last three years I have raised this matter twice with the Soviet First Deputy Foreign Minister; and Mr. Wallenberg's name was raised by our conference of security and co-operation in Europe delegation in Madrid in 1983. We shall also bear Mr. Wallenberg in mind in the context of the Ottawa human rights' meeting which is currently in progress. We continue to take a close interest in the fate of Raoul Wallenberg. We remain ready to assist the Swedish authorities in efforts to establish with greater certainty what has happened to Mr. Wallenberg.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what conclusions he has drawn from the survey of primary class children in the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Renton: The Falkland Islands Government have recently administered standardized tests of attainment in reading and arithmetical skills to all seven and 10-year-old children in the Colony. They conclude that children of primary school age in the Falkland Islands are being taught at a suitably high level.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why Spanish teaching has been re-introduced into the curriculum in Falkland Islands' schools.

Mr. Renton: The Falkland Islands Government propose to reintroduce Spanish into the school curriculum in the course of the next academic year. This is intended to benefit pupils in two ways: they will be able to acquire an additional qualification for entry to institutions of further and higher education, and the best second language to learn is the language of neighbouring countries.

Gibraltar

Mr. Stanbrook asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government have made any representations to the Spanish Government regarding the compatibility with the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation treaties of restrictions currently being imposed by Spain on United Kingdom military aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The Spanish Government are clear about our view on the arrangements currently applying to military aircraft in the Gibraltar region.

Mr. Stanbrook asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the precise nature and scope of the limitations currently imposed by Spain on British military aircraft using Gibraltar airfield; and what assessment he has made of the implications of these restrictions for the United Kingdom's contribution to the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.

Mr. Renton: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my right hon. and learned Friend gave him on 14 May. Gibraltar's facilities have been an important part of the United Kingdom's contribution to NATO since the inception of the North Atlantic Treaty, and continue to be so.

Mr. S. Chityan

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what requests he has received from Mr. S. Chityan for assistance to recover his wall of death equipment from Jedda harbour; what action he has taken in response; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: Mr. Chityan, through a friend, approached the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in January for assistance in obtaining a visa for Saudi Arabia and in obtaining the release of his equipment. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office helped him to obtain a visa and arranged for him to discuss the problem with the Saudi Arabian embassy. Her Majesty's embassy in Jedda has also been in touch with the Saudi Arabian authorities and advised Mr. Chityan on measures to secure the equipment's release; unhappily these have as yet been unsuccessful. We are continuing to pursue these efforts and I shall inform my hon. Friend of developments.

Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether his Department has prepared an educational video on the non-proliferation treaty for use in schools and colleges.

Mr. Luce: No. But there are other ways, through leaflets etc. in which the Government contribute to better public education on the advantages of the non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he or any other Minister in his Department plans to have any meetings with any organisations about the non-proliferation treaty prior to the review conference in Geneva.

Mr. Luce: I have arranged to see representatives from eight non-governmental organisations who have expressed interest in discussing the non-proliferation treaty review conference. Officials have had several meetings with such organisations already.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the number and types of nuclear weapons and nuclear explosive devices cancelled or dismantled since 1952 as a result of multinational nuclear disarmament negotiations involving Britain, the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Mr. Luce: The United Kingdom is not a party to any arms control agreements which have required us to destroy any of our nuclear weapons. The questions of which systems have been dismantled by the United States and USSR is a matter for the Governments of those countries.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Brewster houses in the Falkland Islands still await water and sewage connections.

Mr. Raison: None.

Ethiopia and Sudan

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total sum of food aid to Ethiopia and Sudan agreed at the Dublin Common Market summit; what period was covered by the pledges; and what amount has been delivered from Common Market surpluses to date.

Mr. Raison: The European Council in Dublin did not make allocations to individual countries. Since December 1984 the European Community and its member states have pledged 278,000 tonnes of cereals to Ethiopia and 185,000 tonnes to Sudan for delivery before the end of this year. About 144,000 tonnes have been delivered to Ethiopia so far this year, and about 93,000 tonnes, together with about £8 million worth of other food, to Sudan.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a table showing the deliveries of cereals from the European Economic Community stockpiles to Ethiopia and Sudan, respectively, since the emergence of the famine crisis in these countries.

Mr. Raison: The figures are as follows:

Deliveries of cereals, tonnes

	Ethiopia (from January 1984)	Sudan (from November 1984)
European Community	213,000	14,500
United Kingdom	26,500	50,000

Notes:

1. Smaller quantities of other foods have been provided to both countries by the Community.
2. No figures are available for deliveries by other member states of the Community in these periods, nor is it possible to distinguish between cereals purchased on the Community market and cereals drawn from stockpiles.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Common Market about the pace at which its surplus foodstuffs are being sent to Ethiopia and Sudan under the food aid programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Raison: The Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and other Ministers have reviewed at frequent intervals with other member states and the European Commission the provision of food aid for Africa. We will be doing so again at the Development Council on 23 May.

NATIONAL FINANCE

EC Budget

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the base year for calculating the share of agriculture in the European Economic Community budget; what is the resultant percentage ceiling; and how this figure compares with the outturn in 1984 and the forecast for 1985.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 14 May. The forecast financial guideline figure for agricultural expenditure in 1986 of 20,650 million ecu compares with an estimated outturn for agricultural expenditure in 1984 of 18,340 million ecu and planned provision for agricultural expenditure in 1985 of 19,955 million ecu.

EC (Own Resources)

Mr. Moynihan asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the payment of April non-value added tax own resources to the European Communities.

Mr. Ian Stewart: In accordance with article 10(2) of Council Regulation 2891/77, the Commission has invited member states to pay on 20 May instead of 20 June non-VAT own resources collected in April. These own resources consist of agricultural, sugar and isoglucose levies and customs duties. The Government are complying with this request.

£132 million will be paid today; the payment of levies and duties on 20 June 1985 which is made under Section 2(3) of the European Communities Act 1972 will be reduced by this amount. There will therefore be no net addition to public expenditure.

Commercial Bills

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year since 1979 and 1985 to date the net transactions in the purchase and sale of commercial bills by the Bank of England together with his estimate of the effect in each year on (a) the United Kingdom money supply and (b) the level of domestic credit.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I would refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 28 February.

The Bank of England's purchases and sales of commercial bills are transactions between the bank and the monetary sector, and therefore do not affect the level of domestic credit.

Public Expenditure Programmes

Mr. Body asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the percentage of gross domestic product that was spent on each of the 17 programmes of public expenditure for 1978-79 and for 1984-85.

Mr. Peter Rees: The figures are as follows:

	1978-79	1984-85*
Defence	4·3	5·2
Overseas aid and other overseas services	1·0	0·9
Agriculture, fisheries, food and forestry	0·5	0·6
Industry, energy, trade and employment	2·3	2·5
Arts and libraries	0·2	0·2
Transport	1·6	1·4
Housing†	2·1	1·0
Other environmental services	1·3	1·2
Law, order and protective services	1·2	1·6
Education and Science	4·5	4·2

	1978-79	*1984-85
Health and personal social services	4·3	4·8
Social security	9·5	11·6
Other public services	0·6	0·5
Common services	0·5	0·3
Scotland	2·2	2·2
Wales	0·9	0·8
Northern Ireland	*1·3	1·3

* Based on estimated outturn published in the Financial Statement and Budget Report 1985-86.

† Net of receipts (eg from sales of council houses).

The gross domestic product excludes grants and loans which are included in the above public expenditure programmes.

Albanian Gold

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received about Albanian gold held by the Bank of England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My right hon. Friend has received no recent representations about the gold identified for allocation to Albania which is in the custody of the Tripartite Commission for the Restitution of Monetary Gold. On the matter of a statement, I have nothing to add to the answer my hon. Friend Minister of State, the Member for Edinburgh, Pentlands (Mr. Rifkind) gave on 25 April at column 517 to the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing).

Balance of Payments (Japan and Germany)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the size of the total balance of payment surplus or deficit with Japan and Germany, respectively, during the most recent years for which figures are available; and what these figures would be if trade in oil was excluded.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Wealth Distribution

Mr. Nellist asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will produce a table showing, for each year for which statistics are available since 1966, what percentage of wealth is owned by the (a) most wealthy 1 per cent. of adult population, (b) most wealthy 2 per cent. of adult population, (c) most wealthy 5 per cent. of adult population, (d) most wealthy 10 per cent. of adult population, (e) most wealthy 25 per cent. of adult population and (f) most wealthy 50 per cent. of adult population.

Mr. Moore: The information requested is not available on a consistent basis for all years since 1966. The available figures are:

Distribution of personal wealth, including pension rights, among the adult population

Year	Wealthiest
	1 per cent.	2 per cent.	5 per cent.	10 per cent.	25 per cent.	50 per cent.
1971	21	27	37	49	69-72	85-89
1974	15	21	31	43	64-67	85-89
1975	13	18	27	37	58-61	81-85
1976	14	18	27	37	58-61	80-85
1977	12	17	25	35	55-58	78-82
1978	13	17	25	36	57-60	79-83
1979	13	17	25	35	56-59	79-83
1980	12	16	24	33	55-58	78-82
1981	12	16	24	33	56-59	78-82
1982	11	16	24	34	56-59	78-82

A full explanation of this table can be found in chapter 4 of Inland Revenue Statistics 1984, a copy of which is in the Library.

Earnings

Mr. Nellist asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people earn between (a) £15,000 and £19,999, (b) £20,000 and £49,999, (c) £50,000 and £99,999, (d) £100,000 and £249,999 and (e) above £250,000 a year.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Computerised Data Processing

Mr. Oppenheim asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is Her Majesty's Customs and Excise annual budget for computerised data processing, inlcuding hardware, software, and out of house services; and how many of the staff of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise are employed in carrying out computerised data processing work.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Faulds asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will specify when and how parliamentary sanction was obtained to incur direct public expenditure for the surrendered balances of £1,695,000 in 1980-81, £62,000 in 1981-82 and £1,185,000 in 1983-84 on Votes under the equivalents of the current sub-heads class V, vote 10, subhead C2 and class VIII, vote 4, subhead B5, by means of identical sums being credited to the non-surrenderable grants in aid which had been the subject of a vote under the then equivalents of subheads C1 and B4; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Rees [pursuant to his reply, 17 May 1985, c. 248]: Parliament approved the total provision of the votes in question under the relevant Appropriation Acts.

The Government have discretion to vary the allocation of the totals between subheads; by long-standing custom this is excercised by the Treasury.

CAP (Price System)

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the percentage by which the central rate of the common agricultural policy price system has risen in relation to the market rate of the European currency unit since 1973 as a result of changes in the unit of account or otherwise.

Mr. MacGregor: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 21 February 1985 at column 583.

ENVIRONMENT

Licences

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report all the different types of licences operated or granted by his Department and the year in which they first came into operation.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: Licences currently operated or granted by my Department relate to:

(a)	the keeping and use of radioactive material and disposal or accumulation of radioactive waste.	Radioactive Substances Act 1960
(b)	the impounding and abstraction of water (applications called in for the Secretary of State's decision)	Water Resources Act 1963
(c)	caravanning activities by special organisations	Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1976
(d)	the protection of birds, animals and plants	Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981
(e)	the control of traffic in animals and plants	Endangered Species (Export and Import) Act 1976 (as amended)

In addition the Department, or the PSA in its responsibility for managing the Civil and Defence estate, issue various licences and other approvals to individuals and organisations managing facilities or making occasional or temporary use of Government land and buildings and royal palaces and parks (for recreational purposes, filming, meetings, agricultural grazing etc.). Also certain firms are licensed to sell in the open market items made to the design and specification of the Crown Suppliers, subject to the payment of royalties.

Single Persons (Housing)

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will introduce legislation to make unlawful discrimination against single people in matters of housing.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans at present to introduce legislation relating to restrictions on access to waiting lists for local authority housing or to the allocation of such housing. He is, however, concerned that authorities should concentrate their provision on those in the greatest housing need and is considering whether further steps to encourage this would be appropriate.

Urban Programme

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the increase in real terms in spending on the urban programme in the London borough of Waltham Forest since 1979.

Sir George Young: If general inflation in the economy (as measured by the GDP deflator) is taken into account, the borough's allocation has increased by 51 per cent. in cost terms.

Insulating Materials (Standard)

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has regarding the development of British Standards for urea formaldehyde insulating materials.

Sir George Young: British Standard 5617: 1978 covers the specification for urea formaldehyde foam for thermal insulation of cavity walls and British Standard 5618: 1978 is a code of practice for such work. The code of practice was amended in 1982 to set detailed requirements in relation to formaldehyde fumes.

The requirements in BS5617 and the criteria in BS5618 for establishing the suitability of properties for cavity filling are at present being reviewed by the British Standards Institute.

Urea Formaldehyde Wall Insulation

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is satisfied with the regulations to restrict the use of urea formaldehyde foam in cavity wall insulation.

Sir George Young: The building regulations set requirements governing cavity wall insulation with urea formaldehyde. Type relaxation from these requirements is available, but only if the installer holds or operates under British Standards Institute certificate of registration and carries out the work in accordance with the British Standard materials to British Standard specification code of practice. I am satisfied that these arrangements have proved generally effective.

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when urea formaldehyde wall insulation will be subject to certification; and what steps will be taken in the meantime to ensure that insulation companies observe building regulations and safety requirements.

Sir George Young: Urea formaldehyde foam is already controlled under the building regulations. Certification by BSI is required for installers operating under the type relaxation procedures. Installers under this scheme who fail to observe the building regulations and safety requirements risk losing their certificate of registration.

Drinking Water (Nitrates)

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those water authorities that have applied for permission to exceed the 50 mg per litre of nitrates in drinking water limit; and which he has approved.

Mr. Macfarlane: Water undertakers in the Anglian, Severn-Trent, Yorkshire and Thames water authority areas have applied for derogations to exceed the EC directive figure of 50 mg per litre of nitrate in certain water supplies. No decisions have yet been taken on any of the applications.

Defective Housing

Mr. Latham: asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to permit local authorities to assist persons seeking to repair properties such as Airey houses which they have bought where the approved cost of the structural alterations was subsequently raised by 15 per cent. as a result of the imposition of value added tax under the Finance Act 1984, but the grant to the householder had already been fixed; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Gow: New legislation is not needed: owners of Airey houses who are seeking to repair them can withdraw their application under part VII of the Housing Act 1974 (even where the application has already been approved) and apply for assistance under the Housing Defects Act 1984, where the eligible expense limit for reinstatement grant (£14,000) takes account of the imposition of VAT.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the local authorities which have contacted him following his invitation made on 13 March, Official Report, column 348, in respect of those authorities having particular difficulties with the obligations of the Housing Defects Act; and what has been his response to those authorities.

Mr. Gow: Following my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's announcement on 13 March my Department issued on 27 March a circular (9/85) inviting local authorities which wished to bid for additional housing investment programme allocations to do so by writing to the appropriate regional office by 31 May.

The following local authorities have responded in the terms set out in the circular.

Newcastle city council
North Wiltshire district council
Nuneaton and Bedworth borough council
Redbridge borough council
Reigate and Banstead borough council
Sedgefield district council
West Somerset district council

My right hon. Friend and I will give to these, and to any other applications which we receive, the most careful consideration.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress he is making with measures to ensure the maintenance of (a) central computer services, (b) technical services and (c) scientific services currently provided by the metropolitan counties and the Greater London council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The future of these services is a matter for the successor authorities but my right hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government has offered the Department's good offices in considering how worthwhile work could be maintained.

Right-to-Buy (Manchester)

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many exchanges of correspondence have taken place with the city of Manchester concerning the Housing Act 1980 and the right to buy since 1 April 1981; how many times he has threatened to use his power under section 24C of the Act; how many times he has used such powers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. George Young: Since 1 April 1981, the city of Manchester have written 57 letters to the Department, and the Department has sent 21 letters to the council, about the Housing Act 1980 and the right to buy. The attention of ten authorities, excluding Manchester, has been drawn to the powers available to the Secretary of State under section 24C of the Act. Such powers have not yet been used.

However, Manchester was formally warned on 12 April 1985 that the Secretary of State was considering whether to exercise these powers in relation to the Council's failure to provide statistical information about right to buy progress. Fortunately the figures were then forwarded. They indicate that Manchester had a significant number of cases in default of the statutory time-tables last December but that its performance had now improved to the extent that monthly statistical returns in the detail previously supplied are no longer needed.

Public Footpaths

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if the Central Office of Information will issue an announcement drawing the attention of landowners and farmers to their responsibilities towards public footpaths similar to their announcement of 27 April on Walking in the Countryside.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Countryside Commission's access charter and accompanying booklet "Out in the Country" contains information on the responsibilities of landowners and farmers in connection with public footpaths. This is being given effective publicity, including announcements through the Central Office of Information as appropriate.

Guide Dogs

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is satisfied with arrangements for access for guide dogs to public buildings for which he has responsibility.

Sir George Young: The Property Services Agency, which forms part of my Department, has overall responsibility for the provision and maintenance of most government buildings. Its policy is to ensure that all new buildings commissioned by the agency have satisfactory access facilities for disabled people, including blind people with guide dogs, and that existing buildings are adapted to meet their needs wherever this is practicable and funds permit.

Housing and Construction

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of annual gross domestic fixed capital formation was represented by investment in the housing and construction sector in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Sir George Young: The percentages of gross domestic fixed capital formation (at current prices) accounted for by dwellings and other new buildings and works, including transfer costs of land and buildings, in each of the ten years to 1984 for the United Kingdom are as follows:

Year	Per cent.
1975	59·1
1976	57·0
1977	52·5
1978	50·4
1979	50·6
1980	52·7
1981	53·9
1982	54·0
1983	53·6
1984	53·0

Fixed Penalty Parking Fines

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many fixed penalty parking fines have been paid out of Departmental funds in each of the past three years.

Sir George Young: I will answer this question shortly.

Greater London Council

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether he will describe the steps he intends to take to maintain the continuity of services and staff that support the specialist services provided by the central computer services department within the Greater London council after the passage of the Local Government Bill;

(2) whether he will describe the steps he intends to take to maintain the continuity of services and staff that support the specialist services provided by the technical and scientific services within the Greater London council after the passage of the Local Government Bill.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to my reply given to the hon. Member for Stretford (Mr. Lloyd) today.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will describe the steps he intends to take to maintain the continuity of services and staff that support the specialist services provided by the supplies department within the Greater London council after the passage of the Local Government Bill.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's the Minister for Local Government answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Hornchurch (Mr. Squire) on 29 March 1985 at column 548 and to my reply to the hon. Member for Stretford (Mr. Lloyd).

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will describe the steps he intends to take to maintain the continuity of services and staff that support the specialist services provided by the intelligence and information services within the Greater London council after the passage of the Local Government Bill.

Mr. Waldegrave: A revised clause 86 to the Local Government Bill has been tabled in another place which provides for schemes for collective research and collection of information by London boroughs. It will be for the boroughs to decide what use to make of this power. I also refer the hon. Member to my reply today to the hon. Member for Stretford (Mr. Lloyd).

Falklands Airport

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many building workers were dismissed from employment during the construction of the Falklands airport and had to remain without pay.

Sir George Young: This is a matter for the contractor.

Water Rates

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the increase in average water rates in each water authority area in 1985-86 over the preceding financial year.

Mr. Macfarlane: The information requested by the hon. Member is as follows:

Water Service Charges in England 1984-85 compared to 1985-86
Average Household Bill for Water Services

Water Authority	1984-85	1985-86	Actual increase 1984-85 to 1985-86

Water Research Centre

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the studies commissioned from the water research centre by his Department in (a) 1979, (b) 1980, (c) 1981, (d) 1982 and (e) 1983, respectively; and if he will place copies of these reports in the Library;

(2) if he will list the titles of the projects commissioned by his Department from the water research centre which are in the process of completion; and if he will undertake to place copies of the reports of these projects in the Library within a month of their completion.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his answer, 16 February 1984, c. 279-81]: I have today placed copies of the final contract research report from the water research centre on hazards due to arsenic and selenium (reference S2 in my answer of 16 February 1984) in the Library.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Olive Oil

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements have been made for extending price support and other aid to Spanish and Portuguese producers of olive oil, wine and oranges after accession; what is the total production in these countries compared to the European Economic Community as at present constituted; and how farmgate prices for these products in Spain and Portugal compare with European Economic Community prices.

Mr. MacGregor: Community price support and aid measures will be applied to Spanish and Portuguese producers of the products mentioned over a transition period lasting for up to 10 years. Prices of these products vary depending upon a number of factors, including variety, quality and area of production. Generally they are lower in Spain and Portugal than in the present Community.

Information on production is as follows:

	EC(10)		Spain	Portugal
Olive Oil (thousand tonnes)

Departmental Committees of Inquiry

Mr. Eggar asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many departmental committees of inquiry he and his predecessors, including Ministers of Food, have commissioned since 1955; and what were the subjects the committees investigated, the dates they were established, who chaired them and the dates they reported.

Mr. Jopling: The information requested is set out in the table and relates to committees which have been established and the reports of which have been published as Command Papers since 1955. It does not include either departmental working parties chaired by permanent officials or inquiries undertaken by one individual.

Cereals

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the Government have secured the agreement of other member states that decisions on common agricultural policy prices will only be taken by unanimity; and if the Government intend to propose that the reduction in cereal prices should be decided by a majority vote.

Mr. Jopling: No special arrangements have been agreed to taking decisions on agricultural prices. It is to the presidency to decide whether to seek a qualified majority vote for proposals from the Commission.

Dairy Farming (Northern Ireland)

Mr. Gould asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what factors account for the higher return on dairy farming in Northern Ireland, as shown in table 27 of the annual review White Paper, Cmnd. 9423.

Mr. MacGregor: Net farm income, the measure used in table 27 of the annual review White Paper (Cmnd. 9423), comprises total farm output less total costs. It is a measure of the return to the manual and managerial input of the farmer and spouse and to tenant type capital invested in the business. Because net farm income is the residual between relatively large aggregates of output and costs, small changes to either of these components can have a significant effect on the calculated level of income. Seasonal factors in a particular year can exert a considerable influence on both outputs and inputs and hence on the level of net farm income achieved. In 1983-84 weather conditions had a significant impact, depressing milk yields in Great Britain and adding to the cost of inputs through higher usage of concentrate feed, thereby contributing to a substantial reduction in income on dairy farms. Northern Ireland, on the other hand, enjoyed relatively better weather, milk yields were maintained at record levels and an excellent year for the production of grass and winter fodder enabled savings to be achieved in the usage of concentrates. Hired and family labour inputs tend to be lower in the case of medium-sized farms in Northern Ireland where the farmer's own labour (which is not treated as a cost in calculating net farm income) accounts for a high proportion of total farm labour input. This also helps explain the higher farm income figure in Northern Ireland.

Mediterranean Products

Mr. Gould asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for Spain and Portugal the production of Mediterranean products for which there are price and other guarantees under the common agricultural policy and the equivalent figure for European Economic Community production at the present time.

Mr. MacGregor: There is no universally accepted definition of the term "Mediterranean product". The most recent comparable information for a number of important products of the Mediterranean regions is as follows:—

Production Figures for Selected Mediterranean Products for 1983 (000 tonnes)

Fishing Vessel Decommissioning Scheme

Mr. Beith asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many payments have been made to date under the fishing vessel decommissioning scheme; and how many of the payments involved have been in respect of vessels from the inshore fleet.

Mr. MacGregor: Payments made to date under the fishing vessel decommissioning scheme amount to £8·86 million. Of the 97 vessels decommissioned, 59 have been vessels (under 80 ft in length) from the inshore fleet.

Livestock Markets

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the regulations relating to livestock markets in the United Kingdom; and how these compare with those in force in the other member states of the European Economic Community.

Mrs. Fenner: There are a number of regulations concerned with the prevention and control of diseases and the welfare of farm animals in livestock markets. Those relating to animal health matters are designed to secure appropriate standards to minimise the risk of disease. Those concerned with welfare are intended to ensure that animals in livestock markets are protected from unnecessary suffering. Information in relation to regulations in other member states is not available and could not be obtained without incurring unreasonable cost.

Imported Poultrymeat

Sir Peter Mills asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many consignments of imported poultrymeat have been refused entry because of excessive water content in 1984, 1983 and 1982.

Mrs. Fenner: There is no legal requirement that imported consignments of frozen chicken which do not comply with the water content regulations should be refused entry. Instead, importers have the option of labelling the birds to indicate that the water content exceeds permitted EC levels, of having them processed, or of returning them to the consignor. Since January 1983, when the regulations were first implemented in the United Kingdom, a total of 10 imported consignments have been notified to my Department as exceeding permitted water content levels.

EC (Meat Directives)

Sir Peter Mills asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will press for meat directives issued by the European Commission to be more explicit so that variations in their implementation do not arise in different European countries.

Mrs. Fenner: We share the objective of avoiding variations in the implementation of these directives. Where appropriate, explicit provisions are one means of achieving this. The existing meat hygiene directives also provide for inspection visits by Commission experts to monitor implementation or enforcement. These inspections are scheduled to start this year for red meat premises.

Pigmeat

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will explain the significance of the figures for pigmeat given in the reply of 2 May, Official Report, column 201-06 concerning EEC and other subventions to agricultural production.

Mr. MacGregor: Monetary compensatory amount levies on imports of pigmeat from other member states count as negative expenditure and in 1984-85 were expected to exceed other expenditure in the pigmeat sector (on private storage aids and import and export refunds on trade with non member countries). Negative expenditure is set against the contribution that the Community budget makes towards the cost of market regulation under the CAP in the United Kingdom.

Agricultural Production

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, further to the reply of 2 May, Official Report, columns 201-06, concerning the amount spent on agricultural production in 1984-85, whether he will publish in the Official Report the latest estimate of the tonnage of product in deadweight tonnes and so on, together with particulars of (a) the division between beef and dairy for the amount spent on hill livestock compensatory allowances and (b) an approximate division between products of the amount spent in development loans and grants.

Mr. Jopling: The latest estimate of the tonnages of product for 1984-85, where these are available, are contained in the Winter and Spring Supplementary Estimates for Class III Vote 1 of the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce (see HC 7 and HC 183 of 1984-85). Dairy cattle are not eligible for hill livestock compensatory allowances; no development loans are made and information about the amounts spent on grants is not available by product.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, further to the reply of 2 May, Offical Report, columns 201-06 concerning the amount spent on agricultural production in 1984-85, whether he will divide the support figures for cereals into wheat and barley, together with a table showing how much expenditure in each of the cases quoted in his original answer was mandatory under the common agricultural policy, how much was discretionary, and how much was paid from the Exchequer under United Kingdom or other legislation without any contribution from EEC funds.

Mr. Jopling: Separate figures for forecast expenditure on wheat and barley are not readily available. Most of the expenditure in 1984-85 on market regulation under the CAP shown in table 28 of Cmnd. 9423 is mandatory, the principal exceptions being the beef variable premium scheme (forecast expenditure £115.0 million) and the enhancement of suckler cow premium payments in Great Britain (forecast expenditure on the enhancement of £11.7 million). Exchequer expenditure on market regulation under the CAP is on intervention (purchases plus incidental costs less sales receipts and the EAGGF contribution towards incidental costs and losses of value on sales), beef premiums (60 per cent. of the cost) and the suckler cow premium (25 per cent. of the basic premium plus all the enhancement in Great Britain).

Food Labelling

Mr. Coombs asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what response he has had to his recent statement on the compulsory labelling of the fat content of food; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: My statement of 12 March was circulated to a wide range of interests with a request for comments by 1 June. My officials are also in the process of holding discussions with a number of interests on particular problem areas. It is therefore too early to assess the response to the statement.

Farm Animal Welfare Council (Report)

Mr. Cartwright asked the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when Her Majesty's Government will respond to the report of the Farm Animal Welfare Council on the welfare of livestock (red meat animals) at the time of slaughter.

Mrs. Fenner: The council's report is being carefully considered, together with the many comments on it which have been received by the Government from interested organisations. The report raises a number of important and complex issues but we plan to issue our response to it as soon as possible.

EC (Council Meeting)

Mr. Jackson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the latest Council of Agriculture Ministers' meeting held in Brussels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement I made in the House earlier today.

Animals (Experiments)

Mr. Cohen asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will seek powers to include in the test guidelines associated with the pesticides safety precautions scheme, a requirement that in vitro alternatives to living animals are used to determine eye irritancy, particularly with reference to known or suspected severe irritants; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Woolwich (Mr. Cartwright) on 15 April at column 23.

Farm Prices

Mr. Maclean asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his latest discussions with European Economic Community Agriculture Ministers on farm prices.

Mr. Jopling: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement I made in the House earlier today.

Veterinary Medicines

Mr. Chapman asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to seek powers to require the farm recording of medicines used in food animals to ensure that prescribed veterinary medicines are correctly applied at the final stage.

Mrs. Fenner: My officials are currently discussing with the National Farmers Union and other organisations having an interest in this question the form of a voluntary code of practice for the responsible use of animal medicines on farms. The recording of the purchase and use of such medicines is a most important part of the code. The early introduction of a voluntary code of practice will represent a positive step in the direction which my hon. Friend has indicated, and by identifying practical problems which might arise, will produce helpful experience on which any future legislation can be based.

I am glad to say that the response of organisations consulted so far has been encouraging.

Beef (Intervention)

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the cost in 1984 and what is the expected cost in 1985 (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in the European Community of storing beef (i) in public intervention and (ii) in assisted private storage; and what are the corresponding figures for transporting beef to store.

Mr. MacGregor: Expenditure by the guarantee section of the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund in 1984 on public intervention storage and assisted private storage for beef was 800·4 mecu and 14·1 mecu respectively, of which 58·9 mecu and 0·4 mecu was in the United Kingdom. The draft budget for 1985 provides for expenditure of 943 mecu on public intervention storage and 136 mecu on assisted private storage for beef. Based on our share of expenditure forecast to the end of June, expenditure in the United Kingdom would be 83 mecu and 4 mecu respectively. Transport costs are included in the figures for public intervention storage but are not separately identifiable.

Outgoers Quota

Mr. Nicholson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the anticipated volume of outgoers quota required to restore to base year production levels the quotas of small producers, namely, under 200,000 litres, in each region of the United Kingdom; and how this compares with the initial Government target (in million litres) for each region when the milk cessation scheme was introduced.

Mr. MacGregor: The volume of quota required to restore small producers with less than 200,000 litres to base year production levels is estimated to be as follows:

	Million litres
England and Wales	167·0
Scotland	9·4
Northern Ireland	50·0

The initial target for the milk cessation scheme in each region is as follows:

	Million litres
England and Wales	289·0
Scotland	29·8
Northern Ireland	66·1

Mr. Nicholson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the volume of outgoers quota required to meet 100 per cent. of development awards made in each region of the United Kingdom by the dairy produce tribunals.

Mr. MacGregor: My earlier reply sets our the percentages of development awards that can be met from the initial reserves in respect of the 1984-85 quota year. The volume of outgoers quota required to bring wholesale producers' awards to 100 per cent. would be as follows:

	Million litres
England and Wales	188·1
Scotland	18·4
Northern Ireland	27·9

Milk Cessation Scheme

Mr. Nicholson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what is the number of producers who have applied but who have not yet confirmed their participation in the milk cessation scheme; and what volume of quota could potentially be realised in each region if they decide to participate;

(2) what are the most recent figures of the milk cessation scheme in (a) England, (b) Wales, (c) Scotland and (d) Northern Ireland;

(3) what is the latest number of producers who have agreed to participate in the milk cessation scheme, and the volume of quota which will be realised in each region of the United Kingdom by their participation.

Mr. MacGregor: The most recent figures for the outgoers scheme are for Friday 10 May 1985, and are as follows:

	Producers already participating in the Scheme
England	1,353	producers with quota of	241·8 million litres
Wales	242	producers with quota of	23·3 million litres

Producers already participating in the Scheme
Scotland	130	producers with quota of	29·4	million litres
Northern Ireland	194	producers with quota of	12·3	million litres
TOTAL	1,919	producers with quota of	306·8	million litres

Producers still to confirm their participation
England	25	producers with quota of	18·56	million litres
Wales	7	producers with quota of	1·67	million litres
Scotland	—	producers with quota of	—	million litres
Northern Ireland	1	producer with quota of	0·07	million litres
TOTAL	33	producers with quota of	20·30	million litres

Development Awards

Mr. Nicholson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what is the percentage by which development awards made by the dairy produce tribunals can be met from the special case reserve available in each region of the United Kingdom;

(2) what is the estimated percentage dairy farmers who have been granted development awards by the dairy produce tribunals are expected to receive.

Mr. MacGregor: For the quota year 1984-85 wholesale producers who were granted development awards have received or will receive the following percentages of their awards:

	Per cent.
England and Wales	64·7
Scotland	57·5
Northern Ireland	49·0

All these awards are derived from the initial regional reserves. Direct sellers received 100 per cent. of their awards in all regions.

Pyrazophos

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has as to whether the fungicide pyrazophos also possesses insecticidal properties.

Mrs. Fenner: The active ingredient pyrazophos is cleared under the pesticides safety precautions scheme as an organophosphorous fungicide and insecticide.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Hancock asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce legislation to implement fully European Economic Community Directives 77/489 and 81/389.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 16 May 1985, c. 205]: We have no plans to introduce further implementing legislation. I consider that our current legislation fulfils our obligations under these directives, and so protects the welfare of animals in international transit within our jurisdiction.

Mr. Hancock asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food upon the basis of what scientific research was the limit of 24 hours for transportation of live animals determined.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 16 May 1985, c. 205]: The period prescribed in the Community directive for feeding and watering intervals was decided upon following expert international veterinary opinion. I also refer the hon. Member to the 1978 report by the agriculture departments on the export trade in live animals for slaughter or further fattening, which is available in the Library of the House, and which gives background to this question.

Mr. Hancock asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce legislation to define the appropriate intervals for the feeding of different species of animals.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 16 May 1985, c. 205]: The relevant Community directives do not prescribe intervals which are suitable for all journeys, since the need for feeding and watering depends on a number of factors such as age and sex of the animals, temperature, humidity, stocking density and length of the journey to the final destination.

Mr. Hancock asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking against exporters who make false declarations on the staging of animals during journeys to the Continent.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 16 May 1985, c. 205]: It would be an offence under Section 69 of the Animal Health Act 1981 if an applicant under the Export of Animals (Protection) Order 1981 made a false declaration for the purpose of obtaining an export licence. If there were evidence that an applicant had knowingly made such a declaration, prosecution would be considered.

Mr. Hancock asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what response he has made to the European Economic Community Commission's request concerning the Government's initial response to the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals' complaint on the export of live food animals.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 16 May 1985, c. 205]: My right hon. Friend has written to Commissioner Andriessen offering to arrange discussions on any aspects of the society's complaint on which he considers that a meeting would be helpful.

EC (Warehouses)

Mr. Hoyle asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all the European Economic Community warehouses and their locations in England; and if he will state the amount and what is being stored there.

Mr. Jopling [pursuant to his reply, 13 May 1985, c. 42]: The following is the information requested as at 31 March 1985:

UHT Milk

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much UHT milk is currently consumed in England; and how much of this consumption consists of UHT milk produced in (a) Britain, (b) the European Economic Community and (c) the rest of the world.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 16 May 1985, c. 205]: A total of 59 million litres of UHT milk were sold in England and Wales in the year ended 31 March 1984; separate England and Wales figures are not readily available. In 1984 approximately 99 per cent. of total UHT milk sold in Great Britain was produced in Great Britain, with the balance being accounted for by imports from the European Economic Community.

Broadleaved Woodlands

Dr. Cunningham asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list in the Official Report the names and locations of the broadleaved woodlands clearfelled under licence for conversion to agriculture in 1982-83, 1983-84 and 1984-85 in the Forestry Commission's south-west England conservancy.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 14 May 1985, c. 81]: The information is not available in the form requested as the Forestry Commission does not normally monitor the situation on the ground after granting a felling licence, unless replanting conditions are involved and these conditions are due to have been fulfilled. I can, however, list the woodlands for which felling licences for conversion of the land to agriculture were issued during the years in question. These are as follows:

Food (Fluoride Content)

Mr. Lawrence asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps are taken by Her Majesty's Government (a) to monitor and (b) to regulate the flouride content of processed food on sale to the public.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 16 May 1985, c. 206]: Surveys of the fluoride content of food have been carried out on behalf of the steering group on food surveilance, which advises me on these matters. Typical dietary intakes of fluoride give no cause for concern. The fluoride content of processed food is controlled under the general provisions of the Food Act 1984. In addition, regulations made under the Food Act 1984 lay down maximum permitted levels for the flouride content of certain permitted food additives.

Fungicides

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 21 February, Official Report, column 582, concerning economically significant resistant strains in relation to fungicides, what is the economic cost of fungicide resistance to benomyl, carbondazim and thiophonate methyl, respectively; and what are the alternative chemicals in each case.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 14 May 1985, c. 79]: I regret that the information requested concerning the economic effects of resistance of eyespot to the named fungicides could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Products continaing prochloraz may be used as alternatives to benomyl, carbendazim and thiophanate-methyl to control eyespot on cereals.

Mr. W. Wakeham (Decommissioning Grant)

Mr. Steen asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will investigate the circumstances in which Mr. W. Wakeham of 53 Hill Park road, Brixham, Devon, has still not received the decommissioning grant on his ex fishing vessel Devon Ray, on which a grant of £28,844 is payable;

(2) if he will now make payment of the decommissioning grant of £28,844 promised to Mr. W. Wakeham of 53 Hill Park road, Brixham, Devon, and contained in a letter to Mr. Wakeham dated 31 October 1984 reference SW/84/12/D and signed by C. R. George on behalf of his Ministry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 17 May 1985, c. 234]: Approval in principle to the payment of decommissioning grant to Mr. Wakeham in respect of the Devon Ray was given on 31 October 1984 subject to the requirements of The Fishing Vessel (Financial Assistance) Scheme 1983 being satisfied. The implications of these requirements have been fully explained to Mr. Wakeham and solicitors acting for him. So far, the Devon Ray has not been decommissioned within the terms of the scheme and therefore no payment can yet be made.

ENVIRONMENT

Departmental Stationery

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated stock by volume and value in his Department of ink, candles, sealing wax and pen-nibs.

Sir George Young: This information is not readily available because it is not the practice to account for such minor items in detail because a common store is kept with the Department of Transport.

Consultants (Cost)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many consultants have been retained by his Department in each of the past five years; and what was the annual cost.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: The cost of consultants retained by the Department, including PSA, has been as follows:

	£ million
1980-81	45·2
1981-82	54·0
1982-83	63·4
1983-84	83·4
1984-85	128·7

These figures are in cash terms.

The number of consultants employed in each year is not available. The increasing figures since 1982-83 reflect in part the policy of contracting out more design services by the PSA.

Ministerial Offices

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated annual cost of cut flowers and potted plants for Ministerial offices in his Department.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: The cost of plants supplied to ministerial offices in the Department by the bailiff of the royal parks is £2,250. Cut flowers are not provided.

Housing Research (London)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment why he made changes in the proposals he originally put forward for the future of research on housing in London in the event of the Greater London council being abolished; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I will answer this question shortly.

Newspaper Purchases

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many daily copies of The Sun, Daily Mirror, Financial Times and Morning Star are purchased by his Department.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: The information is as follows: 15 The Sun, 14 Daily Mirror, 65 Financial Times, 12 Morning Star.

Departmental Appointments

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the bodies to which he makes appointments.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: I make appointments to the bodies listed in my Department's entry in the HMSO Publication "Public Bodies 1984"—a copy of which is in the Libray—with the following exceptions:

Council for Small Industries in Rural Areas
Commons Commissioners
Local Valuation Panels for England
National Heritage Memorial Fund
Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution
Royal Commission on Historical Monuments
Royal Fine Art Commission

The Commission on Energy and the Environment has now been wound up.

In addition, I make appointments to:

Architectural Heritage Fund
Building Research Establishments Visitors Panel
Committee on Inquiry into the Conduct of Local Authority Business
Dartmoor Steering Group
Imperial War Museum
London and Metropolitan Government Staff Commission
National House Building Council
National Parks Planning Boards and Committees
Ordnance Survey Advisory Board
Parliamentary Boundary Commission for England
Sutton Housing Trust

Local Authorities (Consultations)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the councils with which he or his Departmental Ministers have had personal discussions in the past two years.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: I and the seven other DOE Ministers frequently meet representatives of individual local authorities and of their associations for personal discussion both formal and informal. The cost of examining all records of these meetings in order to list them all would be disproportionate.

Official Hospitality

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment which London restaurants have been used by Ministers in his Department for the purpose of official hospitality in each of the past three years; and what was the annual cost.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: In the interests of security of Ministers, of their guests and of the establishments they use, it would not be appropriate to identify them.

Entertainment costs cover not only individual official guests but also occasions when it is appropriate for a Minister to host a larger party on the occasion of a conference or other such function. Private entertainment, for instance, on the occasion of a colleague's retirement, is of course paid for by Ministers personally.

Expenditure has been as follows:

1982-83	2,999
1983-84	2,898
1984-85	5,124

The increase last year over the previous year was due in part to the interruption of ministerial business during the general election, and in part to a greater number of functions in 1984-85 for groups of guests for whom official entertainment was appropriate.

Newspapers and Periodicals

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much has been spent on domestically delivered newspapers and periodicals for Ministers in his Department in each of the past three years.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: The Department does not incur any expenditure for newspapers and periodicals delivered to Ministers' private addresses.

DEFENCE

Defence Estimates (Romanian Forces)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence why in figure II of annex A of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1985", Cmnd. 9430—I, Romanian forces are not depicted separately; and whether this will be altered in the Defence Estimates for 1986.

Mr. Lee: We do not consider there to be adequate reason to distinguish Romania from other members of the Warsaw pact in the presentation of their forces.

Nuclear Depth Bombs

Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will describe the military function of nuclear depth bombs.

Mr. Lee: The purpose of the United Kingdom's nuclear weapons, including its nuclear depth bombs, is to contribute to NATO's overall strategy of deterrence and flexible response.

Rapid Reinforcement Aircraft

Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Defence why those nuclear-capable aircraft based in the United States but assigned to prepared co-locating operating bases in Europe for rapid reinforcement are excluded from the table of shorter range intermediate nuclear force systems given in annex A to the Defence Estimates.

Mr. Lee: Because comparable Soviet aircraft based east of the Urals are also excluded, as is shown in note 1 to figure 13.

NATO (Infrastructure Programme)

Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost to Britain of the £6 billion North Atlantic Treaty Organisation infrastructure programme.

Mr. Lee: About 12 per cent.

NATO Projects

Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report the cost to Britain of the contribution made to all common North Atlantic Treaty Organisation projects and give a breakdown of these costs by function.

Mr. Stanley: NATO has three standing budgets used for the common funding of projects and the Ministry of Defence contributes to two of them. For the year 1984-85, the United Kingdom's contribution was as follows:

(a) NATO infrastructure budget. This covers the cost of constructing operational installations such as airfield facilities, naval base facilities and ammunition storage sites as well as procuring equipment such as communications, radar, and command, control and information systems. In 1984-85, the United Kingdom's total contribution to NATO infrastructure projects amounted to some £57 million. In the same year, NATO expenditure in the United Kingdom from the infrastructure budget, in respect of projects and equipment for which the United Kingdom undertook "host nation" responsibilities, amounted to £85 million.

(b) The military budget. This covers primarily the operation and maintenance of the various NATO military headquarters, and agencies and NATO's communication systems. The United Kingdom's net contribution in 1984-85 was some £37 million.

(c) The third common budget is the civil budget, for which overall responsibility is held by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs.

Commonly funded budgets such as these form only a small part of our contribution to the Alliance, more details of which can be found in chapters 2 and 3 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1985" Cmnd. 9430-1.

United States Forces (Support)

Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost to Britain of providing host nation support to United States forces in Britain.

Mr. Lee: The United Kingdom provides the United States forces based here with local support and assistance in the same way as do other NATO member countries with Allied forces on their territory. In some cases, this support is provided free of charge. In others, it is provided on full or partial repayment. The details of these arrangements remain confidential between the two Governments.

Strategic Forces (Analysis)

Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Defence why the factor of accuracy is not included in the assessment and analysis of strategic forces made in paragraph 22 of annex A of the defence Estimates.

Mr. Lee: The basis of the approach adopted in annex A to the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1985" is explained fully in paragraphs 1 to 5 and 19 of the annex. The accuracy of weapon systems is one of many qualitative factors which are relevant in compiling a complete assessment of the military balance but which cannot be readily quantified.

Missile Systems

Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Defence if all United States systems mentioned in paragraph 23 of annex A of the defence Estimates and, in particular, the cruise missiles programmes arose as a response to the prior development of equivalent systems by the Soviet Union.

Mr. Lee: We have not suggested that each element of the United States strategic force modernisation programme has been undertaken as a specific response to the prior development of equivalent weapon systems by the Soviet Union. Paragraph 22 of annex A to the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1985" describes the extensive improvements to Soviet forces, and paragraph 23 explains that the United States modernisation programme is being undertaken in the light of these improvements as a whole.

United States Forces (Deployment)

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish a list of the non-strategic nuclear forces deployed by the United States in Britain in support of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation and of those nuclear-capable forces which practise deployment in the United Kingdom as part of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's regular exercises.

Mr. Lee: The United States non-strategic nuclear-capable forces based in the United Kingdom in support of NATO are F111 aircraft and ground launched cruise missiles. No nuclear-capable forces practise deployment to the United Kingdom as part of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's regular exercises, although various types of aircraft and ships deploy to the United Kingdom from time to time in support of NATO.

Licences

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list in the Official Report all the different types of licences operated or granted by his Department and the year in which they first came into operation.

Mr. Butler: Licences issued by the Ministry of Defence cover a wide variety of purposes including the commercial use of designs and inventions resulting from work done in its research and development establishments; the use of defence lands; the occupation of married quarters, and other activities. No central record is kept, and it would be impracticable to provide a full list with dates of operation.

Base Workshops, Bicester

Mr. Lester asked the Secretary of State for Defence what progress he has made in recruiting skilled men required to operate base workshops, Bicester.

Mr. Lee: The base workshop at Bicester is not due to start taking on the increased work load planned for it in the REME static workshop review until towards the end of 1985. As the build-up will be gradual, there is no need to recruit until men can be usefully employed. However, present indications are that there should be no difficulty when the time comes to do so.

Mr. Lester asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the total cost of the expansion of the test houses at Bicester, as a result of the closure of 38 Royal Electrical and Mechanical Engineers workshops.

Mr. Lee: REME is now in the process of finalising its "statement of requirement" for the expansion of the test houses at Bicester, on the basis of which the Property Services Agency will invite tenders from appropriate firms. This task of specifying the user's technical requirements was initially concentrated on the Bovington and Old Dalby workshops, with Bicester to follow later. I cannot, therefore, add anything to the letter which my noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces, wrote to my hon. Friend on 15 January.

Mr. Lester asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the extra cost of tranferring FV432 repairs to Bicester above original estimates on which the closure of 38 Royal Electrical and Mechanical Engineers workshops was based.

Mr. Lee: I would refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to the hon. Member for Kingston Upon Hull North (Mr. McNamara) on 16 May, columns 210-211, and can only add that, as the repair of FV432s needs the support of no major facilities beyond those already at Bicester or scheduled for installation there as a result of the REME static workshop review, any extra cost will be minimal.

Technology Demonstrator Programme

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence, if he will make a statement on the technology demonstrator programme.

Mr. Butler: Technology demonstrator programmes bridge the gap between basic research and project development to meet approved operational requirements. Their purpose is to determine whether new technological concepts can be developed into operationally effective hardware. Where this is successful, it reduces the technical, time-scale and cost risks of future project development programmes, and achieves better value for money.

Type 23 Frigate

Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for Defence, in the light of the announcement of 8 May, Official Report, column 386, that tenders will be sought in the late summer for the third and fourth type 23 frigates, whether the ordering programme is up to that originally envisaged; and if it has been affected by the Trident programme.

Mr. Lee: As the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1985" explains — Cmnd 9430-I, paragraph 503 — the forward programme is not a rigid plan but consists of assumptions endorsed for costing purposes only. In the longer term we intend to maintain a force level of about 50 destroyers and frigates and I can assure my hon. Friend that our ordering plans for the type 23 frigate are proceeding satisfactorily in this regard.

Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether any foreign companies have been invited to tender for the next three type 23 frigates.

Mr. Lee: No. Tenders will be sought only from United Kingdom shipyards capable of constructing frigates.

Computerised Data Processing

Mr. Philip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's annual budget for computerised data processing, including hardware, software and out of house services; and how many staff of his Department are employed in carrying out computerised data processing work.

Mr. Butler: The annual budget for administrative computing in defence for 1985-86 is £72·5 million. The number of staff presently employed on this work is about 4,000.

Exercise Brave Defender

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence who in his Department or in the armed forces is responsible for liaising with police forces concerning their involvement in Exercise Brave Defender.

Mr. Stanley: Liaison with individual police forces is the responsibility of the appropriate army district commander and his staff.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence if members of the United States National Guard will be participating in Exercise Brave Defender.

Mr. Stanley: The position currently remains as stated in my answer to the hon. Member on 25 February 1985 — column 83. I understand, however, that some consideration is being given by the United States authorities to participation of elements of the United States air, but not army, national guard. Should participation by these elements be agreed, I will write to the hon. Member.

Nuclear Warheads

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence if it has now become necessary to reprocess or replace the fissile material in the United Kingdom's nuclear warheads.

Mr. Butler: No.

Classified Papers

Mr. Johnston asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement on the sending by post of classified papers between defence establishments.

Mr. Butler: Successive Governments' security procedures have provided for classified papers, except for some categories of the more highly classified papers, to be sent by post. Various safeguards are laid down, including the need to use registered mail or datapost in certain defined circumstances.

Spetsnaz Brigades

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many Spetsnaz brigades are assumed to be available for use against the United Kingdom.

Mr. Stanley: It is not our practice to disclose details of classified intelligence assessments. However, it would be prudent to assume that operations against targets in the United Kingdom are likely to feature in Soviet military planning.

Nuclear Artillery Shells

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) why there is no reference in the defence Estimates to the proposed introduction by the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation of new nuclear artillery shells into Europe;

(2) if he will make a statement on the implication for the British Army of the Rhine of the modernisation of nuclear-capable artillery systems operated in Europe by the United Kingdom with warheads provided by the United States of America;

(3) whether the plans for the modernisation of nuclear artillery in the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation envisage a lower number of warheads but a higher number of nuclear-capable launchers, and in particular a larger number of nuclear capable 155 mm cannon.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 16 May 1985, c. 209]: At the meeting of the NATO nuclear planning group held in Luxembourg on 26 and 27 March 1985 SACEUR presented a report dealing with the measures he considers necessary to ensure the maintenance of a survivable, responsive and effective nuclear force structure within the reduced stockpile levels decided by Ministers at Montebello in August 1983. This report, the details of which are classified, is now being considered and no decisions have been made. It is therefore premature to make a statement about the implications of any modernisation for BAOR or to include a reference in this year's defence Estimates.

ENVIRONMENT

Planning Decisions (Appeals)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to provide an opportunity for objectors to appeal against a decision of a local authority planning committee to grant planning permission for a particular project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macfarlane: No. The arrangements already give adequate opportunity for the consideration of objections and we do not propose to add a further obstacle to development.

Temporary Land Use (General Development Order)

Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning a review of the general development order for the temporary uses of land for tented camping sites, helicopter landing sites and one-day markets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macfarlane: From time to time I receive representations about these and other temporary uses of land permitted by the general development order, and I consider them carefully. However, the Government's general aim is to reduce planning controls, and there would need to be firm evidence that any particular permitted use was causing widespread concern before an amendment to the order could be justified.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for the Environment by what means he ensures that the licensed limits for activity and quantity of radioactive waste disposed of to air, land or water are adhered to in England, Wales and Scotland.

Mr. Waldegrave: Disposals of radioactive waste are subject to controls under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960. The certificates of authorisation issued under it contain limitations and conditions designed to ensure that the effects of disposal are regulated in accordance with the internationally recommended standards of radiological safety. Inspectors appointed under the terms of the 1960 Act visit premises to check that conditions of authorisation are being complied with. Where appropriate, they take check samples of effluents for independent analysis and of environmental materials.

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if it is intended to increase the licensed limits for beta/gamma activity of radioactive waste disposed of at Drigg.

Mr. Waldegrave: No.

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to exempt from the authorisation requirements of the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 the disposal of carbon-14, tritium or plutonium-241; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Section 6(5) of the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 empowers the Secretary of State for the Environment to make orders which exclude particular types of waste from the requirements for authorisation of disposal. In general, such orders are made where the radiological risk arising is negligible. During the coming months, it is proposed that several statutory instruments should be made which would exclude organic scintillation fluid containing very low levels of carbon-14 and tritium and also certain types of signs and instruments; apart from these proposals there are no current plans to change the existing authorisation requirements in respect of carbon-14, tritium and plutonium-241.

Widdicombe Inquiry

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if anyone outside his Department was consulted or involved in the preparation of his Department's evidence to the Widdicombe inquiry.

Mr. Waldegrave: The evidence jointly submitted to the Widdicombe inquiry by my Department, the Scottish Office and the Welsh Office was prepared in consultation with other Government Departments.

Green Belt Land

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give an estimate of the number of outstanding planning permissions for housing development in Essex.

Mr. Macfarlane: My Department does not regularly publish details of outstanding planning permissions, but it included in its evidence to the Environment Select Committee — first report of the Committee, 1983-4 Session, volume II—figures which show that, subject to the provision of infrastructure, there was sufficient land in Essex with outstanding planning permission for housing in 1982-3 to support average past building rates for about six years.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if it remains his policy that green belt land has a positive planning role; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macfarlane: Government policy on green belt is set out in DOE circular 14/84. This affirms the great importance which Government continue to attach to green belts, which have a broad and positive planning role.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether designated green belt land remains as such no matter what the condition of the land.

Mr. Macfarlane: DOE circular 14/84 makes it clear that the essential characteristic of green belts is their permanence and that, once the detailed boundaries have been fixed, they should not be amended, or development allowed, merely because the land has become derelict. It explains that some areas within the green belt can be especially vulnerable to neglect or damage. Such areas may form an important part of the green belt and, if so, need to be protected and maintained.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will give the total acreage of green belt land currently in the Greater London council area, and publish its location in the Official Report;

(2) if he will give the total acreage of green belt land currently in the Greater London council area for each year since 1978-79 to 1984-85.

Mr. Macfarlane: Calculations in 1975 estimated that about 34,000 hectares of land in Greater London were designated as green belt. More recent figures are not available. The general extent of the green belt is shown in the Greater London development plan, approved in 1976, and detailed boundaries are given in local plans.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report an estimate of (a) total acreage of green belt land in Essex and (b) total acreage of land designated for housing development in Essex.

Mr. Macfarlane: My Department does not have the information on which to base such estimates.

Wildlife Inspectorate

Mrs. Currie asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the wildlife inspectorate.

Mr. Waldegrave: I informed the House on 12 December that there had been allegations against a member of the wildlife inspectorate. With the full co-operation of my Department, the allegations were investigated by the police who concluded that on the evidence available no action should be taken. However, all complaints that departmental business is not conducted properly are taken seriously and the directorate of establishments is therefore carrying out a review of the adequacy of the Department's existing procedures.

The work of the inspectorate is primarily to inspect the premises of keepers and breeders of protected birds: this is part of the bird registration system established by the Wildlife and Countryside Act, 1981 and regulations made under it. The Department also assists the Police and Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in their enforcement of the above legislation. The work has greatly increased, as we play our full part in wildlife protection and in fulfilling our obligations under the convention on international trade in endangered species. I have therefore called for a thorough review of the management and structure of the inspectorate to be carried out during the summer.

Housing (London)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment why he made changes in the proposals he originally put forward for the future of research on housing in London in the event of the Greater London council being abolished; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 20 May 1985]: There has been no change in the policy set out in the reply I gave to the hon. Member on 17 December, column 14. An amendment to the relevant clause in the Local Government Bill, now clause 86, has been tabled in another place to reinforce the arrangements for collective research by the London boroughs; but it remains for them to decide what research is necessary.

Parking Fines

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many fixed penalty parking fines have been paid out of departmental funds in each of the past three years.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 20 May 1985]: My Department has paid the following fines: 1 in 1982, 1 in 1983 and 3 in 1984.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Support Costs

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the cost to the Exchequer of support to United Kingdom agriculture, as follows (a) gross cost and (b) cost net of all refunds; and if he will show (b) as a percentage of gross domestic product, for the years 1960-61, 1970-71, 1980-81, 1981-82, 1982-83, 1983-84 and 1984-85.

Mr. MacGregor: I will reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Annual Review White Paper

Mr. Gould asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to what factors he attributes the difference in trend between England and the other countries of the United Kingdom in agricultural land prices and rents, as shown in table 25 of the annual review White Paper, Cmnd. 9243.

Mrs. Fenner: It is not possible to say which factors mainly determine changes in average land prices in the different countries of the United Kingdom. A large number of influences is normally at work simultaneously —for example, location, quality, profitability in farming and strength of the local market, including whether or not planning permission is available. Also, when numbers of sales in an area are small, the average price for a particular period can be heavily influenced by one or two large transactions. Agricultural rents are generally determined locally by periodic reviews in which landowners or their agents negotiate with tenants.

Licences

Mr. Ashdown asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list in the Official Report all the different types of licences operated or granted by his Department and the year in which they first came into operation.

Mr. Jopling: The main areas for which licences are currently issued by my Department are as follows: Under the Medicines Act 1968, the Animal Health Act 1981, the Animal Health and Welfare Act 1984 and subordinate legislation made under them for control over the movement of animals, including poultry and birds, meat and animal products and in relation to their importation. Controls are also applied under this legislation to feedingstuffs, animal medicines and vaccines, to the collection, processing and use of porcine and bovine semen and for the purpose of protecting the welfare of animals in transit.

For Fisheries my Department and the other United Kingdom Fisheries Departments issue a wide range of licences to permit fishing by British fishing boats for those stocks listed in the Sea Fish Licensing Order 1983, as varied. The licences may cover one or more species or area and may be revoked and reissued from time to time in accordance with the requirements of EC conservation and quota regulations and of United Kingdom quota management arrangements. Other licences are issued under the Receiving of Trans-shipped Sea Fish (Licensing) Order 1982, as varied; the Diseases of Fish Act 1937 for the importation of live freshwater fish and their eggs; the Molluscan Shellfish (Control of Deposit) Order 1974, operational 1965; the Lobsters (Control of Deposit) Order 1981; and, since 1982, the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 to permit releases into the wild of fish and shellfish.

From 1982, also under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, my Department has been empowered to issue licences for the killing or taking of protected birds and mammals causing certain types of damage. There are similar powers in relation to badgers, operational since 1982, under the Badgers Act 1973. Since 1962, licences have also been issued for the keeping of mink and coypu under the Destructive Imported Animals Act 1932.

Licences under the provisions of the Dumping at Sea Act 1974 authorise the deposit of material in the sea and the use of oil dispersants. Certificates of authorisation to dispose of radioactive waste are issued under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960. Licences control the burning of heather and grass under regulations that have operated from 1949.

Under the Plant Health Act 1967, general and specific licences are issued to permit the import of plants meeting certain conditions; and seven orders made between 1957 and 1978 provide for the sale, use, delivery, and planting of material in relation to plant disease endemic in the United Kingdom. An eighth order under the Plant Varieties and Seeds Act 1964 makes similar provision for seed potatoes. The Plant Varieties and Seeds Act 1964 also allows the issuing of compulsory licences concerning proprietary rights of plant varieties. Licences under the Seeds (Registration and Licensing) Regulations 1974, operational 1974, cover crop inspectors, seed samplers and the operation of seed testing stations. Five general licences, normally applicable to everybody rather than individuals, are in operation under the Seeds Marketing Regulations to relax the provisions of seeds regulations.

Four licences are issued in connection with bees; the movement of bees and beekeeping equipment from premises subject to a standstill notice; the exemption of persons involved in research or training from the provisions of bee diseases legislation, both operational 1942; the import of queen bees and attendant workers, operational 1980; and the import of bees for research purposes, operational 1983.

Under European Community regulations, licences have been necessary for most trade in agricultural products with non-member countries.

Agricultural Land (Thurrock)

Dr. McDonald asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will provide an analysis of the grades of agricultural land in Thurrock, together with an estimate of the acreage of each grade.

Mr. Jopling: From the published one inch to one mile agricultural land classification maps of the Thurrock borough council area, our estimate of the grades and acreage of agricultural land in Thurrock is as follows:

	Acres
Grade 1	1,510
Grade 2	6,200
Grade 3	14,800
Grade 4	790
Urban and non-agricultural	17,170
Total	40,470

Beef

Sir Peter Mills asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will announce the 1985-86 target price scale for the beef variable premium scheme.

Mr. MacGregor: I am sure that hon. Members on all sides of the House have welcomed my right hon. Friend's achievement in securing agreement in the Council of Ministers on the continuation of the beef variable premium scheme for the 1985-86 marketing year. After long and hard negotiations, the premium has been kept on unchanged terms and conditions. The target price scale for 1985-86 will be as follows:

Intervention Stores

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will provide a complete list of United Kingdom and European Community agricultural produce in public intervention and assisted private storage in England and their value at the latest available date.

Mr. Jopling [pursuant to his reply, 7 May 1985, c. 322]: Intervention stocks in England on 31 March, the latest date for which figures are available, were as follows, values calculated at the buying-in price current at that date:

Commodity	Tonnes	£ million
Beef	32,824	79·75
Breadmaking wheat	81,072	10·71
Barley	626,001	77·74
Feedwheat	2,873,191	356·79
Butter	100,746	194·40
Skimmed Milk Powder	29,941	30·73

At the end of March, there was no butter or pigmeat in assisted private storage in England. The quantity of beef is not recorded and calculation would involve disproportionate cost.

Sugar

Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is satisfied with the prospects for the sugar sector of the agricultural industry.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 16 May 1985, c. 206]: Yes. The area planted for next season's sugar beet crop in the United Kingdom is estimated to show a fractional increase on this season's area, which itself produced our second highest ever output of sugar from home-grown beet.

PRIME MINISTER

Soviet Jews (Emigration)

Q67. Mr. Latham asked the Prime Minister what action is being taken by Her Majesty's Government, in diplomatic negotiations with the Soviet Union, to assist emigration by Soviet Jews to Israel.

The Prime Minister: Both I and my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary raised these questions with Mr. Gorbachev last December. The Conference of Security and Co-operation in Europe experts' meeting on human rights which opened in Ottawa on 7 May and the meeting on human contacts in Berne next year will provide further opportunities to press the Soviet Union to fulfil their Helsinki commitments on family reunification.

Dalton

Q78. Mr. Sheerman asked the Prime Minister if she will pay an official visit to Dalton in Huddersfield.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Engagements

Mr. Marlow asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 21 May.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 21 May.

Mr. Leigh asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 21 May.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others including one with 26 leading industrialists to discuss their role in the Government's policy to increase the number of engineering and technology students. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today including one with the Prime Minister of Finland. This evening I shall be giving a dinner for the Prime Minister of Finland.

TRANSPORT

Woolwich Ferry

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport what response he has received from the London boroughs of Greenwich and Newham to his suggestion that they should take over the running of the Woolwich ferry after the abolition of the Greater London council.

Mrs. Chalker: Newham has written referring to the need for further information on financial and other implications. We have not as yet had a reply from Greenwich.

Roads (Design Standards)

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list schemes from the 1983 roads White Paper whose design standard is being re-examined as a result of his Department's new traffic forecasts.

Mrs. Chalker: All trunk road schemes in England are being examined in the light of the revised traffic forecasts. Most are unlikely to require a change in design standard.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has about the incidence of offences relating to goods vehicles exceeding the maximum 38-tonne weight limit.

Mrs. Chalker: Separate records of offences relating to goods vehicles exceeding the 38 tonne weight limit are not available.

Bottesford Bypass

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will list the reasons for his failure to publish draft orders for the A52 bypass round Bottesford, Leicesterhire, following the announcement on the preferred route in December 1982, the public exhibition in July 1983 and the reply by the Minister of State on 31 July 1984 that orders would be published in the spring of the current year; and whether he will now expedite this matter.

Mrs. Chalker: The delay in publishing the draft orders for the A52 bypass, Bottesford, has been caused by lengthy negotiations about the future of a disused railway line which the preferred route crosses. I can confirm what I said in my answer of 1 April that we expect to publish the draft orders this summer. Despite our efforts, a spring publication could not be achieved.

Railway Lines and Stations

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many railway stations or railway lines previously closed to passenger or goods traffic have been reopened following the implementation of the Transport Act 1962 (Amendment) Act 1981.

Mr. David Mitchell: I understand from the British Railways Board that 12 stations and one passenger service have been opened or re-opened on an experimental basis under the 1981 Act.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he is yet able to announce the date of the public inquiry into the proposed east London river crossing.

Mrs. Chalker: I am pleased to announce that the public local inquiries will start on Tuesday 10 September 1985 at the town hall, Wellington street, Woolwich, before Major-General M. E. Tickell, CBE, MC, MA, C.Eng., FICE, an inspector nominated by the Lord Chancellor.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police Vehicles (Accident Statistics)

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in the Official Report for 1983, 1984 and 1985, respectively, (a) the number of police officers (i) killed and (ii) seriously injured in car crashes while pursuing offenders and (b) the number of other people (i) killed and (ii) seriously injured in road accidents by police vehicles pursuing offenders.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost, but I would refer the hon. Member to the replies given to questions by my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Bruinvels) on 13 May at columns 7-8, in which certain information was given in respect of the Metropolitan police.

Jonathan Michael Bloch

Mr. Ernie Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to reach a decision on the re-application of Mr. Jonathan Michael Bloch for indefinite leave to remain and the renewal of his travel document; what are the reasons for the delay in reaching a decision; and what representations he has received since June 1984 on Mr. Bloch's case.

Mr. Waddington: Mr. Bloch's application is at present under consideration but it raises important issues and I am not yet in a position to say when a decision will be reached. Since June 1984 representations on Mr. Bloch's case have been received from the hon. Member, from Mr. Bloch's employers, from his solicitors, from African Refugee Housing Action Limited, and from Hackney borough council.

Cumbria Police

Mr. Maclean asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the establishment of the Cumbria police force on 31 March; what was the actual strength on the same date; to what factors he attributes the difference between the two figures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The authorised establishment of the Cumbria constabulary is 1,128, an increase of 40 since May 1979. The strength of the force was 1,092 on 31 March 1985. Police manpower levels fluctuate from month to month because of different recruiting and wastage patterns, seasonal changes and other local reasons. I understand that there was further recruitment to the force in April 1985, and the present strength is 1,101. The number of full-time civilian staff in the force has increased by 42 to 260 since May 1979, including an additional 16 during the past year.

Shoplifting

Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will introduce legislation to restrict the power of the courts to remand in custody persons accused of shoplifting; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to do so. The Bail Act 1976 already creates a presumption in favour of the grant of bail to defendants in criminal proceedings generally, and a court may withhold bail only if satisfied that one of the prescribed exceptions to the right to bail exists.

Remand Prisoners (Court and Police Cells)

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in the Official Report the correspondence he has received since the beginning of 1984 on the use of police and court cells to hold remand prisoners.

Mr. Mellor: No.

Durham Police Force

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the establishment of the Durham police force on 31 March 1985; what was its actual strength on that date; to what reason he ascribes the difference between the two figures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The authorised establishment of the Durham constabulary is 1,357, an increase of 8 since May 1979. The strength of the force was 1,279 on 31 March 1985. Police manpower levels fluctuate from month to month because of different recruiting and wastage patterns, seasonal changes and other local reasons. Because of budgetary decisions by the police authority, the Durham constabulary has had an increasing number of vacancies in the last two years, but I understand that there was further recruitment in April 1985, and the present strength is 1,291. The number of full-time civilian staff in the force has increased by 15 to 440 in the last year.

Television Licence Fee

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what he expects to be the effect of the licence fee settlement on employment in the BBC; and if any estimate has been provided to him of job losses.

Mr. Giles Shaw: As my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary made clear when he announced the new television licence fees on 27 March — columns 479-481 — the licence fee settlement should allow the BBC to maintain its present level and range of services while its ability to enhance its services will depend very largely on the degree to which it achieves improvements in efficiency. It is for the corporation to decide how to use the money available to it, and we have neither seen nor asked for estimates of the likely level of staffing following the settlement.

Missing Persons.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what facilities the police national computer provides for recording details of missing persons under the age of 18 years and of other vulnerable missing persons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The police national computer provides a wanted/missing persons' file, on which forces may record data about missing persons under the age of 18 and all adults who have disappeared or unaccountably left home in circumstances which make it seem likely that they have come to some harm.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in the Official Report the advice on the use and updating of information held on the police national computer regarding details of missing persons under the age of 18 years and of other vulnerable missing persons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Advice to chief officers on the use and updating of this file is contained in the code of practice for the protection of personal data held on the police national computer, a copy of which is in the Library. Records of missing persons are kept for a minimum of 10 weeks unless the subject is found. Individual records may be retained for a longer period at the discretion of the chief officer concerned.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, pursuant to the answer of 22 April, Official Report, column 323, he will provide a breakdown of the missing persons figures in each column of table 2 according to the following age groups: under 14, 14 to 16 and 16 to 18 years.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 14 May, c. 92]: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the available information is as given in the following table; statistics are not readily available for the age groups specified. The procedures for the recording of persons who were missing for only a short period were improved in 1984 and this may have increased the numbers recorded by the missing persons bureau; at the end of 1984 the numbers recorded as missing—150 aged under 14, and 240 aged 14 to 17—were lower than those a year earlier at the end of 1983—220 aged under 14, and 420 aged 14 to 17.

*Persons aged less than 18 recorded as missing by the missing persons bureau of the Metropolitan police†

Year	Recorded as missing‡		Traced or identified‖
	Aged under 14	Aged 14 to 17	Aged under 14	Aged 14 to 17
1979	590	3,000	500	2,720
1980	640	3,270	460	2,850
1981	620	2,620	450	2,360
1982	770	3,570	450	3,010
1983¶	690	3,260	460	2,840
1984¶●	1,240	2,860	1,090	2,620

* Includes some cases reported by police forces other than the Metropolitan police.
† The same person may be reported missing more than once.
‡ Includes some persons first reported missing in previous years.
‖ Includes persons traced who were first reported missing in previous years.
¶ Excludes persons reported as missing from overseas (58 in 1984).
● Figures for 1984 may have been increased by improved procedures for recording those missing for only a short period.

Subtitles (Television)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will hold discussions with the British Broadcasting Corporation and independent television companies about increasing the use of subtitles on television to help deaf people;

(2) if he will make a special grant to the broadcasting authorities for the extension of subtitles on television to help deaf people.

Mr. Giles Shaw: As soon as teletext technology became available, both the British Broadcasting Corporation and the Independent Broadcasting Authority recognised and began to exploit its potential for providing subtitles to television programmes in order to improve their enjoyment by deaf people. The broadcasting authorities are still developing their resources for this purpose. In 1984 subtitles were provided on averaged for about 26 hours per week, and I understand that there are plans over the next five years to subtitle all major pre-recorded programmes which are broadcast at peak times. Work is also in hand by the authorities to develop effective systems for subtitling live programmes.

I do not believe that it is appropriate for the Government to grant-aid this work, nor do I see any necessity for the Government to discuss these matters with the broadcasters at the present time.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information is available about offences relating to vehicle excise duty in each year since 1981; and what information is, in particular, available about such offences in respect of goods vehicles.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have been asked to reply. The following is the information available:

	Total VED Offence Reports received	Offenders prosecuted or penalised during year	Fines penalties and VED arrears recovered £ million
1981	1,170,000	169,000	7·2
1982	1,257,000	198,000	9·4
1983	1,185,000	253,000	14·6
1984	1,010,000	291,000	18·05

Separate statistics relating to VED offences involving goods vehicles are not readily available.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Schools (Bradford)

6. Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools in the Bradford metropolitan district were built before 1900.

Mr. Dunn: One hundred; of these, 16 have been substantially remodelled in the past 10 years or are being remodelled at present.

16-Plus Examination

17. Mr. Watson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he is satisfied with the progress being made towards the introduction of a unified 16-plus examination.

Mr. Dunn: Yes.

Academic and Related Salaries

20. Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will establish an independent committee of inquiry into academic and related salaries.

Sir Keith Joseph: I have no intention of changing the current arrangements for negotiating the salaries of academic staff employed by the universities.

Youth Training Scheme

21. Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what will be the education and training content of the second year of the youth training scheme.

Sir Keith Joseph: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment has invited the Manpower Services Commission to consult and report back to him by the end of June 1985 on the content, funding and administration of an expanded and developed youth training scheme.

26. Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the educational content of the second year of the youth training scheme.

Sir Keith Joseph: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman).

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many youth training scheme trainees in each of the modes were attending further education colleges in Great Britain, divided by (a) local education authority and (b) individual college establishment at the most recent date for which figures are available.

Sir Keith Joseph: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Teachers (Pay)

22. Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to meet the leaders of the teachers' unions to discuss pay.

Sir Keith Joseph: None. I met representatives of the local authority employers on 9 May and made clear beforehand that I was agreeable to their suggestion that union leaders should accompany them to the meeting. The union representatives declined to attend.

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the average rate of pay per day worked by a school teacher.

Sir Keith Joseph: The length of a teacher's working year is not specified by regulation or national agreement, nor does the Department collect information on current practice. Maintained schools are required to open for at least 190 days, but some teachers undertake out-of-term work in connection with sport, travel, examination results and placement for further study. A 38-week year is therefore a minimum assumption. Subject to that qualification, the average rate of pay per day worked based on the average salary for full-time teachers in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools in England and Wales is approximately £50 gross.

Teachers (Dispute)

23. Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has received any new representations from any of the teachers' unions regarding the present teachers' industrial dispute.

Sir Keith Joseph: No.

34. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress has been made in resolving the dispute with teachers over salaries and conditions of employment; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph: I refer my hon. Friend to the answers I gave earlier today to the hon. Members for Gainsborough and Horncastle (Mr. Leigh), for Coventry, South-East (Mr. Nellist), for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock), for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway), for Warwickshire, North (Mr. Maude), for Langbaurgh (Mr. Holt), and for Newport, East (Mr. Hughes).

41. Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the teachers' strike.

Sir Keith Joseph: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Members for Gainsborough and Horncastle (Mr. Leigh), for Coventry, South-East (Mr. Nellist), for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock), for Warwickshire, North (Mr. Maude), for Langbaurgh (Mr. Holt), and Newport East (Mr. Hughes).

32. Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will seek an early meeting with the Association of County Councils to discuss the teachers' pay dispute.

Sir Keith Joseph: I met representatives of the local authorities, including the Association of County Councils, on 9 May. I have no present plans for further meetings with the associations about teachers' pay.

Nurse Training

24. Dr. Mawhinney asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has had any representations from universities or tertiary education colleges regarding the Royal College of Nursing's proposals for nurse training.

Sir Keith Joseph: No.

School Laboratories (Visual Aids)

25. Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress has been made in providing visual aids as alternatives to the use of animals as teaching aids in school laboratories.

Mr. Dunn: Some material of this type is available, but decisions on its use are for the schools themselves.

High-technology Specialists

27. Mr. Randall asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he will next meet the chairman of the Manpower Services Commission to discuss shortfalls in the supply of high-technology specialists.

Sir Keith Joseph: I and officials of the Department are in regular contact with the chairman of the Manpower Services Commission and his staff about matters of mutual interest.

Schoolchildren's Strike

28. Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the number of schoolchildren who took part in the strike by schoolchildren on 25 April and the number of schools involved.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend strongly deplores the action taken by schoolchildren on 25 April in Liverpool and a number of other local education authority areas. However, it is for schools and the authorities which maintain them to register the absences of pupils, and this information is not available centrally.

Open University Council

29. Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he will next meet the officers and members of the Open University council.

Sir Keith Joseph: I have no plans for such a meeting, although I expect to meet officers who are also members of the council when I visit the university on 17 July.

Mathematics Teaching

30. Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to hold consultations with teachers' representatives on the changes in the teaching of mathematics proposed in the recent report of Her Majesty's inspectors of schools.

Mr. Dunn: Copies of the discussion document "Mathematics from 5 to 16" have been sent to all maintained schools and to a range of national bodies, including the teachers' associations. HMI has invited comments by the end of July 1985. I am sure that teachers, both individually and through their associations, will wish to respond to this invitation.

Higher Education (Access)

31. Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if it remains his policy to maintain access to higher education for those who want it and are suitably qualified.

Mr. Brooke: The Government's policy on access to higher education will be set out in a Green Paper to be published later today.

Higher Education and Student Grants

33. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he now expects to publish the Green Paper on higher education and student grants.

Mr. Brooke: The Green Paper on the future development of higher education will be published later today. A consultative paper on student support arrangements will be published shortly.

Mature Students

35. Mr. Dormand asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he is satisfied with the number of mature students who have entered higher education since 1979.

Mr. Brooke: Yes. The number of home full-time initial entrants to higher education in Great Britain aged 21 and over increased from 34,300 in 1979 to 39,000 in 1983, or 13·7 per cent.

Her Majesty's Inspectorate

36. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how often it is expected that a member of Her Majesty's inspectorate will visit each school; and to which people a copy of the inspector's report is normally sent.

Sir Keith Joseph: Each year Her Majesty's inspectorate carries out about 250 formal inspections of schools and colleges. Their reports are issued first to the heads, governors and maintaining LEAs of the institutions inspected; a fortnight later, they are published. Additionally, Her Majesty's inspectors visit each year about four fifths of secondary schools, one fifth of primary schools and nearly all colleges of further education, either as part of broad national surveys of certain aspects of educational provision or to keep in touch with developments in the particular institution. At the end of these visits Her Majesty's inspectors report orally to the head on what they found, but the visits do not lead to published reports.

Burnham Committee

37. Mr. Haselhurst asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a further statement on his plans to re-constitute the Burnham committee.

Sir Keith Joseph: I plan to complete a review of the teachers' panel of the Burnham primary and secondary committee before the end of this calendar year. I cannot anticipate its possible outcome.

38. Sir William van Straubenzee asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science by what date he has requested the teachers' unions to supply him with the total number of their paid-up members as part of his current review of the composition of the teachers' panel of the Burnham committee.

Sir Keith Joseph: The teacher associations have been asked to provide a statement of the number of their fully paid-up and relevant members by 30 June 1985.

40. Mr. Barnett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will refer to an independent body his proposed review of the composition of the teachers' panel of the Burnham committee.

Sir Keith Joseph: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Cambridgeshire, North-East (Mr. Freud) on 14 May at column 106.

Universities (Grants)

39. Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will compare, at 1984-85 prices, the level of recurrent grant allocation to universities in 1984-85 and that currently proposed for 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: At 1984-85 prices, recurrent grant allocated to universities on the advice of the University Grants Committee will decrease by 5·2 per cent. between the financial years 1984-85 and 1987-88. The comparison does not take account of the additional provision for the new engineering and technology programme announced on 19 March 1985.

Disabled Children

42. Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress has been made in improving educational provision for disabled children.

Mr. Dunn: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Easington (Mr. Dormand) on 22 January 1985 at column 844.

Remuneration of Teachers Act

43. Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many representations he has received regarding changes to the Remuneration of Teachers Act.

Sir Keith Joseph: The Department received requests regarding changes to the Remuneration of Teachers Act 1965 from three organisations.

University Teachers (Salaries)

44. Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he next expects to meet the chairman of the University Grants Committee to discuss the funding of salaries of university teachers.

Sir Keith Joseph: I meet the chairman of the University Grants Committee as the need arises, but I have no current plans for such a meeting.

School Reorganisation (Trafford)

45. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he was last in communication with the borough of Trafford concerning school reorganisation.

Mr. Dunn: Following my right hon. Friend's decision to reject proposals from the Salford Roman Catholic diocesan trustees, for the reorganisation of Roman Catholic secondary schools in north Trafford on 30 October 1984, the Department wrote to both the Salford Roman Catholic diocese and the borough of Trafford to explain that my right hon. Friend's decision was in no way intended to endorse the status quo. The letter also offered a meeting with officials of the Department if both parties considered that would be helpful, and this was held on 17 December 1984.

Mandatory Awards

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what are the reasons for the delay in publishing details of the rates and grants for mandatory awards in the current year;

(2) what assessment he has made of the impact of the delay in publishing details of mandatory grants on students going to college this autumn.

Sir Keith Joseph: My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State announced on 14 November 1984, at column 238 that the main rates of grant for mandatory awards in 1985-86 would be increased by around 3 per cent. An announcement of the details of the new rates of grant, which has been delayed by the need to consult other interested Government Departments, will be made very soon. I am well aware of the difficulties for local education authorities and students which can be occasioned by late publication of the detailed rates, and I much appreciate the efforts which the authorities make each year to ensure that award holders receive their grants on time.

Playgroups

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what research his Department is sponsoring into the effect on children's educational achievement of previous attendance at pre-school playgroups; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: A research project by Professor Neville Butler of Bristol university has just been completed. The research concerned the association of pre-school educational experience with subsequent cognitive development, educational achievement and behavioural adjustment. I understand that it included children with pre-school playgroup experience. We expect to receive Professor Butler's report shortly.

My right hon. Friend announced on 27 February 1985 at column 180 that he had commissioned a critical evaluation of research into the education of under-fives undertaken over recent years from Professor Margaret Clark of Birmingham university.

Chapter 4 of "Better Schools" — Cmnd. 9469 — comments on the role of playgroups within the context of the education of the under-fives.

Institute of Hearing Research

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he is satisfied with the adequacy of the funding of the Institute of Hearing Research.

Mr. Brooke: The Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid through the Department, is the main Government agency for the promotion of medical research in the United Kingdom. It is for the council to decide on the distribution of the resources available to it between research in the various areas of science, including work undertaken at its own units of which the Institute of Hearing Research is one.

EMPLOYMENT

Truck Acts

Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for Employment when he intends to introduce legislation to repeal the Truck Acts.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We intend to introduce legislation to repeal the Truck Acts and to replace them by up-to-date provisions concerning deductions from pay as soon as the parliamentary timetable permits.

Community Programme (Warwickshire)

Mr. Park asked the Secretary of State for Employment what statistics are kept of the ethnic composition of community programme participants; and if he will provide details on the community programme schemes covered by the Coventry and Warwickshire area manpower board.

Mr. Peter Morrison: There are no statistics on the ethnic composition of workers on community programme projects in Coventry and Warwickshire, because entrants to the programme are not classified by ethnic origin. However, national sample surveys, taken at six monthly intervals, indicate that between 4 and 9 per cent. of participants are from ethnic minorities.

Job Release

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Employment what were the amounts and percentages by which the job release allowances for (a) able-bodied people and (b) disabled people were uprated in April; what is the justification for the difference in treatment of disabled people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The job release scheme does not have separate rates of allowance for disabled and able-bodied people. If allowances under the job release scheme are payable for more than one year, then they are subject to tax. Allowances payable for less than a year are comparable but tax-free. In each category, there is a higher and lower level allowance, depending upon marriage and the spouse's weekly income.

Home Purchase and Improvement Grants

Mr. Sedgemore asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) for 1983 what was the number of households in England and Wales, Great Britain and the United Kingdom for whom payment for the purchase or alteration of their dwelling was the following percentage or greater of gross normal income (a) 15 per cent., (b) 18 per cent., (c) 20 per cent., (d) 25 per cent. and (e) 30 per cent.;

(2) for 1983 what was the number of households in England and Wales, Great Britain and the United Kingdom for whom payment for the purchase or alteration of their dwelling was the following percentage or greater of normal disposable income (a) 15 per cent., (b) 18 per cent., (c) 20 per cent., (d) 25 per cent. and (e) 30 per cent.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The latest information on the percentage of household income spent on the purchase or alteration of dwellings relates to owner-occupier households in the family expenditure survey for 1982. The following table sets out the figures in respect of gross normal income and normal disposable income. Households in the owner-occupied sector accounted for 56 per cent. of all households in the 1982 survey.

Percentage of households

*Proportion spent on purchase or alteration of dwellings	Gross normal household income			Normal household disposable income
	England and Wales	Great Britain	United Kingdom	England and Wales	Great Britain	United Kingdom
15 per cent. or greater	17·8	17·8	17·6	24·6	24·8	24·5
18 per cent. or greater	12·1	12·1	11·9	18·7	18·8	18·5
20 per cent. or greater	9·1	9·0	8·9	14·6	14·6	14·4
25 per cent. or greater	4·8	4·7	4·6	8·4	8·3	8·1
30 per cent. or greater	2·8	2·8	2·7	4·9	4·8	4·7

* This includes the outright purchase of houses, flats and caravans, including deposits; instalments on loans or mortgages (covering capital repayment and/or interest); and expenditure on structural alterations and additions to dwellings, including structural space heating systems.

Departmental Committees of Inquiry

Mr. Eggar asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many departmental committees of inquiry he and his predecessors, including Ministers of Labour and Secretaries of State for Employment and Productivity, have commissioned since 1955; and what were the subjects the committees investigated, the dates they were established, who chaired them and the dates they reported.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [pursuant to his reply, 7 May 1985, c. 360]: Following is a list of committees which have been identified as having reported since 1955. The list excludes advisory committees, departmental working parties, inquiries carried out under industrial courts and wages councils legislation and inquiries undertaken by one individual.

Job Creation

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table showing the number of additional jobs for (a) employees and (b) self-employed that were created in (i) Scotland, (ii) England and (iii) Wales in the calendar years 1983 and 1984; and if he will publish similar tables for the number of part-time and full-time jobs created; and for men and women, respectively.

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 20 May 1985, c. 299]: Information about job gains and job losses is not available from the Department's statistics, but an indication of the net changes can be seen by comparing levels of employees in employment and the self-employed at different dates. The following table gives the available information showing changes between December each year. Analyses of full-time and part-time jobs are only available for female employees in employment. The self employment figures are derived from the labour force survey which has only a small sample in Scotland and Wales.

Elderly and Handicapped People

Mr. Kilfedder asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what future provision is being made to provide one hot meal each day for the elderly and handicapped in the North Down and Ards area;

(2) what assessment he has made of the consequences of the proposal by the North Down and Ards unit of management to close the social centres in Killinchy, Ballywater, Greyabbey, Comber, Newtownards (Manor Court), Portaferry, Millisle and Bangor at the end of June.

Mr. Chris Patten: While the Department of Health and Social Services is responsible for the allocation of funds to the four health and social services boards, decisions on the allocation of resources to the units of management and decisions relating to the provision of specific services in the light of competing pressures and priorities are matters for determination by each board.

Medical Cards

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applications for new medical cards were received, and how many cards were issued, in each of the six weeks preceding the local elections in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Scott: The Central Services Agency does not normally maintain records on the issue of medical cards in this way. However, figures for replacement medical cards in the two weeks immediately preceding the Northern Ireland local elections on 15 May are available and are as follows:

	Applications	Issues
1-7 May	27,784	22,970
8-14 May	18,091	24,167

SOCIAL SERVICES

Thoracic Medicine (Consultants)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many consultants in thoracic medicine there were per million population in (a) England and (b) the United Kingdom in (i) 1971, (ii) 1979 and (iii) 1984.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not have the information for all the years on a United Kingdom basis. The table gives the number of consultants in thoracic medicine per million population for (a) England and (b) Great Britain at 30 September each year.

	Thoracic Medicine Consultants per million popluation
	1971	1979	1984
England	6·7	4·8	3·0
Great Britain	7·0	5·1	3·3

Benefits

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services in what circumstances interest is paid on overdue benefit payments.

Mr. Whitney: There is no statutory provision for the payment of interest on overdue benefit payments. Since 1977, however, following a recommendation from the Select Committee on the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration, the Department has made ex gratia payments of interest in cases where payment of benefit was delayed as a direct result of clear and unambiguous Departmental error. The precise criteria for payment were agreed with the Parliamentary Commissioner, and follow closely the statutory provisions for payment of interest on overpayments of tax.

Cervical Screening

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer of 29 April, Official Report, columns 49-51 about cervical screening and the Minister for Health's press release No. 85/113 of that date, which health authorities are currently using computers for call and which for recall only; what are the estimated dates on which those health authorities having firm plans to computerise expect to do so; which health authorities have a backlog of more than three months in processing smear tests in pathology laboratories; and if he will list the health authorities with the best record for providing women with cervical cancer screening and the criteria on which this assessment was made.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The information available relates to family practitioner committees acting on behalf of health authorities and is as follows:

Computerised cervical cytology call and recall (CR): — Liverpool, Barking, Havering and Brentwood, Isle of Wight, Rochdale, Calderdale, Derbyshire, Devon, Bedfordshire, Dorset, Gloucestershire, Cleveland, Sandwell.

Computerised cervical cytology recall only (R): — Cornwall and Isles of Scilly, Avon, Stockport, Norfolk, Buckinghamshire, Northampton, Rotherham, Kent, Croydon, Wigan.

FPC's with plans to computerise and estimated dates:

Buckinghamshire	CR	1 July 1985
Northampton	CR	1 July 1985
Rotherham	CR	1 January 1986
Croydon	CR	1 June 1985
Wigan	CR	1 December 1985
Durham	R	1 July 1985
Suffolk	R	1 July 1985
Bromley	R	1 December 1985
North Tyneside	R	1 January 1986
Leicestershire	CR	1 June 1985
Northumberland	CR	1 June 1985
Nottingham	CR	1 August 1985
Warwickshire	CR	1 August 1985
Coventry	CR	1 October 1985
Kirklees	CR	1 October 1985
Hampshire	CR	1 December 1985
Hereford and Worcester	CR	1 December 1985
Wiltshire	CR	10 December 1985

We do not have the detailed local information requested on laboratory work load.

We do not maintain a league table of performance by health authorities in cervical cytology. We are however concerned that some authorities have not fully implemented the guidance set out in health circulars (81)14 and (84)17, and my recent announcement was based on the need to ensure that all health authorities run an effective cervical screening programme.

Fraud

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the reply of 8 May, Official Report, column 447, if he will estimate the approximate proportion of the total number of investigations by staff of his Department, in the year ended 12 February, into cases of actual or suspected fraud by social security claimants that led to reduction or termination of benefit payments; and how his estimate takes account of (a) the cases where prosecution was authorised by his Department and (b) the additional cases where prosecution was brought by the police.

Mr. Whitney: It is estimated that benefit was reduced or terminated in approximately 23 per cent. of the cases investigated by local office staff for suspected benefit fraud. That estimate includes prosecutions brought by the Department and the police.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the reply of 8 May, Official Report, column 447, if he will estimate the approximate total number of investigations by staff of his Department, in the year ended 12 February, into actual or suspected fraud by social security claimants.

Mr. Whitney: Approximately 275,000.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the organisation of investigations by staff of his Department into cases of actual or suspected fraud by social security claimants; and if he will describe the relationship of work done by special investigation teams to work done by local office staff.

Mr. Whitney: The way in which the Department organises its investigations and the relationship between fraud specialists form part of the instructions and guidance set out in the fraud investigators' guide. In this connection, therefore, I would refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 23 April at column 418.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether there are arrangements whereby local office staff of his Department, working on investigations into cases of actual or suspected fraud by social security claimants, may refer problems to specialist staff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: Yes, guidance is given in the operational instructions issued to all fraud investigators.

Glaucoma

Mr. Loyden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the amount of money at present being provided by his Department for research into the treatment and cure of glaucoma.

Mr. John Patten: Research into the treatment and cure of glaucoma is regarded as biomedical and as such comes within the ambit of the Medical Research Council, which is funded from the science budget of the Department of Education and Science. This Department is not therefore supporting any relevant research.

Mr. Loyden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the number of glaucoma patients who underwent sclerotomy in the National Health Service in 1983 and 1984;

(2) if he will give the numbers of glaucoma patients at present being treated within the National Health Service.

Mr. John Patten: We do not have information in precisely the form requested. Most cases of glaucoma are treated as out-patients, for whom we have no diagnostic information. In 1983, the latest year for which we have information, there were an estimated 12,080 — provisional—in-patient cases treated in NHS hospitals in England with a main diagnosis of glaucoma. The number of such cases who underwent sclerotomy is not available from the sample information.

Mr. Loyden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what research his Department is sponsoring, or is aware of, into the early detection of glaucoma.

Mr. Brooke: I have been asked to reply.

The Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid through the Department, is the main Government agency for the promotion of medical research in the United Kingdom. I understand that in the financial year 1983-84 the council spent £2·9 million on research relating to vision. Of this, approximately £120,000 was spent on projects which could be relevant to glaucoma. The MRC is always willing to consider soundly based research proposals for support through its grants schemes in competition with other applications.

Research work relevant to the detection of glaucoma may also be conducted in universities and medical schools using funds allocated for teaching and research on the advice of the University Grants Committee but details of such work are not collected centrally. The medical charities may also be funding work in this field.

Water (Nitrate)

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, further to the answer to the hon. Member for Knowsley, North on 24 April. Official Report, columns 495-6, he will indicate areas where low nitrate water was provided for infant feeding because concentrations of nitrate exceeded 100 milligrams per litre in the drinking water.

Mr. John Patten: We are not aware of any instances in the last five years.

Private Residential Homes

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many private residential homes for the elderly have been deregistered in Suffolk in each of the years 1979 to 1985.

Mr. John Patten: Information is not held centrally about registrations cancelled before 1 January 1985. The Department is keeping a list of persons whose registration is cancelled from that date. No notifications were received during the quarter ended 31 March 1985.

Subtitles (Television)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if the Minister for the disabled intends to take any steps to seek to increase the use of subtitles on television.

Mr. Newton: I am conscious of, and have stressed, the benefits of subtitles for many hearing impaired people and am pleased therefore that the broadcasting authorities are continuing to extend their use.

Wirral Council (Statutory Functions)

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to make a ruling on the reference made to him by Wirral Labour councillors on that council's failure to fulfil its statutory functions under section 2 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970.

Mr. Newton: The letter referred to was received on 9 May, and the legal issues which it raises are being considered. A reply will be sent as soon as possible.

Continence Advisers

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer of 16 May about continence advisers, if he will estimate the cost of collecting centrally information on the number of such advisers employed.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let the right hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when the new arrangements for the payment of unemployment benefit, foreshadowed in his uprating statement on 18 June 1984, will come into effect.

Mr. Newton: As my right hon. Friend told the House on 18 June 1984, we propose to change the basis of payment of unemployment benefit so that all new claimants will be paid for—nightly in arrears instead of one week in advance and one in arrears, as at present. This will not affect the amount of unemployment benefit properly paid to claimants, but it will cut out over-payments that are caused now by people returning to work during the advance payment period. Implementation of this change has been delayed because of other pressures on local offices and in particular the need to recover from the after-effects of the Newcastle computer dispute.

It will now be implemented from 15 July. The change will apply to claims processed from that date, but current cases will generally continue to be paid on the present basis.

Fostering

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidelines he issues to local authorities regarding the racial criteria to be used in the placement of children for fostering; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 16 May 1985, c. 226.]: The most suitable foster placement for a child is a matter of professional judgement and depends on the individual needs of the particular child. The racial, cultural and religious background of a child and of the foster parents is one element which the local authority needs to consider when deciding on a placement. This is referred to in the guide to fostering practice which was published by the Department in 1976 and in most respects still represents current professional practice. The statutory requirements governing the fostering of children in their care by local authorities are contained in the Boarding-Out of Children Regulations 1955 which are presently under review. We welcome the recent campaigns by local authorities and voluntary agencies to encourage applications from the ethnic minorities to come forward as prospective foster parents.

Drug Tests

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has regarding ethics committees established by drug companies to approve drug tests using healthy volunteers.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 20 May 1985]: We have no information about any such committees. We would expect proposals for such tests to be submitted to the appropriate ethics committee, which is usually constituted to serve the health district or the institution where the research will be undertaken.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Blood Donor Facilities

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Lord Privy Seal if any consideration has been given to the provision of a blood donor facility in the Palace of Westminster; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Biffen: This matter was last considered by the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee in 1980, when it was decided that no special provision could be made in the Palace of Westminster because of the lack of suitable accommodation which could be set aside for the transfusion unit. The north London centre of the blood transfusion service operates a two-day clinic in the Treasury once every six months when Members, their staff and staff of the House may give blood under arrangements made through the nursing sister.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Mr. Yuri Balovlenkov

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make representations to the Soviet authorities about the hunger strike of Mr. Yuri Balovlenkov, and press for him to be granted an exit visa to rejoin his family in America under the terms of the Helsinki final act 1975.

Mr. Rifkind: We have repeatedly made known our concern at the Soviet Union's failure to implement its human rights commitments under the Helsinki final act, including those which relate to family reunification. We shall continue to raise these matters in bilateral contacts with the Soviet authorities, and in the CSCE framework to ensure that individuals such as Mr. Balovlenkov and the many others like him are not forgotten.

Syria (President's Speech)

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has received from Her Majesty's ambassador in Damascus regarding the speech by President Hafez Al-Assad on 4 May to the National Federation of Syrian Students, in which he praised the Palestine National Salvation Front, the adoption of revolutionary uprisings, and opposition to any compromise settlement; and whether Her Majesty's ambassador has delivered any note to President Assad regarding the tone and content of this speech.

Mr. Luce: We are aware of Syria's support for the "Palestine National Salvation Front", and opposition to the agreement between King Hussein and Mr. Yasser Arafat of the Palestine Liberation Organisation to work for a negotiated settlement of the Arab-Israel dispute. For their part, the Syrian Government are aware that we welcome this agreement as a useful step, and shall continue to encourage constructive moves by the parties directly concerned.

Hong Kong

Sir Peter Blaker asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether a date for the ratification of the Hong Kong agreement has yet been set, and what progress has been made towards the establishment of the joint liaison group.

Mr. Luce: It was announced simultaneously in London and Peking today that, in accordance with the provisions of the Sino-British Joint Declaration on the Question of Hong Kong, the British and Chinese Governments have decided that instruments of ratification of the joint declaration will be exchanged in Peking on 27 May 1985. At the same time it was announced in London that the British members of the joint liaison group to be established upon the entry into force of the joint declaration will be:

Senior Representative:
Dr. D. C. Wilson CMG

Members:
Mr. E. P. Ho, CBE
Mr. J. D. I. Boyd, CMG
Mr. A. C. Galsworthy, CMG
Mr. P. A. B. Thomson

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Equipment Provision

46. Mr. Jack Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the Government have plans to improve the availability of computers and like equipment with the proper training for teachers, to primary and secondary schools in 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Butcher: Primary responsibility for the provision of computers and like equipment in schools rests with local education authorities and with the schools themselves.

We are currently considering whether any fresh initiatives, building on the success of the micros in schools schemes, might be taken by this Department. Provision for teacher training would depend on the nature of any initiative.

Licences

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list in the Official Report all the different types of licences operated or granted by his Department and the year in which they first came into operation.

Mr. Butcher: The information is as follows:

Type of Licence	In operation since
1. The issue of authorisation to companies to carry on insurance business in the United Kingdom	1967
2. Export Licences	*1939
3. Import Licences	*1939

Blank Cassette Tapes

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from organisations representing the blind about the proposed levy on blank cassette tapes, following the publication of the consultative document, "The Recording and Rental of Audio and Video Copyright Material."

Mr. Butcher : The Royal National Institute for the Blind, the Association of Blind Chartered Physiotherapists, the National Federation for the Blind, the National League for the Blind and Disabled, the Association of Talking Newspapers of Northern Ireland, the Talking Newspaper Association of the United Kingdom and many individual talking newspapers have expressed concern about the effect on the blind of a levy on blank audio recording tape. Their main points are that they, and individual blind people, should be entitled to relief from any levy introduced, and that the mechanism for giving relief should not cause them additional administrative expense or reduce their freedom of choice of tape.

South Africa

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many British trade missions visited South Africa in each year from 1979; how many such missions received a grant from his Department; what was the total grant per mission; and what was the total cost to his Department in each of those years.

Mr. Fletcher: The cost to the British Overseas Trade Board of outward missions is dependent upon the number of participants and the rate of grant to the particular market applying at the time. The cost in pounds of BOTB-supported outward missions to South Africa from 1979 to date is set out below:

Bosphorus Bridge

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what reply he has received from the Japanese Government about the complaints on unfair subsidising of the Turkish bridge project.

Mr. Channon [pursuant to his reply, 20 May 1985, c. 279]: The Japanese Government have provided an explanatory note about their involvement in the second bosphorus bridge project. We remain concerned at the high volume of subsidised finance offered by the Japanese Government in support of their companies' bid.

Japan (Trade Restrictions)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what evidence he has of tariff, non-tariff or other restrictions imposed by the Japanese authorities on the export of British goods to Japan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon [pursuant to his reply, 20 May 1985, c. 279]: The Department has received evidence from a number of sources about restrictions on trading with Japan. In particular, such restrictions were examined in an authoritative report, "Doing business in Japan" which was produced by the European Business Council in Tokyo in October 1984 and is available in the UK from the Japan Association. The British business community in Japan made a significant input to this report. A copy is being placed in the Library.

South Africa (EC Code of Conduct)

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many of the companies submitting full reports for the period ending June 1984 on the European Economic Community code of conduct, for companies with dealings with South Africa used, in responding to section 3 of the code, the supplementary living level figures rather than the minimum living level plus 50 per cent.; and if Her Majesty's Government ask any further questions of such companies.

Mr. Channon [pursuant to his reply, 20 May 1985, c. 276]: 112 companies used supplemented living level figures, 20 used minimum living level plus 50 per cent. and five reports did not specify which figures were used. The Department uses the relevant supplemented living level figures for a family of five in analysing companies' reports without further reference to the companies.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many of the companies submitting full reports for the period ending June 1984 used, in responding to section 3 of the code, the supplementary living level of minimum living level plus 50 per cent. for families of size five in areas where the average family size is shown in the supplementary living level/minimum living level studies to be higher; and if Her Majesty's Government ask any further questions of such companies.

Mr. Channon [pursuant to his reply, 20 May 1985, c. 276]: The information requested is not available. Published data on the supplementary living levels and the minimum living levels for different localities in South Africa do not provide information on the average family size in each locality, but other studies indicate the average black African family size is between five and six persons.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many of the companies submitting full reports for the period ending June 1984, in responding to section 3 of the code, compare their minimum wage levels with poverty levels other than the household subsistence level/household effective level or supplementary living level/minimum living level for families of five or six people; and if Her Majesty's Government ask any further questions of such companies.

Mr. Channon [pursuant to his reply, 20 May 1985, c. 277]: None. 132 companies quoted the datum levels mentioned, but five omitted to specify the datum level used. The Department in any case analysed all reports by reference to the correct datum levels for a family of five in the relevant locations, without further reference to companies.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many companies submitting full reports for the period ending June 1984 on the European code of conduct for companies with dealings with South Africa quote, in responding to section 3 of the code, separate levels for men and women and compare the two with different poverty levels; and if Her Majesty's Government ask any further questions of such companies.

Mr. Channon [pursuant to his reply, 20 May 1985, c. 277]: Separate information on wage datum levels for men and women is not produced in South Africa, and the code of conduct makes no provision for such a distinction.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many of the companies submitting full reports for the period ending June 1984 do not give figures for their total work force of all races as called for in the reporting format; and if Her Majesty's Government ask any further questions of such companies.

Mr. Channon [pursuant to his reply, 20 May 1985, c.277]: 17 companies did not report the numbers of workers of all races. Companies were questioned further if their reports did not provide adequate information in respect of their black African workers.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many of the companies submitting full reports for the period ending June 1984 make it clear in the annual reports that their response to the code is available from the company; and what procedure is followed with those that do not.

Mr. Channon [pursuant to his reply, 20 May 1985, c. 277]: 77 companies mentioned that information about their response to the code was available from the company, and at least 11 more companies made reference to the code in their annual reports. Companies are reminded from time to time of the Government's policy to encourage companies to comply fully with the code.

SCOTLAND

Special Alcohol Units

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) pursuant to his answer on 15 May, Official Report, column 140-1, concerning special alcohol units, what is the average length of stay for patients addicted to alcohol in each of those hospitals listed;

(2) pursuant to his answer on 15 May, Official Report, column 140-1, concerning special alcohol units, how many patients addicted to alcohol have been admitted to each of those alcohol units listed, for each of the last five years.

Mr. John MacKay: This information is not available centrally.

Homes for the Elderly

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many private residential homes for the elderly have been deregistered in each of the years 1979 to 1984; and what proportion of these homes this represents.

Mr. John MacKay: As I informed the hon. Member in the reply which I gave him on 13 November 1984 at column 122 such information is not held centrally: social work authorities are not required to inform my Department if registrations are cancelled.

Tourism

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the prospects for the tourism industry in 1985.

Mr. John MacKay: The Scottish Tourist industry has a sound base on which to build and offers good prospects for growth. Amongst the service industries, tourism is already a notable provider of jobs and contributed significantly to the economy of Scotland with tourism sales reaching record levels in 1983 and 1984. There are excellent prospects for 1985. The industry hopes to surpass previous records and in doing so ensure that Scotland captures a worthwhile share of the expanding world market in tourism.

Labour Statistics

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the 10 largest categories of employment in the area currently covered by Greenock and Port Glasgow constituency in 1971, 1975 and 1982 and in the latest available year; how many were employed in each category; and what percentage of the total work force these represent.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Estimates of the number of employees in the 10 largest industrial orders (as defined on the 1968 standard industrial classification) and of percentages they represent of the total number of employees in employment in the Greenock and Port Glasgow employment office areas are set out in the table. The estimates for 1981 are the latest available. (Estimates for Greenock and Port Glasgow constituency are not available.)

Killearn Hospital Site

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the cost to public funds of security at the disused Killearn hospital site since the question of its disposal was first raised with him by the hon. Member for Stirling; what is his Department's estimate of the value of the site for (a) agricultural use, (b) housing development and (c) light industrial development; and when he expects the Killearn hospital site to be offered for sale.

Mr. John MacKay: The site has been placed on the market today and it would not therefore be appropriate to publish valuations. I shall send my hon. Friend a copy of the sale particulars.

The cost of security incurred by Greater Glasgow health board since my hon. Friend's letter of 20 September 1983 is approximately £40,000.

Drink Offences

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons were proceeded against for the offence of being drunk and incapable in (a) Inverclyde, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland for each of the past five years; and of these how many received custodial sentences.

Mr. Ancram: The table provides the information requested for the two offences of being drunk and disorderly and of habitual drunkenness which are combined in the classification of crimes and offences used by my Department.

Persons proceeded against for being drunk and disorderly and for habitual drunkenness.

Edinburgh Relief Road

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects the transcript of the evidence given at the inquiry into the Lothian Region (Edinburgh Western Relief Road) Provisional Order to be available to hon. Members.

Mr. Younger: I have placed a transcript of the evidence in the Library of each House.

Licensing Law

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has had any indication of the findings of the survey into the licensing law recently carried out on his behalf by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Younger: A preliminary analysis of the findings has been published today and copies are available in the Library.

While the preliminary analysis shows that there has been some increase in alcohol consumption in the period 1976 to 1984 (attributable almost entirely to women) it is thought unlikely that this is a direct consequence of the changes on the licensing law. According to the analysis, the more probable cause is a change to a more relaxed attitude towards drinking in general and, in particular, towards women's drinking.

The survey also confirms that the extension to licensing hours brought about by the 1976 Act tends to be seen by the great majority as having led to more sensible drinking rather than as offering a temptation for people to drink more.

These results will be analysed more extensively, and will be presented, together with other material obtained from the general population survey and the results from the sample of licensees, in the main survey report due to be published later this year.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Average Wage

Mr. Greenway asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much the average take-home wage for a single man, a married couple without children and a married couple with two children has increased in purchasing power since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: Real take-home pay for these households with average earnings was 11 per cent. higher in 1984-85 than in 1978-79.

Management Consultants

Mr. Mates asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the contracts, with the subject of assignment, awarded to management consultancy firms by his Department in 1984, with the name of the consultants concerned.

Mr. Hayhoe: The following management consultancy firms were awarded contracts by Her Majesty's Treasury in 1984. With the exception of the first, all were placed by the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency.

Share Schemes

Dr. Godman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many save-as-you-earn share option schemes under the Finance Act 1980 have been (a) submitted to the Inland Revenue and (b) approved in each year since 1980;

(2) how many approved deferred share trust profit-sharing schemes under the Finance Act 1978 as amended have been (a) submitted to the Inland Revenue and (b) approved in each year since 1979.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Personal Incomes

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will provide information on the net income after income tax, national insurance contributions and child benefit at (a) actual prices and (b) constant (April 1985) prices of typical household units (i) single, (ii) married couple, (iii) married couple with two children, (iv) married couple with four children whose gross income is at (x) the lowest decile, (y) the median and (z) the highest decile for each year since 1978-79.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 10 May 1985, c. 533]: Information in the following tables is based on estimates of earnings for those in full-time work paid at adult rates, with pay unaffected by absence. Estimates are based on information from the new earnings surveys. Earnings data for April 1985 will not be available until October 1985.

Income tax rates and allowances for April 1979 are those specified in the Finance Act 1979, later replaced by those announced in June 1979; for other Aprils, they are the rates and allowances for the financial year immediately following. Taxpayers are assumed to have no reliefs or allowances other than the appropriate personal allowance. National Insurance contributions are at the contracted-in rate.

The calculations take no account of means tested benefits to which those at the lowest decile may be entitled. Changes in the purchasing power of net earnings have been calculated by reference to movements in the general index of retail prices between Aprils.

European Community Budget

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report the percentage increase in EEC expenditure and the percentage increase in EEC own resources in 1984 and forecasts for 1985; whether the additional subscriptions are to be included in own resources for the purpose of the EEC budget calculations; and what is his forecast of the percentage of spending accounted for them by the common agricultural policy in 1985.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 15 May 1985, c. 153]: Final outturn figures for the total expenditure of the European Community in 1984 are not yet available. However, the increase in the European Community's estimated total expenditure between the final supplementary and amending budgets for 1983 and 1984—Nos. 2 and 1 respectively—was 8·7 per cent. The IGA moneys serve to fund the 1985 budget as a whole and are pooled with other sources of revenue. The IGA moneys are, therefore, not earmarked to finance specific items of expenditure in the budget. The proportion of spending on the CAP within the total budget is, however, some 74 per cent.

Earnings

Mr. Nellist asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, how many people earn between (a) £15,000 and £19,999, (b) £20,000 and £49,999, (c) £50,000 and £99,999, (d) £100,000 and £249,999 and (e) above £250,000 a year.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 20 May 1985]: Provisional estimates based on a projection from the 1982-83 survey of personal incomes are as follows:

Estimated distribution of earned income in 1985-86

Range of earned income before tax (lower limit) £	Number of incomes
15,000	1,610,000
20,000	1,020,000
50,000	45,000
100,000	7,000
250,000	500

The figures relate to the numbers of single people and married couples with earned income in the indicated ranges. In the case of married couples, the income of husband and wife has been aggregated.

Data Processing

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is Her Majesty's Customs and Excise annual budget for computerised data processing, including hardware, software, and out of house services; and how many of the staff of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise are employed in carrying out computerised data processing work.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 20 May 1985]: In 1985-86 about £9 million of the Customs and Excise cash limit is for work associated with computerised data processing excluding staff salaries. At present, some 880 staff are employed in the computer services division, which is principally involved in data processing in the Department. In addition, a few staff in other divisions have some involvement in data processing, but it is not possible to estimate these precisely except at disproportionate cost.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Trials (Waiting Times)

Mr. Lawrence asked the Attorney-General, how many cases are currently awaiting trial in (a) the Court of Appeal, and (b) the Divisional court; and how these figures compare with each of the past five years.

The Attorney-General: In the Court of Appeal Criminal Division, as at 30 April 2,536 persons had applications for leave to appeal or appeals before the court: of these 617 were awaiting a full court hearing. Corresponding figures for the end of each of the previous five years are as follows:

	Persons whose applications for leave to appeal or appeals were before court	Awaiting full court hearing (1)
end 1980	2,531	834
end 1981	2,414	914
end 1982	2,516	815
end 1983	3,333	1,136
end 1984	2,545	712

Note: (1) These figures are included in the first column.

In the Court of Appeal Civil Division the numbr of appeals outstanding at the end of April 1985 was 941. Corresponding figures, where available, for the end of previous years are as follows:

	Appeals outstanding at the end of year shown
1980	834
1981	Not available
1982	Not available
1983	902
1984	873

In the Divisional court of the Queen's Bench Division the total number of cases outstanding at the end of April 1985 was 1,201. Corresponding figures for the end of the previous five years are as follows:

	Cases outstanding at end of year shown
1980	242
1981	246
1982	696
1983	1,219
1984	1,681

NORTHERN IRELAND

Local Elections (Voting Rights)

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people were refused the right to vote in the local elections in Northern Ireland on 15 May because they were unable to produce the necessary documents.

Mr. Scott: The figures requested are not available. It is clear that some people wishing to vote but not able to produce one of the documents specified under the Elections (Northern Ireland) Act 1985 were refused ballot papers in accordance with the provisions of the Act. In many of these cases, however, the voters concerned subsequently returned to the polling place with an appropriate document and were then able to vote. The total turnout, at 60-61 per cent. compares with 65·0 per cent. at the 1981 local elections and 55·4 per cent. at the 1977 local elections: in some areas it was over 80 per cent.

Dogs (Licences)

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many prosecutions were made in 1984 and with what result for (a) keeping a dog without a licence, (b) taking possession of a dog before a licence had been issued and (c) giving or selling a dog to a person who had not produced a licence.

Dr. Boyson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Penrith and The Border (Mr. Maclean) on 15 April 1985, in columns 58 and 59.

A detailed breakdown of the types of prosecution is not available. The fixed penalty system is applied to most licensing offences and in their reports councils only identify specific cases where attacks on persons or livestock are concerned resulting in the destruction of the dog.

Housing Executive

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he will lay the latest accounts of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive before Parliament; and if he will make a statememt.

Mr. Chris Patten: The accounts of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive for 1983-84 together with the reports of the Local Government Auditor and of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon were laid today (Cmnd. 9512). The matters raised have been discussed between the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland and the Housing executive and the agreed follow-up action will be monitored. In this occasion the report raises individual issues rather than criticisms of systems and in that sense it is encouraging.

I have arranged for copies of a statement by the Housing Executive in response to the Local Government Auditor's Report to be placed in the Library of the House.

Electricity Industry (Capital Investment)

Mr. Arnold asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on his plans for future capital investment in the electricity industry in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hurd: Some 90 per cent. of the usable generating capacity in Northern Ireland is oil-fired. This heavy oil-dependence is the main reason for Northern Ireland's high electricity generating costs, and for the decision to provide a substantial Government subsidy to keep Northern Ireland electricity tariffs in close association with the highest area board in England and Wales. The cost of that subsidy—estimated to be more than £95 million in 1985-86—is becoming an increasing burden on the Northern Ireland public expenditure block. The Government and the Northern Ireland Electricity Service have therefore been anxious to explore how best the oil-dependence of the Northern Ireland electricity system might be significantly reduced.

I have decided that the first step in reducing Northern Ireland's oil dependence should be the immediate conversion of the first phase of Kilroot power station to solid fuel-firing. In the first instance the station will be converted to coal-firing, although provision will be made in the design to retain the existing oil-fired capability, and to allow the future burning of a processed form of lignite at the station, should this prove to be technically feasible and economic. For this purpose I have made funds available within the Northern Ireland public expenditure block which will support the investment and enable the Northern Ireland Electricity Service to carry out the necessary works. The initial cost of the project is estimated at £94 million, at October 1984 prices, and the station is expected to be taken out of service in the years 1986 to 1988, and to recommissioned in 1989. After Kilroot is recommissioned as a coal-fired station, it is estimated that Northern Ireland Electricity Service fuel costs could be reduced by some £25 to £30 million per annum, which will represent a significant saving in public expenditure.

At the same time I am very conscious of the contribution which cheap local lignite might make to reducing Northern Ireland Electricity Service generating costs, and the fact that a substantial proportion of total existing NIES capacity—as much as 35 per cent.—will be progressively retired throughout the 1990s. We have therefore given considerable thought to how Northern Ireland's future generating capacity needs should be met, and the extent to which lignite might feature in these plans. Our current assessment is that the most economically effective use of lignite would be in a purpose-built mine-mouth power station, and that lignite-fired plant would offer the cheapest option when new generating capacity is required in the 1990s. As an initial step therefore I have authorised the Northern Ireland Electricity Service to enter into the preliminary planning stages of a new lignite-fired power station to be constructed at the mouth of the lignite mine, and work on such studies has now begun.

It should be realised, however, that the capital expenditure involved in the construction of a new power station will be substantial. Detailed assessments of the phasing of such capital expenditure and of its economic implications have to be carefully examined before a final decision on construction would be taken. In that context I am examining in depth the scope for private sector involvement in the development of lignite-fired electricity generation.

EMPLOYMENT

European Social Fund

89. Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Employment what discussions he has had concerning the reform of the guidelines covering the European social fund.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend and the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs have discussed the European Commission's proposed interpretation of its guidelines for 1985 with Commissioner Sutherland and President Delors respectively. So far as 1986 is concerned, officials discussed the draft guidelines with the Commission both informally and formally. The guidelines for 1986 were published by the Commission on 6 May.

Skillcentres

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the skillcentres which have been closed in the Greater London council area during the last five years.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The skillcentres at Poplar and Charlton, together with Charlton annexe, have been closed in the last five years. In addition, the annexes at Enfield, Perivale and Twickenham have been merged with their parent skillcentres.

Community Industry Scheme

Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide a regional breakdown of the occupancy rates on the community industry scheme; and if he will give each region's allocation.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The latest statistics, for community industry regions, are set out in the table below:

Community industry region	*Occupancy	Allocation
London and South-East	589	695
Midlands	631	665
Wales and South-West	1,007	1,025

Accident Reporting

Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for Employment how he proposes to deal with the reporting of accidents in the period until new regulations are available.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Health and Safety Commission is considering proposals for revised regulations on the reporting of accidents. The Notification of Accidents and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1980 continue in force.

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report statistics on numbers entering and numbers completing the youth training scheme by mode for each local education authority area in Yorkshire and Humberside for 1983-84, setting out the results for boys and girls separately.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The information requested is given in the table. The figures do not include young people who entered or completed construction industry training board schemes. There were few young people who entered the youth training scheme early enough in 1983 to complete their programmes in the 1983-84 financial year.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Sub-Saharan Africa

Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total overseas development assistance by the United Kingdom Government in sub-Saharan Africa during 1984 or the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Raison: Gross public expenditure on British bilateral aid to sub-Saharan Africa during 1984 was £248 million. In addition, substantial amounts of British aid go to sub-Saharan Africa through various multilateral and European Community channels.

Nicaragua

Dame Judith Hart asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response he will make at the European Economic Community Council of Ministers to the Commission proposal that aid to Nicaragua should be doubled by member countries.

Mr. Raison: The Commission has not to date communicated to the Council any proposal to this effect. But the Commission is expected soon to forward proposals on ways by which the European Community could further relations, including aid, with Central America following the meeting last year of Foreign Ministers in San José.

Crown Agents

Mr. Lester asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the 1984 annual report and accounts of the Crown Agents for Oversea Governments and Administrations will be published.

Mr. Raison: The 1984 report and accounts will be published on 29 May and I am arranging for copies to be placed in the Library of both Houses. Copies will be laid before the House after the recess.

Commonwealth Development Corporation

Mr. Bowen Wells asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the 1984 annual report and accounts of the Commonwealth Development Corporation will be published.

Mr. Raison: The report and accounts will be published on 23 May. Copies have been laid in both Houses today. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

DEFENCE

Budget

Mr. Portillo asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give, for each financial year from 1978-79 to the current year, the increase in real terms in the total defence budget over the previous year.

Mr. Stanley: The information is as follows:

Year	Real increase in outturn defence expenditure Percentage
1979-80	2·9
1980-81	2·7
1981-82	1·5
1982-83	6·0
1983-84	*2·2

Note:
* Includes £251 million available for carry forward to 1984-85.
The outturn for 1984-85 is not yet available.

Army Officers

Mr. Critchley asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many Army officers bought themselves out of the service in (a) 1984 and (b) so far in 1985.

Mr. Lee: There is no provision in the regulations for officers to purchase their discharge from the Army. They may, however, be permitted to terminate their Service prematurely at their own request.

The number of officers who left the Army through premature voluntary retirement during the periods in question was:

	1984	1 January-31 March 1985
United Kingdom Trained Adult Male Officers*	562	128
United Kingdom Trained Adult Female Officers†	29	9

* Female officers serving in RAMC, RADC, ALC, and RAVC are included in the UKTAM totals.
† UKTAF officers are those serving in the WRAC and QARANC.

Phantom Aircraft

Mr. George asked the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he has taken to satisfy himself as to the cost effectiveness of the recent purchase of Phantom F4J's from the United States Government.

Mr. Butler: This purchase was approved in accordance with the normal procedures of my Department which have as a primary objective the most cost-effective procurement of defence equipment.

Mr. George asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of the Phantom F4J's recently purchased from the United States Government: what information he has as to (a) the original life expectancy of their airframes (b) their length of service with the United States Navy and (c) the remaining life expectancy of their airframes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butler: The cost of the Phantom F4J project including refurbishment of 15 aircraft, training, spares and support equipment is some £125 million at current prices. The aircraft were refurbished before delivery and they are expected to be in service with the RAF well into the 1990s.

Falkland Islands (Airport)

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make periodical reports to the House on the savings effected in the South Atlantic as a result of the opening of the new airport at Mount Pleasant.

Mr. Stanley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley on 22 April in column 386. The savings are expected initially to be of the order of those in that reply. My right hon. Friend will continue to keep the House informed.

Multi-launch Rocket System

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Defence, if he will make a statement regarding the latest position of the multi-launch rocket system project.

Mr. Butler: The MLRS basic system (phase I) is in production in the USA. Production of European requirements will be undertaken in Europe by an industrial consortium known as Europäische Produktions Gesellschaft mbH (EPG). Work sharing between the European partners — France, Italy, Germany and the United Kingdom — was agreed in November last year. The offer by EPG for European production of MLRS is currently being considered by the participating nations and we expect that a contract will be awarded later this year. The ISD is planned for about 1990.

A contract for development of a terminally guided warhead (MLRS phase III) for use with the basic system was awarded last November to MDTT Incorporated, a joint venture company of which Thorn-EMI is the United Kingdom member. The first stage of development is progressing well and will be completed in 1987. The system is planned to enter service in the early 1990s.

Type 23 Frigate

Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the value of the contracts to build a further three type 23 frigates.

Mr. Lee: The value of the contracts to build the next three type 23 frigates will depend upon the prices negotiated following receipt of tenders. As stated in Cmnd. 9430-1, the estimated unit cost of a type 23 frigate is £110 million at 1984-85 prices, including weapons and equipment fitted in the ship but excluding development costs.

Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will specify the British shipbuilding companies which will be invited to tender for the next three type 23 frigates.

Mr. Lee: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence said on 28 January, Swan Hunter Shipbuilders Ltd. will be invited to tender for the second type 23 frigate.

It is intended to invite tenders for type 23 frigates 03 and 04 only from the United Kingdom shipyards with current experience of building destroyers and frigates for the Royal Navy: Cammell Laird Shipbuilders Ltd., Swan Hunter Shipbuilders Ltd., Vosper Thornycroft (UK) Ltd. and Yarrow Shipbuilders Ltd. We would consider requests from other United Kingdom companies on their merits at the time.

Trooping the Colour (Tickets)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many tickets are available for this year's trooping the colour; how they are being distributed; if he will list the bodies to which allocations are being made together with the number of tickets allocated in each case; how the current year's arrangements compare with those for previous years; and what is expected to be the total income from the sale of tickets.

Mr. Lee: Further to the reply which my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Armed Forces gave to the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde (Mr. Pendry) on 25 January 1985 at columns 556 and 557, the distribution of tickets for the trooping the colour ceremony is arranged by the Brigade Major, HQ Household Division, Horse Guards. The list of bodies to which allocations have been made this year is:

	Number
HM The Queen and the Royal Households	92
Houses of Parliament	300
Diplomatic Corps	198
Ministry of Defence and Service Establishments	1,734
Other Government Departments	923
Household Division and Regiments (including those participating in Parade)	1,714
Ambassador of the United States of America	12
Lloyds Bank	6
Metropolitan Police	62
St. John's Ambulance	6
Sheriffs of the City of London	4
Cavalry and Guards Clubs	4
Elder Brothers of Trinity House	2
Gordon Boys School	6
Official Photographer	2
Contractor (stand erection and dismantling)	12
NAAFI	4
Army Benevolent Fund	14
Press	45
St. Dunstans	30
Ulster Defence Regiment	12

I am not able to list precise allocations for 1984 as such records are not maintained, but broadly speaking the arrangements for the allocation of tickets have not changed over the years, except that since 1984 special provision is now made for wheelchairs.

The total income from the sale of tickets based upon the revenue for the 1984 parade is expected to be in the region of £70,000. Normally about 1,500 tickets are available for sale to the general public.

RAF Basic Trainer

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 8 May, Official Report, column 386, why, following the telephone call made by the Principal Director of Contracts (Air), to the group commercial director of British Aerospace on 13 March to inform him of the deadline date for the tender for the new Royal Air Force basic trainer, the Controller of Aircraft on 15 March telephoned the managing director of British Aerospace to confirm that the latter understood that the bid received by the relevant contracts branch of his Department before noon on 14 March was British Aerospace's final offer.

Mr. Butler: Controller Aircraft rang Sir Raymond Lygo, managing director of British Aerospace, to satisfy himself that Sir Raymond understood that the company's bid received before noon the previous day was indeed its final offer. In doing so he neither encouraged Sir Raymond to make a further bid nor gave any indication that a further offer from British Aerospace might be accepted by the Ministry of Defence.

British Aerospace did, however, submit later bids, but, although these narrowed the gap, they did not change the fact that the total acquisition cost would have been higher for the PC-9 than for the Tucano.

SKK 2400 Submarines

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list in the Official Report the names of the shipyards which have submitted tenders for the construction of SKK 2400 submarines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The following shipyards have submitted tenders for the construction of the three submarines to follow HMS Upholder: Yarrow Shipbuilders Ltd., Cammell Laird Shipbuilders Ltd., Vickers Shipbuilding and Engineering Ltd. and Scott Lithgow Ltd. These tenders are under consideration. Decisions have yet to be taken on the size and timing of orders.

Auxiliary Oil Replenishment Vessels

Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether any foreign companies have been invited to tender for the first two auxiliary oiler replenishment vessels.

Mr. Lee: No.

Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Defence which British shipbuilding companies have been invited to tender for the first two auxiliary oiler replenishment vessels.

Mr. Lee: The following companies have been invited to tender for the first two auxiliary oiler replenishment vessels: British Aerospace plc, Marconi Projects Ltd., Swan Hunter Shipbuilders Ltd., Harland & Wolff Ltd., Scott Lithgow Ltd. and Cammell Laird Shipbuilders Ltd.

Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to place an order for auxiliary oiler replenishment vessels for the Royal Fleet Auxiliary.

Mr. Lee: I have nothing to add to the answer given on 25 April at column 519.

Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many auxiliary oiler replenishment vessels will be required to support the Royal Navy surface fleet in the early 1990s.

Mr. Lee: No decision has been taken on the total number of auxiliary oiler replenishment vessels to be ordered.

Sea Harrier

Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Defence further to paragraph 408 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1985", whether the BAe Sea Harrier FRS 1 is equipped with weapons for all its operational options while embarked on board Invincible class carriers.

Mr. Stanley: It has been the policy of successive Governments neither to confirm nor deny the presence of nuclear weapons at particular locations.

Sub-Saharan Africa (Sales Missions)

Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many missions to sub-Saharan Africa were undertaken by the Defence Sales Organisation in 1984 or the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Butler: There were five visits to sub-Saharan Africa by the Defence Sales Organisation in 1984.

HMS Otter and HMS Euralyus

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all the work, and its estimated cost, that has been or is to be done for the refit of HMS Otter and HMS Euralyus in Rosyth and Plymouth dockyards.

Mr. Lee: The royal dockyards at Rosyth and Devonport are providing certain assistance, including technical advice and guidance, direct to the contractors undertaking these refits. In addition, replacement items which have been or which may be issued to the contractors, some from MOD stocks, will in some cases have been fabricated or refurbished in the dockyards. The propeller shafts refurbished at Devonport — Official Report, Vol. 79, columns 57 and 58—are an example of the latter category. A running total of such assistance is not maintained centrally. Full records are, however, being maintained by the various MOD authorities responsible and the relevant costs will be taken fully into account when the final cost to the MOD of these refits is assessed.

WALES

Physiotherapists

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will undertake a survey to ascertain how many physiotherapists are needed to meet the requirements for physiotherapy in Wales; and how this compares to the numbers of established posts for physiotherapists in Wales and the numbers of trained physiotherapists available to fill these posts.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: No. It is for each individual district health authority to assess its needs for physiotherapy staff in accordance with locally determined priorities.

A40 Whitland Bypass

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of the expected start of the A40 Whitland bypass; and if he will make a statement as to the causes of its delayed start.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: The scheme is presently expected to be ready to start in 1988. However, this is dependent on the satisfactory completion of engineering design and of the statutory procedures. The actual start will depend on the availability of resources.

Education Support Grants

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the amount of expenditure and the activities to be supported through education support grants in the financial year 1986-87.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: Subject to Parliament's approval of regulations which will amend the Education Support Grant Regulations 1984 it is intended that expenditure to be supported by education support grant in 1986-87 will amount to £2·61 million in that year. It is proposed that £1·35 million of this total of planned expenditure will be accounted for by continuing expenditure arising from projects first approved in 1985-86. Roughly £1·26 million will be available to support expenditure on new activities and on the extension of existing ones. Grant will be paid at the rate of 70 per cent. of the amount of expenditure approved for support.

The following table shows the new and extended activities, the amount of expenditure for each, a provisional assessment of the number of LEAs likely to be supported and the length of support. The precise division of the £1·26 million available and its distribution among authorities will not be settled until applications have been received and considered.

Category	New expenditure envisaged to be supported through ESGs in FY 1986-87 (cash) £ million	Provisional assessment of number of LEAs to be supported	Likely length of support
I. The teaching of science and technology as part of primary education	0·07	One	Three years
II. The provision of retraining and updating courses directed towards the needs of industry and commerce (PICKUP)	0·13	All	Up to two years
III. The development of the use of information technology at further education establishments, by providing equipment, preparing or providing course material and computer software, and training teachers employed at such establishments	0·69	All	One year in the first instance with a possible extension up to a further four years
IV. The planning, development and co-ordination of provision to meet the educational needs, including the need for guidance, of those who are unemployed (excluding those currently receiving full time education)	0·05	All	Two years with a possible extension for a further year
V. The provision of data processing equipment, accessories and software for use in the management of further education establishments	0·07	All or most	Two to three years
VI. The development, provision and appraisal of a course of initial training for school governors	0·01	One	Two years
VII. The provision of computerised learning aids at further education establishments for use by students with special educational needs	0·08	All	Two years
VIII. The strengthening of college-employer links to improve the quality and relevance of NAFE provision	0·04	All	One to two years
IX. Action within the education services to combat the misuse of drugs	0·12	All	One year (with a possible extension for a further year)

ENERGY

Licences

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list in the Official Report all the different types of licences operated or granted by his Department and the year in which they first came into operation.

Mr. Peter Walker: The following are the types of licences granted or available under current legislation for which my Department is responsible.

Petroleum licences in operation or available under various Regulations made pursuant to the Petroleum (Production) Act 1934, as extended by the Continental Shelf Act 1964:—

Mining licence—landward: first granted in 1942.
Methane drainage licence—landward: first granted in 1958.
Exploration licence—seaward: first granted in 1964.
Exploration licence—landward: first granted in 1973.
Production licence—seaward: first granted in 1964.
Production licence—landward: first granted in 1967.
Appraisal licence—landward: none yet granted.
Development licence—landward: none yet granted.

PRIME MINISTER

Whaling

Mr. Chapman asked the Prime Minister if she will transfer responsibilities relating to whaling issues to the Department of Environment prior to the International Whaling Commission meeting in July.

The Prime Minister: The present distribution of ministerial responsibility relating to whaling issues has not prevented the Government from pursuing policies within the International Whaling Commission designed to conserve whale populations, but if my hon. Friend wishes to let me have his reasons for suggesting such a transfer I will of course consider them with my right hon. Friends the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Secretary of State for the Environment.

SCOTLAND

Forestry Commission (Aerial Spraying)

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Scotland where the Forestry Commission will be seeking approval to spray by aerial means 500 hectares of land with glyphosphate; and why alternative means of application have been discounted.

Mr. John MacKay: The programme that has now been drawn up covers less than 500 hectares of land. The areas to be sprayed are as follows:

Conservancy	Forest district	Area (hectares)
North England	Bellingham	100
East England	Sherwood	98
Wales	Llanwynno	200

In addition, an area of 46 hectares may be sprayed in the Brecon forest district of Wales Conservancy.

Aerial spraying is the most efficient means available for applying glyphosphate on these areas.

Hearing Aids

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many outpatients are waiting to have a hearing aid fitted or exchanged in Scotland; and what is the average waiting time in each case.

Mr. John MacKay: I regret that the information requested is not held centrally.

Local Authority Expenditure

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland against which authorities he proposes to take action on the grounds of excessive and unreasonable expenditure.

Mr. Younger: I have decided to initiate action in terms of section 5 of the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1966 in respect of Edinburgh district council on the grounds that its planned expenditure for 1985-86 is excessive and unreasonable. A letter has today been sent to the council proposing a rate reduction of 5·2p and inviting it to make representations about the proposed reduction.

Stirling District Council (Local Inquiry)

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has received the report of the public local inquiry in Stirling on 29 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Younger: I received the report of the local inquiry on 8 May. Having considered the report carefully, I am satisfied that Stirling district council is in default of its statutory duties under sections 23A of the Housing (Financial Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1972 and section 108(2) of the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1973, namely, to limit the amount of contribution out of their general fund to the estimated housing revenue account for the year 1985-86 to an amount not exceeding £2·026 million and to determine such district rate as will provide sufficient moneys to meet such part of the total estimated expenses to be incurred by the authority during the year 1985-86 as falls to be met out of monies raised by rates.

Accordingly, I have today made an order under section 211 of the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1973 requiring Stirling district council to remedy their default within 21 days by revising their estimated housing revenue account so as to budget for a rate fund contribution within the limit set, and also by revising the district rate from 23p in the £ to not more than 20p in the £, and to take all necessary steps to give full effect to these decisions. Copies of the inquiry report and of the default order have been placed in the Library of the House.

Rates

Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report in respect of (a) each local authority area in Scotland and (b) the average for Scotland as a whole, the percentage increase in average rate bills for 1985-86 over 1984-85 for (i) domestic, (ii) industrial, (iii) commercial, (iv) miscellaneous, (v) public utility and (vi) all subjects.

Mr. Ancram [pursuant to his reply, 30 April 1985, c. 90]: Since the tabulated information asked for by the hon. Member, and by my hon. Friend the Member for Edinburgh, West (Lord James Douglas-Hamilton) is quite bulky, I am placing the computer print-outs in the Library rather than publishing them in the Official Report.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the average rates payments for (a) domestic ratepayers, (b) commercial ratepayers and (c) industrial ratepayers, for each district and region in Scotland.

Mr. Ancram [pursuant to his reply, 7 May 1985, c. 376]: Since the tabulated information asked for by my hon. Friend, and by the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce), is quite bulky, I am placing the computer print-outs in the Library rather than publishing them in the Official Report.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Public Disorder (Newham)

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis concerning incidents of public disorder which occurred in Newham, east London on Saturday 11 May, detailing the cause and nature of the disturbance, the number of persons involved, the number of persons arrested, whether there were any injuries and the ethnic breakdown of the persons involved; and if he will make a statement on the substance of the report.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the commissioner that these incidents of public disorder occurred during a march and rally held by the Newham 7 Defence Campaign and others, in which some 1,500 people of various ethnic backgrounds took part. The mood of the marchers initially was good but scuffles later broke out and some arrests were made. As the demonstrators assembled for a short rally in Plashet park, missiles including stones, bottles and smoke canisters were thrown at the police, who used shields to protect themselves. After the crowd in the park was dispersed, some demonstrators remained in nearby streets and bricks were thrown at a police vehicle, but eventually all the demonstrators dispersed. During the afternoon 15 police officers sustained minor injuries and one demonstrator, who had been struck on the head by a brick, was taken to hospital. Fifteen people were arrested of whom three were white, nine black and three of Asian origin.

Milton Keynes Prison

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cells in the proposed prison at Milton Keynes will be for single occupation and how many for double or multiple occupation.

Mr. Mellor: The nature of the living accommodation for the proposed prison at Milton Keynes will be determined later this year when the design brief is finalised.

Bicester Prison

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cells in the proposed prison at Bicester will be for single occupation and how many will be for double or multiple occupation.

Mr. Mellor: 276 cells will be for single occupation and 168 for double.

Police (Greater Manchester)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department by how many officers the Greater Manchester police force was below its authorised establishment at 31 March; to what reasons he ascribes this reduction in the strength of the force; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The authorised establishment of the Greater Manchester police is 6,943, an increase of 208 since May 1979. The strength of the force was 6,736 on 31 March 1985. Police manpower levels fluctuate from month to month because of different recruiting and wastage patterns, seasonal changes and other local reasons. I understand that there was further recruitment to the Greater Manchester police in April, and the present strength is 6,744. The number of full-time civilian staff in the force has increased by 176 to 1,437 since May 1979, including an additional 76 during the past year.

Missing Persons

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer of 14 May regarding sources of information on missing persons, why accurate statistical information could be provided only at disproportionate cost from the police national computer; and if he will publish such information as is available for the last five years together with the relevant qualifications on its accuracy.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Police National Computer provides an operational service to police forces and holds information about missing persons only for the minimum period essential to that purpose. Information is not retained for statistical purposes and it is therefore not possible to provide information about the number of persons reported missing over the last five years.

Fire Brigades (Cover)

Mr. Sims asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the review of the national recommended minimum standards of fire cover which has been undertaken by the central fire brigades' advisory councils for England and Wales and for Scotland.

Mr. Brittan: A joint committee of the central fire brigades' advisory councils began a review of the recommended minimum standards of fire cover and of the requirements of special emergency and other services in July 1981. The committee's review was completed in November 1984 and its report was subsequently presented to the advisory councils. The principal recommendations are that the current minimum standards should not be changed but that fire authorities should review the categorisation of the risk of fire in their areas in the light of guidance contained in the report. The advisory councils have endorsed the report's recommendations and so now do I and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland. Accordingly, the report, a copy of which has been placed in the Library, is being sent to fire authorities today together wth a circular commending its recommendations to them. In addition, my right hon. Friend and I have asked our fire service inspectorates to be ready to assist fire authorities in achieving consistency in application and to monitor how individual fire authorities carry out the recommendations in their areas.

Missing Persons

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a table showing juveniles and vulnerable adults who were (a) recorded as missing from outside the Metropolitan police district, including overseas, and (b) who were traced or identified, broken down under each heading by age and sex, for each of the last ten available years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor [pursuant to his reply, 16 May 1985, c. 172]: I understand from the Commissioner of the Police of the Metropolis that the available information from the missing persons bureau of the Metropolitan police is as given in the following tables. Comprehensive statistics on missing persons are not collected centrally. The procedures for the recording of persons who were missing for a short period only were improved in 1984 and this may have increased the numbers recorded by the missing persons bureau.

ENVIRONMENT

Mansion House Square Site

Mr. Maples asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce his decision on the proposals to redevelop the Mansion House Square site.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: My decision to dismiss the appeal and thereby refuse permission for the proposed development of the Mansion House Square site was issued today. Copies of the decision letter have been placed in the Library of both Houses and the Vote Office.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if it is proposed to extend the duty to accept radioactive wastes to all or any of the operators of landfill refuse sites.

Mr. Waldegrave: Under section 9(5) of the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 there is a duty on a waste disposal authority to accept radioactive waste on a refuse disposal site specified in an authorisation for disposal of that waste granted by the relevant Minister under section 6 of the Act. There is no plan at present to extend this statutory duty to operators of private waste disposal sites.

Rateable Values

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the number of domestic hereditaments in England on an authority by authority basis with a rateable value of under £400.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have today placed the information requested in the Library.

Homes (Tenant Exchanges)

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many tenants exchanged homes between (a) England and Scotland and (b) England and Wales in 1984.

Mr. Gow: I regret that this information is not available.

English local authorities report in their HIP returns the numbers of their dwellings which have been let during the year to 31 March through the national mobility scheme (and in London under the Greater London mobility scheme and the inter-borough nomination scheme), those let through the tenant exchange scheme, and any other dwellings let to tenants to other authorities under exchange agreements.

The information provided is not broken down according to the originating area, nor do authorities provide information on numbers of tenants who have left their stock under exchange arrangements.

Households (South-East England)

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what factors lie behind the differential between the figure of new households in the south-east projected for the decade 1981 to 1991 in his Department's report "1981-Based Estimates of Numbers of Households in England, the Regions, Counties 1981-2001", in February and the projected figure given by officials of his Department to the south-east regional plan inquiry in December 1984;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report the figures for the postulated rates of household formation in the south-east for the decade 1981 to 1991 which were being projected by his Department in (a) October 1981, (b) November 1984 and (c) February 1985;

(3) what features of the model used by his Department for forecasting rates of household formation in its February report "1981-Based Estimates of Numbers of Households in England, the Regions, Counties 1981-2001", are new; and on what basis the old model has been discarded;

(4) what is the basis of his Department's projection in the report "1981-Based Estimates of Numbers of Households in England, the Regions, Counties 1981-2001", concerning the increase in the category Other Households in the Greater London Council area in the decade 1981 to 1991 and subsequent decrease in the following decade;

(5) what is the basis of his Department's projection in the report "1981-Based Estimates of Numbers of Households in England, the Regions, Counties

1981-2001", concerning the increase in the category Other Households in Hampshire in the decade 1981 to 1991 and subsequent decrease in the following decade.

Sir George Young: The household projections published by the Department are derived from projections of the population of men and women of different ages and marital status by applying the appropriate "headship rates" —the proportions who will head households.

The figures released in 1981 were based on headship rates from the censuses of 1961, 1966 and 1971 extrapolated to 1991. These were applied to "1979-based" population projections published by the Office of Population and Censuses and Surveys, analysed by marital status on the basis of projections on the Government Actuary's Department. Separate headship rates were derived for 24 categories: men, women, ages 15-29, 30-44, 45 but below retirement age, retirement age (men of 65 or over and women of 60 or over); married, widowed or divorced, single.

To incorporate the figures from the 1981 census, a new mathematical procedure was devised to extrapolate from four instead of three sets of data. The projected headship rates were applied to the OPCS "1981-based" population estimates. These incorporated the main census results. Initially the headship rates were derived for and applied to the same age, sex and marital status categories as before. The resulting figures for the south-east region are those which were provided to the London and South East Regional Planning Conference Housing Issues Group as provisional results and at its request in December last.

These provisional results were scrutinised in the Department and the method was then improved by splitting the age groups into five-year bands for England as a whole. In particular, this corrected for the effect of a relatively large number of births in the 1960s and a lower number in the 1970s which meant that the 15 to 29 age group in 1981 contained an unusually high proportion under 20 and in 1991 an unusually low proportion under 20. The headship rates were derived from only a 10 per cent. sample of the census data and, for this reason, projections for sub-divisions of England have not been made in that detail. Instead, the estimates for the different types of households—married couples, lone parent, one person and "other" households—within the broader age-bands used initially have been adjusted for each area pro rata to the changes in the England totals. The changes between the provisional and final published estimates are predominantly among young single people living on their own or heading "other" households and these households are disproportionately common in the south-east and particularly in London.

The projected figures for 1981 and 1991 are as follows:

South-East Region: Projected Households

Thousands

	1979-based			1981-based
				Provisional			Published
Type of household	1981	1991	Increase	1981	1991	Increase	1981	1991	Increase
Married couple	4,003	4,083	80	3,852	3,912	60	3,859	3,920	61
Lone parent	464	514	50	502	597	95	503	641	138
One person	1,616	2,029	413	1,496	1,843	347	1,494	1,900	406
Other	366	381	15	459	500	41	466	581	115
All	6,448	7,006	558	6,309	6,852	543	6,322	7,042	720
Private household population	16,541	16,924	383	16,727	17,132	405	16,727	17,132	405
Average household size	2·57	2·42		2·65	2·50		2·65	2·43

The increase in "other" households in the decade 1981 to 1991 and the decrease in 1991 to 2001 apply generally across the country, not just to London and Hampshire. This reflects a combination of changes in the age structure of the population and of trends in headship rates for households.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council, if the Government will ensure that the Greater London council's successor bodies provide facilities for the disabled at the same level as that currently provided by the Greater London council.

Mr. Waldegrave: I see no reason why abolition of the GLC should harm the interests of disabled people.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment which consultants have been (a) approached and (b) engaged by his Department to carry out an initial appraisal of the tasks in order to draw up for use by the residuary bodies (i) an initial brief, (ii) an action plan, (iii) a model organisational structure and (iv) suggested arrangements for liaison with the local authorities in their areas, in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council and the metropolitan county councils; and what is the estimated budget for the consultants' costs.

Mr. Waldegrave: My Department has recently commissioned Price Waterhouse to undertake such a study in relation to the London residuary body, and Peat Marwick in relation to the six metropolitan counties. It is not our practice to reveal details of fees negotiated.

Onshore Oil and Gas (Exhibition)

Mr. Jim Lester asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will arrange for an exhibition relating to onshore oil and gas activity to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Macfarlane: I understand that arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 3 to 7 June. Also available at the exhibition will be copies of a new booklet setting out the stages of oil and gas operations and the safeguards which apply to protect the environment.

Local Government Reform

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report a list of the voluntary bodies for which he has approved grants by the Greater London council under section 137 of the Local Government Act 1972.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 28 March 1985, Vol. 76, c. 338]: Specific consent under section 7 of the Local Government (Interim Provisions) Act 1984 has been given for expenditure by the Greater London council under section 137 of the Local Government Act 1972 on assistance to the following organisations:

GLC and Metropolitan County Councils

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his current estimate of the number of staff needed by each of the residuary bodies due to take over in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council and the metropolitan county councils.

Mr. Waldegrave: Estimates would be premature at this stage.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what support arrangements he intends to set up in the regions for each of the residuary bodies in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council and the metropolitan county councils; and what is the estimated cost.

Mr. Waldegrave: After their formal establishment, the residuary bodies will be responsible for making their own arrangements for support services.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council and the metropolitan county councils, what is his most recent estimate of (a) the reduction in the number of jobs and (b) redundancies in each of the authorities concerned.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have nothing to add to the estimates given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Surbiton (Mr. Tracey) on 30 November 1984 at column 611-14. As my right hon. Friend made clear, the numbers will depend on decisions by the successor authorities. If the authorities behave responsibly, we expect redundancies to be significantly fewer than reductions in posts. A Government amendment has just been made in another place to clause 57 of the Local Government Bill which is directed towards this objective.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if any approaches have been made by his Department to existing individual members of staff of the Greater London council and the metropolitan county councils in respect of future employment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am not aware of any such approaches.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many staff will be allocated by his Department to provide support for the proposed chairman and core members of the residuary bodies prior to their formal institution; and what is the estimated cost.

Mr. Waldegrave: This has yet to be decided, but the manpower and the associated costs will be met from within existing provisions.

LGR2 Division

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many staff are employed in LGR2 division of his Department; and what is the estimated annual cost.

Mr. Waldegrave: The division consists of seven staff. The cost, including accommodation, of employing these staff for a whole year would be approximately £176,000 (1984 prices).

Departmental Cars (Cost)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer of 9 May, Official Report, column 467-68, if he will give the reasons for the annual increases of £2,600 between the years 1980-81 and 1981-82 and between 1981-82 and 1982-83 in respect of costs to provide cars for the Secretary of State and five of the departmental Ministers; why the increases were uniform; why the costs of car provision for one of the Parliamentary Under-Secretaries of State declined by £8,060 between 1980-81 and 1981-82 when costs were increasing for all other Ministers; what caused the annual increase in car costs of £4,680 for all Ministers between 1982-83 and 1983-84 except one; and why the costs remained stable for the Secretary of State's car between 1983-84 and 1984-85 whilst over the same period it declined by a uniform £2,600 per annum in respect of four of his departmental Ministers.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: I shall answer this question shortly.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Infant Teachers

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the current availability of suitably qualified infant teachers in (a) England and Wales and (b) Inner London; what representations he has received on the issue; and if he will take steps to increase the number of teacher training places for infant teachers.

Mr. Dunn: No representations have been made to my right hon. Friend on the current availability of suitably qualified infant teachers nationally, or in inner London in particular, and he has no evidence that authorities are experiencing difficulties in recruiting such teachers. Visits by HM inspectors have shown that many teacher training institutions have responded positively to a Departmental letter, issued in March 1983, inviting those with experience in the primary phase to increase their provision for the training of teachers of the 3 to 8-year-old age range. The criteria for the assessment of courses of initial teacher training, issued in April 1984 by my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Education and Science and for Wales, require that the approach to teaching method in courses should differentiate according to the age group the student intends to teach (whether primary or secondary), and that, within primary, special emphasis should be given to particular age ranges, such as 3-8. In March this year, my right hon. Friends announced that intakes to courses of initial teacher training for the primary phase should increase from 8,620 in 1985 to 10,950 in 1989. The UGC and the national advisory body for public sector higher education are currently considering the allocation of those intakes to institutions.

University Teachers (Pay)

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many letters he has received on university teachers' pay since 20 April.

Sir Keith Joseph: The Department has received about 1,700 letters on the pay of university academic and related staff.

School Leavers

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report statistics on the occupational destinations of school leavers in each local education authority in Yorkshire and Humberside by numbers and as proportions for the most recently available year, setting out the results for boys and girls separately.

Mr. Dunn: The information requested is not available. Some information at regional level will be available as a result of a series of studies of young people aged 16 to 19 commissioned jointly by the Department of Education and Science, the Manpower Services Commission and the Department of Employment in England and Wales. Preliminary results, covering the experiences of young people who reached the minimum school leaving age in 1983-84, are expected to become available towards the end of this year.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish statistics in the Official Report on the general certificate of education/certificate of secondary education achievements of school leavers in each local education authority in Yorkshire and Humberside by numbers and as proportions for the most recently available year, setting out the results for boys and girls separately.

Mr. Dunn: Information is given in the table.

Education Support Grants

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he can yet make a statement about the amount of expenditure and activities to be supported through education support grants in the financial year 1986-87 in England.

Sir Keith Joseph: The Education (Grants and Awards) Act 1984 empowers the holder of my office to pay education support grant to local education authorities in England. Education support grants were first available in the 1985-86 financial year when a total of £30 million of expenditure was planned for. Of the planned £30 million expenditure of £29·5 million has been approved for support.

It is intended that education support grant will again be available in 1986-87. Expenditure so supported will amount to some £40 million in that year. It is proposed that £18·8 million of this total of planned expenditure will be accounted for by continuing expenditure arising from projects first approved in 1985-86. Roughly £21·5 million will be available to support expenditure on new activities and on the extension of existing ones. Grant will be paid at the rate of 70 per cent. of the amount of expenditure approved for support through education support grants.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I will shortly lay before Parliament draft Regulations setting out the new and extended purposes for or in connection with which we propose to pay education support grants in 1986-87. Those regulations will amend the Education Support Grants Regulations 1984 and will be subject to approval by both Houses of Parliament. The laying of the amending regulations follows consultations that I have had with the Association of County Councils and the Association of Metropolitan Authorities and consultations that my right hon. Friend has had with the appropriate local authority organisations in Wales.

The following table shows the new and extended activities which I propose should rank for education support grants in England in 1986-87, the amount of expenditure for each, a provisional assessment of the number of LEAs likely to be supported and the length of support. The precise division of the £21·5 million available for new and extended activities between these purposes and the number of authorities to be supported will not be settled until applications have been received and considered.

Should Parliament approve the regulations, a circular inviting bids will be sent to all education authorities in England. It is proposed that authorities be asked to submit bids by 1 October 1985 in order that decisions on the bids to be supported should be announced prior to the settling of budgets in 1986-87. It is envisaged that decisions on applications will be announced in December 1985.

In order to assist local education authorities in considering how they might respond to the Government's proposals, copies of a draft of the circular will shortly be sent to each local education authority under cover of a letter making clear that the regulations to which it relates are subject to the approval of both Houses of Parliament. Copies will also be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Drugs

Mr. Bowen Wells asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is yet in a position to make a statement about the further action to be encouraged within the education service aimed at preventing the misuse of drugs.

Sir Keith Joseph: As I am announcing separately today, this is one of the activities which I am proposing should be eligible for education support grants in 1986-87. The money available should be sufficient to allow every local education authority to appoint or second a member of staff at a suitable level to stimulate or co-ordinate action aimed at the prevention of drugs misuse or to take other suitable action in the light of local circumstances. The grant is intended also to cover overheads and operating expenses. The action should lead to increased advice and support for schools and colleges, more training for their staff, and improved co-ordination with the work of other local agencies. Over two years the grants would support expenditure of some £4 million.

Teachers (Dispute)

Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a further statement on the teachers' pay dispute.

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the current teachers' pay dispute.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress has been made since 2nd May to resolve the current teachers' pay dispute.

Mr. Maude asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the teachers' dispute.

Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the current dispute between teachers and their employers.

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the progress of the teachers' pay talks.

Sir Keith Joseph [pursuant to his oral reply, 21 May 1985, c. 842]: I wrote yesterday evening to the employers' leaders on Burnham making clear the Government's present position in relation to both 1985-86 and 1986-87, in advance of the Burnham committee meeting fixed for 23 May. Because of the wide public interest in these matters I have made the text of the letter and its annex on teachers' duties publicly available. These are set out below.

Councillor P. D. Merridale
Chairman
Association of County Councils
Eaton House
66A Eaton Square
London SW1W 9BH 21 May 1985

Dear Philip,

Throughout the current round of negotiations in the Burnham Primary and Secondary Committee, and the associated salary structure talks, I have tried to ensure that the Government's position is understood by those concerned, particularly in relation to the possibility that some additional resources might in the Government's view be justified. I think it right to make the Government's present position clear in advance of the meeting of the Burnham Primary and Secondary Committee fixed for 23 May, in relation to both 1985-86 and 1986-87.

In the light of the position reached in this year's negotiations, the Government is not able to make any additional resources available for teachers' pay in 1985-86. The cost in 1985-86 of any settlement must therefore be within what local authorities can already afford to pay, however the settlement is reached.

There has been debate about what should be regarded as the extent of teachers' contractual responsibilities. The Government believes it would be helpful if there were a generally accepted view on this matter, and if the range of teachers' duties was clearly linked with their contracts of employment. I enclose a note setting out the Government's provisional view on these duties. The Government would welcome views on these as a step toward agreement being reached as part of the basis for negotiations about teachers' pay for 1986-87. In the Government's view that agreement could exclude mid-day supervision from the range of teachers' duties from 1986-87. The Government would then provide in the 1986-87 Rate Support Grant settlement some additional resources for mid-day supervision costs.

For 1986-87 the Government would be willing to provide some additional resources for teachers' pay in the Rate Support Grant settlement, if and only if an acceptable and firm agreement in principle can be reached by October 1985, which would ensure progress towards the Government's objectives. The Government envisages an agreement which would require employers to promote more teachers than under the existing system to the higher salary scales, exercising their discretion in doing so in the light of the quality of teachers' work and the demand for their skills and qualifications elsewhere. The Government believes that increased promotion could benefit a large number of teachers directly over a period and change pay prospects for all teachers.

Because of the wide public interest in these matters, I am making the text of this letter publicly available. I shall of course be glad to have an opportunity of discussing its contents with you at a convenient time, and I shall also let the teacher unions know that I should be happy to discuss its content with them.

I am writing in similar terms to Nicky Harrison.

Yours,
Keith.

ANNEX A

STATEMENT OF TEACHERS' DUTIES

TEACHERS MUST

Pupils

1. teach assigned timetabled classes
2. take an appropriate share of collective staff responsibility to cover the classes of absent colleagues
3. plan, prepare, evaluate and review personal teaching methods and programmes in accordance with education authority and school policies
4. take an appropriate share of collective staff responsibility to supervise pupils on arrival at and departure from school and during the school day [including the midday break?]
5. mark, record and report on pupils' work (including homework) and progress in accordance with education authority and school policies
6. provide guidance and counsel on educational, social and career matters in accordance with education authority and school pastoral and counselling policies

Parents

7. consult and liaise with parents, attending meetings arranged for the purpose

Curriculum & Examinations

8. take part in arrangements for presenting pupils in public examinations
9. contribute to the preparation and development of courses of study and teaching materials in response to change in public examinations and assessment procedures and in accordance with education authority and school curricular policies

Staff Matters

10. take part in performance appraisal in accordance with education authority arrangements
11. take part in courses of in-service training and other schemes of professional development
12. take an appropriate share of collective staff responsibility for the professional development of colleagues, including new entrants to teaching
13. attend staff meetings

General

14. carry out such other related duties and responsibilities at the school as may be reasonably allocated, as need arises, by the head.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Chile

87. Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the gross volume of United Kingdom trade with the Government of Chile in 1984-85.

Mr. Channon: Information on volume of trade with individual countries is not available. In the period April 1984 to March 1985 the United Kingdom imported from, and exported to Chile goods to the value of £117 million (cif) and £76 million (fob) respectively.

Manufactured Goods

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the most recent figures for the balance of trade in manufactured goods.

Mr. Fletcher: Trade in manufactured goods was in deficit by £1·2 billion, in the first quarter of 1985.

Telephone Installations

Mr. Walters asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will introduce legislation to establish an approved list of qualified engineers, other than British Telecom employees, to fit approved do-it-yourself telephone and wiring kits;

(2) if he will introduce legislation to permit approved engineers to fit telephone sockets.

Mr. Butcher: I am aware, from a number of representations made to me by telecommunication equipment suppliers and users, of concern over the effect of existing licences and approvals in excluding competition in the supply of extension wiring and sockets for connection to single exchange lines of public telecommunication systems. The present policy is intended to strike a balance between the interests of effective competition on the one hand and the safety and performance of public networks on the other.

Mr. Walters asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps his Department takes to ensure that all approved telephone equipment is safe to connect to the public network and has a very low voltage.

Mr. Butcher: All telephone apparatus approved for direct connection to public telecommunication systems is required to conform to safety standards. Compliance is independently verified before approval is given. Approval requirements are still in the course of changeover from British Telecom's guides which, as Post Office guides, applied before the enactment of the British Telecommunications Act 1981, to designated British Standards, including BS 6301 which relates to the safety aspects of network connection. Each set of requirements ensures that public networks are protected from voltages higher than those which the telephone networks use for normal operational/purposes.

Mr. Walters asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many prosecutions there have been in the last 12 months of persons for fitting do-it-yourself telephone and wiring kits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Under section 5 of the Telecommunications Act 1984, it is an offence to connect to a licensed telecommunication system any other telecommunication system or any apparatus which is not authorised by the licence to be so connected. Under the licences which authorise people to connect apparatus to public telecommunication systems, it is a requirement that apparatus forming any part of those systems should be the subject of an appropriate approval under section 22 of the Act. As yet, I am not aware of any prosecutions being brought.

Tyres (Dumping)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what discussions he has had with the British Rubber Manufacturers Association about the dumping of cross-ply tyres by some Eastern European countries;

(2) if he will consult the National Economic Development Office about ways to prevent dumping of tyres in Britain by Eastern European countries and the effect on employment in cities such as Stoke-on-Trent;

(3) if he will arrange to meet representatives of unions and management of the Michelin company, Stoke-on-Trent, to discuss the effect of dumping of tyres by Eastern European countries on employment prospects in the firm.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Anti-dumping action is a matter for the European Community. However, my Department's anti-dumping unit has met the British Rubber Manufacturers Association to discuss the presentation of a case to the European Commission. The industry is now gathering the necessary corroborative evidence and seeking further support from other Community manufacturers.

I have no plans to consult the National Economic Development Office or to meet representatives of unions and management of the Michelin Company. But my officials would be pleased to receive evidence from any sources that might help reinforce a case.

Sub-Saharan Africa (Exports)

Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the total value of exports to sub-Saharan Africa during 1984; if he will give a breakdown of the main items; and what was the total value of all United Kingdom exports to, and imports from, sub-Saharan Africa during 1984 or the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Channon: In 1984 United Kingdom exports to, and imports from sub-Saharan Africa were valued at £1,727 million (fob) and £1,794 million (cif) respectively. 85 per cent. of United Kingdom exports were of manufactured goods. Information on individual commodities could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Source: United Kingdom Overseas Trade Statistics.

Notes:

(i) 1984 figures are provisional.

(ii) sub-Saharan Africa excludes South Africa.

Internal Market Council

Mr. Norris asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting of the Internal Market Council held on 7 May.

Mr. Channon: The Council, which I attended, covered a number of issues concerned with the reduction of barriers to trade and professional services within the European Community.

I was very pleased that the Council agreed on new arrangements, for which the Government and industry have pressed, to simplify and speed up the setting of product standards both at European level and by promoting mutual recognition of national standards. These new arrangements should lead to the more rapid removal of barriers to trade within the Community arising from differing national health and safety standards affecting industrial products.

The Council made useful progress towards the granting of right of establishment for the architectural and pharmacist professions. There was also an exchange of views on Commission proposals on frontier crossings by individuals on the proposed commercial agents directive and the proposed European economic interest grouping.

Balance of Payments (Japan and Germany)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the size of the total balance of payments surplus or deficit with Japan and Germany, respectively, during the most recent years for which figures are available: and what these figures would be if trade in oil was excluded.

Mr. Fletcher [pursuant to the reply, 20 May 1985, c. 340]: I have been asked to reply.

Figures for the UK's full balance of payments with individual countries is not available. Visible trade figures are available but only on an "Overseas Trade Statistics" basis, that is imports including the costs of insurance and freight. Exports less imports on an OTS basis produce a "crude" balance. This is provided for total trade and for total trade excluding oil in the table.

Although invisible transactions are not normally compiled for individual countries some estimates of transactions with Japan were published in "British Business" of 27 April 1984 (page 766): a copy is available in the Library.

TRANSPORT

Holiday Operators (Failure)

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will strengthen the arrangements for protecting the financial interests of air package holidaymakers against the failure of a tour operator; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The existing arrangements of bonds lodged by tour operators backed by the air travel reserve fund have so far proved adequate. I am not aware of any immediate threat to holidaymakers from a major failure. But in view of concerns which the chairman of the air travel reserve fund agency has expressed about the potential inadequacy of the fund in the event of such a failure and Sir Peter Lane's recommendations, following an independent review, for a strengthening of the present arrangements, we are now putting forward for consideration a series of changes which should offer a substantially improved level of protection.

In summary, we propose that the air travel reserve fund agency should be wound up; that the agency's functions should be transferred to the Civil Aviation Authority and that the monies in the fund should be held in trust; and —most importantly—that a further line of defence for holidaymakers should be created in the form of a top-up insurance scheme.

The purpose of top-up insurance would be to provide additional cover in the unlikely event that, following a major collapse in the industry, the bonding arrangements and the fund proved insufficient to repatriate holidaymakers overseas or reimburse those who paid for, but not taken a holiday. Informal soundings of the insurance industry suggest that a level of cover, equivalent at least to the £20 million or so presently in the fund, could be obtained at reasonable cost. Such a scheme would have the effect of at least doubling the financial backing provided by the fund. The premium would normally be paid from the fund's net income and would impose no extra costs on either holidaymakers or the tour industry.

The costs and benefits of such a scheme would need to be reviewed periodically and we are not proposing it should be made mandatory that the fund be covered by top-up insurance. But it is desirable that there should be power to acquire this extra form of protection. The air travel reserve fund agency's existing powers to administer the fund may not extend to the acquisition of top-up insurance. One way of ensuring the fund can be used for this purpose would be to transfer it to the CAA.

This is the major reason why my right hon. Friend is proposing the winding up of the agency. But there are other reasons. The authority should also be able to deal more flexibly with claims against the fund than the agency. Further, given the authority's existing duties in licensing air travel organisers and administering the bonding system, the various strands in the arrangements for protecting holidaymakers can be more closely aligned.

I understand the CAA is, in principle, willing to accept responsibility for the fund and that it would set up an advisory committee, made up of representatives of the tour industry and consumers, to advise on such matters as bonding arrangements and payments from the fund. Should it take over the fund, the CAA would in due course be empowered to replenish it, if necessary, by means of a levy on ATOL holders.

Under section 6 of the Air Travel Reserve Fund Act 1975, my right hon. Friend may wind up the air travel reserve fund agency and dispose of the fund after due consultation. I have today written to the agency, the CAA and representatives of the tour industry and the consumer asking for their comments on these proposals by 12 July. We would also welcome written comments from anyone else with an interest. In the interim, I am pleased to confirm that Sir Kenneth Selby has agreed to continue as chairman of the agency during the period of consultation.

I shall make a further statement once the consultations have been concluded.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Central America

13. Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if there has been a review of Her Majesty's Government's diplomatic representation in Central America.

Mr. Renton: Staffing of our posts overseas is reviewed at regular Diplomatic Service inspections and on other occasions when the need arises. Embassies in Managua and San Salvador were reopened in 1984, as recommended by the Foreign Affairs Committee in its 1982 report and following a Diplomatic Service inspection in 1983.

61. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to seek to promote peace in Central America.

Mr. Renton: Together with our Community partners we strongly support the Contadora initiative which offers the best prospect of a peaceful settlement of the problems of Central America. To underline that support my right hon. and learned Friend attended the meeting held at San Jose last September of European and regional Foreign Ministers. A further meeting is under consideration.

Coventry Crown Court (Trial)

18. Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a new initiative to seek to ensure that the four South Africans who failed to answer to bail at Coventry appear in the Crown court in Birmingham on 5 June when their fellow accused are due to stand trial.

Mr. Rifkind: The South African Government are in no doubt about our views on this matter. We shall continue to remind them that we expect them to honour the undertaking they gave to the court to ensure the return of the four defendants to stand trial.

Bogdan Lis (Arrest)

19. Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Polish Government following the arrest in Poland of Bogdan Lis and others.

Mr. Rifkind: During his recent visit my right hon. and learned Friend stressed our concern that progress towards internal reconciliation in Poland should be maintained. He spoke very frankly to his hosts of his deep anxiety about recent moves in a contrary direction and gave examples, including the arrests of Mr. Lis and others.

Nicaragua

21. Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions took place at the Bonn summit with regard to the United States trade embargo on Nicaragua.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I discussed the situation in Central and Latin America with my colleagues at the Bonn economic summit. Details must remain confidential.

23. Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on current United Kingdom relations with Nicaragua.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: We share the concern of many Central American states at Nicaragua's build-up of arms and increasingly close contacts with the Soviet Union and Cuba. Our future relations will depend on Nicaragua's establishing genuine democracy, scaling down her level of armaments and putting an end to support for subversion in the region.

27. Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has had any discussions with the United States Government about the use of sanctions against Nicaragua.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have nothing to add to the reply which I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Hillsborough (Mr. Flannery).

33. Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about discussions he had on Nicaragua at Bonn recently.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Meadowcroft).

65. Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the current situation in Nicaragua.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Battersea (Mr. Dubs).

76. Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to alter the level of British diplomatic representation in Nicaragua.

Mr. Renton: We have no plans to alter the level of diplomatic representation in Nicaragua but diplomatic staffing levels are kept under review.

Mr. Johnston asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place between Her Majesty's Government and the United States Government on the situation in Nicaragua.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have nothing to add to the reply which I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Hillsborough (Mr. Flannery).

BBC (External Services)

22. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the structure of the funding of the British Broadcasting Corporation external services.

Mr. Renton: The British Broadcasting Corporation external services are funded on an annual basis by two grants-in-aid; one is for broadcasting and the other for monitoring. Both are administered by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. In addition, the FCO is directly responsible for funding and operating four broadcasting stations which relay British Broadcasting Corporation programmes worldwide.

Anglo-Sudanese Relations

24. Mrs. Currie asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Anglo-Sudanese relations.

Mr. Luce: We have had a long and friendly relationship with the Sudan for many years. My visit to Sudan from 29 April to 1 May was warmly welcomed by the Sudanese authorities as the first visit by a western Minister since the takeover led by General Sowar el Dahab. It enabled me to have valuable meetings with members of the Transitional Military Council, the Council of Ministers and leading politicians. I was able to assure them of our continuing support for the stability and prosperity of Sudan.

Latin America

25. Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to discuss with United States Secretary of State the situation in Latin America with special reference to Honduras and Nicaragua.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: We regularly discuss the situation in Central America with the United States Administration. I discussed the subject with Mr. Shultz in Washington in February and with my colleagues at the Bonn economic summit earlier this month.

Indian Subcontinent (Nuclear Proliferation)

26. Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received from the Government of India regarding nuclear proliferation in the subcontinent.

Mr. Luce: Nuclear non-proliferation is a subject of great importance. It is frequently raised in discussions we have with other Governments. It is not our practice, however, to reveal the contents of such exchanges.

United Kingdom Embassy (Moscow)

28. Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the number of British personnel at the United Kingdom embassy in Moscow in the following categories (a) embassy staff, (b) trade delegation, and (c) non-diplomatic staff; and how this compares with the Soviet embassy in London.

Mr. Rifkind: The total number of home-based British staff in all sections of our embassy in Moscow at present is 71, of whom 28 have administrative and technical—that is, non-diplomatic—status. We do not have a separate trade delegation in Moscow. The commercial section of the embassy comprises seven home-based British personnel of whom two have administrative and technical status.

The Soviet embassy in London has at present a total of 83 members of staff, who are all Soviet nationals. Of these, 46 are administrative and technical staff. The Soviet trade delegation, which is a separate body whose status is defined in the Anglo-Soviet temporary commercial agreement of 1934, has 45 non-diplomatic Soviet members of staff. In addition, the Soviet trade representative and his two deputies have full diplomatic status and are included in the total just given for the Soviet embassy.

Cyprus

29. Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he is satisfied that the Turkish Government are doing all they can to persuade Mr. Denktash to bring about a satisfactory conclusion to the Cyprus intercommunal talks.

Mr. Renton: Turkish Government leaders made clear to my right hon. and learned Friend when he visited Turkey in February their support for the United Nations Secretary-General's initiative on Cyprus. We continue to keep in close contact with the parties involved and to urge co-operation with the Secretary-General in his search for a peaceful, just and lasting solution.

Dooge Committee Report

30. Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Council of Foreign Ministers will next discuss the Dooge committee report.

Mr. Rifkind: The report of the Dooge committee is not scheduled to be discussed by the Council of Ministers at this stage. It was commissioned by the European Council and Heads of Government will discuss it at the Milan European Council on 28-29 June.

54. Mr. Robert Edwards asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with EEC Foreign Ministers concerning the proposals contained in the Dooge report.

Mr. Rifkind: My right hon. and learned Friend discussed the issues raised by the report with M. Dumas, the French Foreign Minister, on 21 May. He has also discussed the issues at other meetings with European Community Foreign Ministers, for example in the margins of the Foreign Affairs Council.

Egypt (Ministerial Visit)

31. Mr. Charles Morrison asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent visit of the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Shoreham (Mr. Luce) to Egypt.

Mr. Luce: I paid a brief visit to Egypt on 1 May for meetings with President Mubarak and members of the Egyptian Government. In these, I gave an account of my earlier visit to Sudan and exchanged views on bilateral topics and developments in the middle east since President Mubarak's visit to London in March.

Strategic Defence Initiative

32. Mr. McWilliam asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the United States Administration concerning the strategic defence initiative.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for St. Helens, North (Mr. Evans).

36. Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he discussed at the Bonn summit the possibility of a concerted European response to the strategic defence initiative.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The possibility of a concerted European response was not discussed in detail, although as Chancellor Kohl said after the summit the strategic defence initiative was touched on in the course of the meetings that took place.

37. Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he had discussions at the Bonn summit about a concerted European response to the United States strategic defence initiative proposals.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce).

51. Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the diplomatic consequences of President Reagan's strategic defence initiative.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for St. Helens, North (Mr. Evans).

62. Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he had discussions at the Bonn summit about a concerted European response to the strategic defence initiative proposals; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce).

Soviet Foreign Minister (Visit)

34. Mr. Hill asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if a date has yet been arranged for the planned visit to the United Kingdom of the Soviet Foreign Minister.

Mr. Rifkind: No. Dates are under discussion on diplomatic channels.

India

35. Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's relations with the Government of India.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave earlier today to the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West (Mr. Janner).

Indian Ocean (Ministerial Visit)

38. Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on political developments in the Indian ocean following the recent visit by the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Pentlands (Mr. Rifkind).

Mr. Rifkind: We hope that progress can be achieved in regional co-operation and development now that the Indian Ocean Commission has been expanded to include not only Madagascar, Mauritius and Seychelles, but, as from January this year, Comoros. Member states also agreed in principle to the adhesion of Reunion (France), the details of which are still to be worked out.

The United Kingdom has good relations with the countries in the area as illustrated by the very successful visits which I paid to Mauritius and Madagascar in May this year and to Seychelles in July last year.

El Salvador (Refugees)

39. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the United Nations High Commissioner on Refugees concerning the number of refugees in Honduras from El Salvador.

Mr. Renton: None.

Central American

40. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to seek to visit Central America.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at present to visit Central America.

South Africa

41. Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek a meeting of the United Nations Security Council to consider action under chapter 7 against South Africa to secure implementation of United Nations Security Council resolution 435.

Mr. Rifkind: No. We do not consider that chapter VII measures against South Africa would be effective in securing South African agreement to the implementation of Security Council resolution 435.

Guatemala

42. Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is his intention to seek to re-establish diplomatic relations with Guatemala.

Mr. Renton: Discussions have been conducted with the Guatemalan Government about the possible resumption of consular relations which were broken off unilaterally by Guatemala in 1981. Nothing has yet been decided.

Common Agricultural Policy (Reform)

43. Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reforms of the common agricultural policy have been recently discussed by European Economic Community Foreign Ministers.

Mr. Rifkind: Since the adoption by the Council of Ministers of a text on budget discipline, my right hon. and learned Friend has discussed reform of the common agriculture policy at a number of bilateral meetings with Foreign Ministers of other member states.

Government Communication Headquarters

44. Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on current industrial relations at Government communications headquarters.

Mr. Renton: Following the election of officers and an executive committee the Government Communications Staff Federation came into being on 1 May 1985. An encouraging start has been made and discussions and negotiations are currently under way on a day-to-day basis between the federation and Government communications headquarters management on a wide variety of matters.

EC-Contadora Countries (Meeting)

45. Mr. McCartney asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he now expects the meeting of Foreign Ministers of the European Economic Community and Contadora countries to take place.

Mr. Renton: Contacts are taking place with a view to organising, in the course of this year, another ministerial meeting on the lines of the one which took place at San Jose in September 1984.

Geneva Disarmament Negotiations

46. Sir Peter Blaker asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent consultations he has had with the United States Secretary of State about the disarmament negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union in Geneva.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I meet Mr. Shultz regularly. Our most recent meeting was in Vienna on 15 May during the celebration of the 30th anniversary of the Austrian State Treaty.

70. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the prospects for the next stage of the arms negotiations at Geneva.

Mr. Luce: We hope that the next round will see a serious and businesslike approach by the Soviet Union towards achieving the agreed objectives of the talks, which we fully support. But it will be wrong to expect that the talks will produce swift results on these complex issues.

Anglo-Canadian Relations

47. Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Anglo-Canadian relations.

Mr. Renton: Anglo-Canadian relations are close and harmonious. As partners in the Commonwealth and North Atlantic Treaty Organisation and participants in the summit seven, the United Kingdom and Canada share many interests. Trade and investment are also of major importance.

There are extensive contacts between the United Kingdom and Canada at all levels, including frequent ministerial visits and parliamentary and official consultations on many matters of mutual concern.

Ugandan Asians (Compensation Claims)

48. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will report on progress to date in the various compensation claims outstanding since the expulsion of Ugandan Asians from Uganda in the early 1970s.

Mr. Renton: When my hon. Friend the Member for Edinburgh, Pentlands (Mr. Rifkind) visited Uganda in March, Ugandan Ministers told him that they were continuing to give priority to processing applications for repossession of property. They had received 1,700 such applications, of which over 800 were from claimants in Britain. Up to March they had made 131 offers of repossession to former owners, most of whom are in Britain.

The Ugandans told my hon. Friend that they intend to deal with claims for compensation at a later date. There are 3,000 such claims of which slightly over 1,000 are from persons in Britain.

My hon. Friend urged the Ugandans to speed up this work.

Moscow

49. Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to visit Moscow.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have at present no plans to do so.

International Debt

50. Mr. Barnett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the foreign policy implications of the current debt problems of Latin American and African countries.

Mr. Rifkind: As my right hon. and learned Friend said on 20 March at column 526 to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central (Mr. Fisher) the Latin American debt problem has led to an intensified dialogue between ourselves and the debtor countries of the area.

As the recent Bonn economic summit declaration noted, we also intend to intensify our co-operation with African countries to help them develop their economic potential.

Namibia

52. Mr. Thorne asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on recent events in Namibia.

83. Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on recent developments over Namibia.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden).

81. Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will review the policy of not accepting the International Court of Justice advisory opinion on Namibia.

Mr. Rifkind: No. There are legal difficulties — which have been acknowledged by successive Governments — in accepting the International Court of Justice's advisory opinion of 1971. I do not believe that further examination would resolve these.

Central America (US Trade Policy)

53. Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implications for the United Kingdom and the EEC of current United States trade policy with Central American countries.

Mr. Renton: The United States has not asked its allies to change their trade policies towards Central America.

Sudan (Ministerial Visit)

55. Mr. Dickens asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent visit of the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Shoreham (Mr. Luce) to the Sudan.

Mr. Luce: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie).

Nigeria

56. Mr. Stanbrook asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on relations with Nigeria.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him on 24 April, at column 452. As my right hon. and learned Friend told the House on 25 April, at column 1014, we attach the utmost importance to the re-establishment of good relations with Nigeria, and we believe that the Nigerian Government share our desire to get back on course.

High Technology Research

57. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with his EEC counterparts concerning an EEC programme for high technology research; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: The European Community already has a substantial research and development programme mainly dealing with industrial technology and management of energy resource. The French Government have recently proposed establishing a new European research co-ordinating agency which my right hon. and learned Friend has discussed informally with other European Community Foreign Ministers.

Spain

58. Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice he is giving to British residents intending to take holidays in Spain in the current year.

Mr. Renton: We are not at present advising British tourists who have booked holidays in Spain that they should consider changing their plans. It is, above all, for individuals to make their own holiday plans.

67. Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about United Kingdom relations with Spain.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: We enjoy excellent relations with Spain. We are allies in the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation, and have strongly supported Spanish membership of the European Community. Last year our total trade stood at some £3 billion, and some 6 million British citizens visited Spain. We look forward to the development of even closer links as the plans for Spanish entry into the Community are carried into effect.

Warsaw Pact (Foreign Ministers)

59. Sir Fergus Montgomery asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to meet a Foreign Minister of a Warsaw Pact country.

Mr. Rifkind: My right hon. and learned Friend met Mr. Gromyko, Mr. Varkonyi and Mr. Chnoupek last week in Vienna. No doubt there will be other occasions during the year when he has the chance to meet Warsaw Pact Foreign Ministers. Dates for a visit to the United Kingdom by Mr. Gromyko are currently being discussed through diplomatic channels.

Contadora Group (Foreign Ministers)

60. Mr. Benn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to seek to meet the Foreign Ministers of the Contadora group.

Mr. Renton: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. McCartney).

Lebanon (Christian Community)

63. Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he is contemplating any initiative to seek to relieve the plight of the Christian communities in the Lebanon following the Israeli withdrawal.

Mr. Luce: I refer my hon. and learned Friend to the answer which I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Bishop Auckland (Mr. Foster).

Human Rights Conference (Canada)

64. Mr. Sumberg asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the United Kingdom delegation to the conference on security and co-operation in Europe human rights conference in Ottawa will seek an opportunity to raise the issue of the freedom of individuals to practise their chosen profession without being subjected to religious or racial discrimination.

Mr. Rifkind: It is not our practice to give commitments in advance to raise particular issues in discussions such as the Ottawa meeting. I can, however, assure the hon. Member that the matter to which he has referred will be borne in mind by our delegation there.

86. Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the issue of postal communications will be raised by the British delegation to the conference on security and co-operation in Europe experts' meeting on human rights and fundamental freedoms in Ottowa and, in particular, the right of all citizens of countries which are signatories to the Helsinki Final Act to send and to receive letters without interference or obstruction.

Mr. Rifkind: I can confirm that the general question of concern to the hon. Member has been raised at the Ottawa meeting by the United Kingdom delegation.

Soviet Jews

66. Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent action he has taken to draw to the attention of the Government of the Soviet Union the strong feelings held in the West about the imprisonment or other forms of ill-treatment of Soviet Jews wishing to emigrate to Israel.

Mr. Rifkind: During the visit of Mr. Gorbachev to Britain last December, both my rigt hon. Friend the Prime Minister and my right hon. and learned Friend drew attention to the widespread concern in this country at the problems faced by Soviet Jewry, particularly on the question of emigration. We have continued to monitor the situation closely, and remain committed to taking suitable opportunities to press the Soviet Union on these and other human rights issues.

EC (Policy Development)

68. Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further proposals he intends to place before his European Community partners for the development of Community policies.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have nothing to add to the reply which I gave to my hon. Friend on 24 April at columns 452 and 453.

EC (Ministerial Discussions)

69. Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what matters he currently plans to discuss in the near future with his opposite numbers in the EEC.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The agenda of the next Foreign Affairs Council on 18-19 June has not yet been fixed, though preparations for the European Council on 28-29 June will almost certainly be discussed. My next meeting with my European Community colleagues will be on 8-9 June to discuss political co-operation. The topics for that informal meeting have yet to be decided.

International Debt

71. Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current debt position of Latin American and African countries.

Mr. Rifkind: A number of countries have made good progress in tackling their individual debt difficulties. The soundest way of easing the problem is to build on this progress. We will continue to co-operate with other Governments, international institutions and banks to tackle the problem in a flexible and effective manner.

Charter 77 (Prague Discussions)

72. Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on his Department's talks with representatives of Charter 77 in Prague.

Mr. Rifkind: During my right hon. and learned Friend's recent visit to Czechoslovakia, two senior members of the delegation had an informal meeting with a number of sympathisers and signatories of the Charter 77 movement. It is normal during visits of this kind to make contact with as wide a range of opinion as possible.

Foreign and Commonwealth Office officials made use of the meeting to make it clear that there is strong support in the United Kingdom for the full implementation of the Helsinki final act in all the countries of Europe, particularly including its provisions relating to civil and political rights.

Tanzania

73. Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about Britain's relations with Tanzania.

Mr. Rifkind: We have good relations with Tanzania and attach importance to them. President Nyerere's visit to Britain in March as a guest of Government provided an opportunity to hold discussions on a wide range of bilateral and international issues.

A major feature of our relations is our bilateral aid programme which amounted to over £16 million in 1984-85.

Radio Broadcasts (Interference)

Mr. Burt asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make representations to the Soviet authorities about the level and intensity of jamming of BBC external services broadcasts and other interference including the Russian service and world service.

Mr. Renton: The Soviet authorities are well aware of our strong feelings about the continued jamming of BBC services in the Soviet Union and elsewhere, which contravenes the spirit and letter of the Helsinki final act as well as article 35 of the Convention of the International Telecommunication Union of which the Soviet Union is a signatory. We continue to take suitable opportunities to remind them of their commitments under these agreements, most recently at the Anglo-Soviet cultural talks in March.

Human Rights

75. Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what improvements to the protection of human rights under the European convention were agreed by Her Majesty's Government at the Vienna review conference in March; and what further initiatives he proposes to take in this area.

Mr. Renton: At the Vienna conference I signed the eighth protocol to the European Convention of Human Rights. This will have the effect of reducing delays. The conference discussed a number of proposals which will be considered further in Strasbourg. We support practical proposals for improving the procedures of the European Convention of Human Rights.

El Salvador

77. Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to seek to visit El Salvador.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at present to visit El Salvador.

Warsaw Pact Countries (Visits)

78. Mr. Harris asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he plans to seek to visit any Warsaw pact country during the rest of the current year.

Mr. Rifkind: My right hon. and learned Friend has at present no plans to do so.

Christian Community (Lebanon)

79. Mr. Leadbitter asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what political initiatives are being taken to seek to prevent further attacks on Lebanese Christians by Syrian-backed militia.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Bishop Auckland (Mr. Foster).

Soviet Research (Space Weapons)

80. Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with NATO Foreign Ministers about the extent of Soviet research into space weapons.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: We remain in close touch with our allies about both the extent and the nature of Soviet research programmes which we believe the West must seek to balance.

British Council

82. Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received about the level of funding of the British Council for 1985-86.

Mr. Renton: Since November a total of 24 letters have been received from Members of Parliament and members of the public. There have been three parliamentary questions.

Central America (Contadora Process)

84. Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the Contadora process in Central America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd).

European Integration

85. Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has received any proposals from the Commission about further European integration.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer my hon. Friend to the programme of the Commission for 1985, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

PLO (Tunis Statement)

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what report he has received from Her Majesty's ambassador in Tunis regarding the statement issued in Tunis on 4 May by the Palestine Liberation Organisation criticising Her Majesty's Ministers for refusing to meet Palestine Liberation Organisation representatives and describing the Balfour declaration as an unjust practice against the Palestinian people; and what response has been made by Her Majesty's ambassador to the Tunisian Government concerning this incident.

Mr. Luce: We are aware of the statement referred to, which was based on a misunderstanding. The Palestine Liberation Organisation knows that meetings with British Ministers will remain difficult while its policies on the recognition of Israel's right to exist and the use of violence continue to be ambiguous. There has been no change in our policy.

Libya (Nuclear Energy)

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what report he has had from Her Majesty's ambassador in Algiers regarding the report of the Arab Energy Conference on Algiers Radio on 4 May that Libya would start to generate electricity from nuclear energy in the coming decade; what checks are envisaged under the non-proliferation treaty to ensure that excess plutonium is not produced which could be used for nuclear weapons; and whether he intends that this matter should be raised at the United Nations.

Mr. Luce: As a non-nuclear weapon state party to the non-proliferation treaty, Libya has undertaken not to manufacture or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons, and to accept International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards on all its nuclear activities. In the event that Libya starts to produce nuclear-generated electricity, the question of safeguards on the plutonium arising would be a matter for the IAEA rather than the United Nations.

Iran-Iraq War

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what report he has received from the head of the British interests section in the Royal Swedish embassy in Tehran of the address made at Tehran university on 10 May by the Speaker of the Iranian Parliament, Hojjat Oleslam Ali Akbar Hashemi-Rafsanjani, relating to the Arab deputation visiting London, and in which he accused the United Kingdom of supplying arms to Iraq and wanting the continuation of the Gulf war; and if he will instruct the head of section to register a strong protest about this accusation.

Mr. Luce: The British interests section in Tehran has reported on this address. The Iranian authorities are kept fully informed of the United Kingdom's policy with regard to the Iran-Iraq conflict, both through the British interests section in Tehran and the Iranian embassy in London. It has been made clear that we wish to see the earliest possible end to the conflict and supply no items of defence equipment to either side which might significantly prolong or exacerbate the conflict.

Afghanistan

Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has held with representatives of allied countries about events in Afghanistan.

Mr. Renton: We have full and frequent discussions about the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan with our friends and allies in the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation and the European Community.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Clatterbridge Hospital, Bebington

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from the relevant health authority regarding staff shortages and the amount of resources available at Clatterbridge hospital, Bebington; and what response he has made.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: None.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about nursing shortages in the radiotherapy unit in Clatterbridge hospital, Bebington.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Responsibility for the management of Clatterbridge hospital rests with the Wirral health authority. The hon. Member may therefore wish to write to the chairman about this.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many patients have died within 24 hours of being moved between wards at Clatterbridge hospital, Bebington.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not collect this detailed information centrally. The hon. Member may therefore care to write to the chairman of the Wirral health authority.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about the funds made available to Clatterbridge hospital, Bebington, for radiotherapy treatment and intensive nursing care.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We allocate funds to the Mersey regional health authority and it allocates part of these funds to the Wirral health authority for the provision of all its services. These allocations are not usually broken down into resources for individual units because that is a matter for the management of each district health authority to determine according to national policy guidelines and their own judgment of local priorities. We allocated £503 million revenue expenditure to Mersey regional health authority for the year 1985-86 which is an increase of 4·9 per cent. over its 1984-85 funding.

Benefits (Cohabiting)

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the numbers of (a) men and (b) women who have had their social security benefits stopped in the last five years on the grounds that they were cohabiting.

Mr. Whitney: The information requested is in the table:

Number of decisions made under the "Living Together" Rules which resulted in the disallowance or withdrawal of Social Security Benefits

	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	Total
I. Contributory Benefits

I and II Grand Total	17,942	19,305	19,308	18,851	17,792	93,198

Notes:
1. Separate figures for men and women are not available.
2. Figures for contributory benefits include data for both disallowance and withdrawal cases.
3. Figures for contributory benefits are at 31 December each year.
   Figures for supplementary benefit are at 30 November.
4. Figures include cases where two or more decisions were made in respect of the same person in any one year.

Blind Persons

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the use of new technological developments to assist the blind.

Mr. Newton: Developments in new technology can be of great assistance to visually handicapped people. Examples are the use of synthetic speech in a range of equipment such as telephone switchboards, word processors, calculators and many household articles; the opportunity offered by microelectronics for translating print into Braille or speech, and Braille into print; the developments of "paperless Braille"; and the application of closed-circuit television as a reading aid for visually impaired people. We gave encouragement to the applications of new technology for the benefit of disabled people—including those with visual handicap—through the information technology awareness programme sponsored by the Department of Trade and Industry. About £5 to £6 million went towards projects to assist disabled people.

Hay Fever

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what assessments have been carried out in the National Health Service of recent Japanese advances in the treatment of hay fever.

Mr. John Patten: We have no knowledge of such advances. If any developments are reported, no doubt clinicians will take due account of them in deciding upon appropriate treatment for particular patients.

Cardiac Unit, Westminster Hospital

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether a decision has been reached on the future of the cardiac unit at the Westminster hospital; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Following careful consideration of all the issues and the many representations made to us, we have decided to approve the proposals put forward by the North-West Thames regional health authority for changes in the pattern of cardiac surgery services in west central London. These proposals will involve the closure of the small unit at the Westminster hospital and a corresponding increase in open heart sugery at the Brompton hospital. We have taken steps to ensure that there will be no reduction in the level of service in London. There are three main reasons for our decision:

> the Westminster unit is too small to be able to continue to provide the sort of high quality service which can be provided at larter units such as the Brompton. It faces difficulties over staff recruitment and recognition of training posts;
> the service which at the moment costs £550,000 to provide at the Westminster unit can be reprovided at the Brompton hospital for less than half that sum. The savings will be used by the regional health authority for other priority patient services in the region; and > the proposal is consistent with the longer-term plans of the North-West Thames regional health authority to concentrate cardiac surgery services in three units within the region, including the Brompton. We are quite satisfied that this will enable the regional health authority to provide services at a level sufficient to meet the needs of north-west Thames residents.

These changes therefore will not affect the total amount of open heart surgery available either to London residents or in the country as a whole. Nor do we consider that concern about the effects of the closure of this unit on other services at the Westminster hospital has any real foundation. The Brompton hospital, which is part of the national heart and chest hospitals group, is located less than three miles from the Westminster hospital. It can provide the necessary support for other clinical services there together with all the facilities required for undergraduate and postgraduate medical teaching.

It has been clear for some time that the unit at the Westminster hospital had a doubtful future unless a means could be found to expand its role. Various attempts to find such a wider role have been made in the past 18 months. All have failed. The service has been provided by a locum consultant and the junior medical posts are not recognised for training purposes. It is only sensible to transfer the service to under-used facilities at the Brompton hospital.

Over the next few years we expect there to be a rapid expansion of cardiac services nationally which will largely take place outside London to enable patients to be treated nearer to their own homes. In addition, we have already given the go-ahead to £17 million of capital development at the Brompton site on the Fulham road to support the Brompton in its national and international role.

Hearing Systems

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer of 14 May, Official Report, column 116, which of his Department's buildings have induction loops; how many other buildings of his Department to which hearing-impaired people may require access, either as employees or clients, are without induction loops; and if he has any plans to install induction loops in more buildings.

Mr. Newton: Buildings with induction loops or other hearing systems, excluding amplified telephones for which no central record is available, are:

Induction Loops
Bristol South ILO
Cambridge ILO
Exeter ILO
Hannibal House, London

Other Hearing Aid Systems
Cardiff East ILO
Deptford ILO
Dunstable ILO
Hendon ILO
London North Regional Office

I regret that my earlier reply to the right hon. Member indicated that all nine buildings were fitted with induction loops.

The Department occupies 1,074 buildings, including buildings shared with other Departments. There are at present no general plans to install further induction loop systems. Facilities provided for hearing-impaired people are under review, including assessment of experience with induction loop and other systems.

Jessop Accoustics

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what consideration he has given to the consequences for deaf children of the closedown of Jessop Accoustics of Bethnal Green; if there is any action he is taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Jessop Accoustics produced radio microphone hearing aids which are used by many hearing-impaired children, mainly in an educational setting, although they were not the major supplier. I understand that the receiver who has been appointed for the company hopes to be able to sell it as a going concern, which should safeguard the interests of past and future customers.

Board and Lodging Payments

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many persons receiving board and lodging payments will lose them by the end of May.

Mr. Whitney: This will depend on the number of people who cease to qualify for supplementary board and lodging allowance when their claims are reassessed, which cannot be precisely estimated.

Social Security Reviews

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how much he expects the production of (a) video material and (b) publicity and explanatory material in support of his Green Paper on the future of the welfare state to cost;

(2) what he estimates to be the total cost of the social security reviews;

(3) if he will list all the payments made to individual members of the social security review teams, either in the form of expenses or fees;

(4) if he will list those individuals or organisations who received expenses for giving oral evidence to the social security reviews, and the cost involved.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Cervical Screening

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when the hon. Member for Walsall, North can expect a reply to his letter of 25 March concerning cervical cancer testing.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have written to the hon. Member today.

Pensions

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide figures for the number of pensioners who have each received state earnings-related pensions in (a) Brighton area and (b) Newham for each year since 1979; how many on present trends would be expected to benefit from the scheme for each year until the year 2000; and if he will estimate how much on average each beneficiary would expect to obtain from the scheme in additional weekly payments to the year 2000.

Mr. Whitney: Information about retirement pensions can be obtained for Great Britain or for England, Scotland and Wales separately but not for smaller areas of the country.

Legionnaire's Disease

Mr. Cash asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will now announce the composition, terms of reference and date of the independent public inquiry into the outbreak of legionnaire's disease in Stafford; and whether the inquiry will be held under the provisions of section 84 of the National Health Services Act 1977.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have decided to establish a public inquiry under section 84 of the National Health Services Act 1977 and section 70 of the Public Health (Control of Infectious Diseases) Act 1984, with the following terms of reference:

— to inquire into the cause of the recent outbreak of legionnaire's disease in Staffordshire;
—to consider the adequacy of measures taken to investigate and to deal with the outbreak;
—to report to the Secretary of State for Social Services and make recommendations on any action necessary to reduce the danger of future outbreaks originating in hospitals, other buildings and elsewhere.

I am pleased to say that Sir John Badenoch, DM, FRCP, honorary consultant physician, Oxfordshire district health authority, and chairman of the joint committee on vaccination and immunisation, has agreed to chair the inquiry. Other members will include Professor Francis O'Grady, professor of microbiology at the University of Nottingham and Mr. Dan Hannah, chairman of Warrington district health authority. The names of two further members, a lawyer and an engineer, will be announced soon. Preliminary work will start straight away and the inquiry is expected to begin taking evidence early in July.

We have all been shocked by the scale of the outbreak of legionnaire's disease in Staffordshire. Our sympathy goes to all those who have lost relatives or friends. Our main concern must now be to ensure that the facts of this tragic outbreak are investigated as fully as possible so that we can take steps to reduce the danger of similar outbreaks occurring in the future. The wide range of expertise of the members and the terms of reference will enable the inquiry to adopt a very broad approach. They will be in no way confined to considering precautions in National Health Service premises. In addition to investigating the cause of this outbreak, they will be able to make recommendations on measures which could help to prevent further outbreaks wherever they might occur. They will be free to make interim recommendations to us on any matter as their work proceeds.

NHS Management Board

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will make a statement about further appointments to, and relating to, the National Health Service management board.

Mr. Fowler: I have accepted the recommendation of the chairman of the NHS management board, Mr. Victor Paige, CBE, to appoint Mr. Ian Mills, a senior partner in Price Waterhouse, to the NHS management board as director of financial management.

Th role of the director will be to provide leadership in the initiation and implementation of improved financial planning and control throughout the National Health Service. Mr. Mills will take up his appointment, which is for three years, on 1 July. He will return to Price Waterhouse at the end of the three years.

I have also accepted Victor Paige's recommendation to appoint Mr. D. N. Idris Pearce, a senior partner in Richard Ellis, as part-time property adviser to the board. He will advise on the best use of land in line with health service needs and on the acquisition and disposal of property. This appointment will provide leadership and expertise in developing the property function in the National Health Service.

Drug Companies

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the return on capital allowed to pharmaceutical companies in the financial year 1984-85, and the figure he is assuming for 1985-86 in making the estimates for the current year.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 16 May, c. 226]: For the largest companies, the profit targets in 1984-85 ranged between 15 per cent. and 20·5 per cent. return on (historic) capital; for 1985-86 the range is 15 to 17 per cent. In certain circumstances, companies may be allowed to retain, within prescribed limits, profits in excess of the target rate.

NATIONAL FINANCE

EC (Own Resources)

88. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the conditions laid down by Her Majesty's Government for justifying an increase in the resources of the Common Market have now been met; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Yes. The conditions which the Government laid down for agreeing to an increase in EC resources were the establishment of an effective system of budgetary discipline and of a lasting solution to the problem of budgetary imbalances. The Council of Ministers agreed the arrangements for budgetary discipline last December. On 8 May, they formally agreed to the text of the new own resources decision, which provides for the mechanism agreed at Fointainebleau for reducing our contributions as well as for the increase in the Community's VAT ceiling. The decision will be brought before the House for approval in due course.

Sub-Saharan Africa (Debt)

Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total value of official, and private, debt repayments to the United Kingdom by countries in sub-Saharan Africa in 1984; and what was the total estimated financial flow between the United Kingdom and countries in sub-Saharan Africa during 1984 or the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The information is not readily available. I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Rates

Sir Hector Monro asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what study he has made of the implications for tax on the benefits of a person occupying a company-owned property following the recent rating revaluation in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: Where a person receives accommodation provided by reason of employment the tax charge on the benefit can in certain circumstances be based on the property's annual value. To avoid individual valuations, the Inland Revenue has in practice accepted that a property's gross ratable value may be taken as its annual value for tax purposes. The recent rating revaluation in Scotland will, however, mean that gross rateable values in Scotland will be considerably higher than those in England and Wales or Northern Ireland for equivalent properties.

To avoid unfairness as between taxpayers in different countries of the United Kingdom, the Inland Revenue has decided not to follow the practice of assessing the benefit arising on property in Scotland in strict accordance with the recent rating revaluation figures while the future of rating revaluations is under consideration. Instead, the Inland Revenue will for the time being use figures which will produce broadly the same overall total tax burden for employees in Scotland as the 1978 figures. A statement of practice outlining the procedure to be adopted by the Inland Revenue will be issued in due course.

VAT (Hot Take-away Food)

Mr. Dover asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the answer of 12 November 1984, Official Report, column 189, when he will be in a position to give information on the estimated revenue received as a result of value added tax being imposed on hot take-away food.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 17 May 1985; Vol. 79, c. 247]: In the autumn.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agricultural and Livestock Output

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the proportion of total United Kingdom output of cereals, sugar beet, oilseed rape, milk, sheep, beef, pigs and poultry accounted for by the largest 10 per cent. of holdings for the year 1984, together with the estimated cost of the EEC budget of that production, calculated pro rata, including subventions to sugar, sugar in the case of sugar beet and taking into account the cost of export restitutions.

Mr. MacGregor: The precise data on shares of output sought by the hon. Member is not readily available. I have however, set out below information on farms which account for approximately 10 per cent. of area in the case of crops and of herds or flocks in the case of livestock. It is not possible to calculate expenditure financed by the EAGGF for this production.

Commodity	*United Kingdom output in 1983
Cereals	Top 11·0 per cent. of holdings by area accounted for 50·2 per cent. of output by area
Sugar	Top 9·3 per cent. of holdings by area accounted for 39·3 per cent. of output by area†
Oilseeds	Top 9·1 per cent. of holdings by area accounted for 30·5 per cent. of output by area‡
Sheepmeat	Top 10·1 per cent. of holdings by flock size accounted for 45·7 per cent. of total sheep
Beef	Top 9·1 per cent. of holdings by herd size accounted for 43·3 per cent. of total beef cows
Pigmeat	Top 7·5 per cent. of holdings by herd size accounted for 58·4 per cent. of total pigs
Poultrymeat	Top 7·5 per cent. of holdings by flock size accounted for 54·8 per cent. of total broilers
Eggs	Top 11·8 per cent. of holdings by batteries accounted for 97·8 per cent. of total laying fowls
Milk	Top 15·2 per cent. of holdings by herd size accounted for 39·4 per cent. of total dairy cows
Others	—

* Based on Agricultural Statistics United Kingdom 1983.
† Sugar beet production.
‡ Oilseed rape production.

Milk

Mr. Gould asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table comparing the European Economic Community quota for milk output with the amount required to meet domestic consumption of liquid milk and dairy products in 1984 and 1985; and what proposals are contemplated for bringing supply into balance with domestic demand.

Mr. MacGregor: The quota for deliveries to dairies in the Community for the 1984-85 quota year was 99,049 million tonnes. For 1985-86 the quota for deliveries to dairies is 98·177 million tonnes: the size of the Community reserve for both years has been agreed at 393,000 tonnes. The EC Commission estimates consumption in the Community, in milk equivalent terms, at about 84·5 million tonnes in 1984-85 and 85·0 million tonnes in 1985-86.

As part of the recent agreement on prices for 1985-86 the Commission have said that they will be submitting to the Council by 1 November 1985 a proposal designed to introduce Community arrangements for premiums for the cessation of milk deliveries.

Pesticides

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will outline his policy on the approval of pesticides for application by aerial spraying means, and what safeguards are required before the use of broad spectrum herbicides such as glyphosphate is approved for aerial application.

Mrs. Fenner: In clearing pesticides specifically for aerial use account is taken of their likely effect on people and animals, non-target crops and the environment in general. Clearance for aerial application on a commercial scale would not be granted for products where this assessment identified a potential risk. In this way only the less toxic, less active or less persistent chemicals have been granted clearance for aerial application. Broad spectrum herbicides, such as glyphosphate, have not been given commercial clearance for aerial application although limited clearances for aerial application in forestry areas have been granted from time to time subject to strict controls.

Following discussions in Committee on the Food and Environment Protection Bill the Advisory Committee on Pesticides has been asked to review the current list of products cleared for aerial application.

Intervention Stocks

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will indicate the locations of European Economic Community intervention stocks held in the north-west region of England.

Mr. Jopling: The locations of EEC intervention stores in the north-west region comprising the counties of Cheshire, Lancashire, Merseyside, Cumbria and Greater Manchester are:

Cereals
Birkenhead

Beef
Liverpool
Salford
St. Helens
Warrington

Skimmed Milk Powder
Bootle
Cockermouth
Kirkby
St. Helens
Warrington
Widnes

Butter
Chester
Fleetwood
Heywood

Country	Salary	Allowances
Chamber of Deputies	Same as Senator.	Same as Senator.
LUXEMBOURG Chamber of Deputies	LF1,137,474 (£13,655) half of which is tax free, LF568,737 (£6,828).	Half the salary is tax free, LF568,737 (£6,828), and is regarded as an allowance for expenses. Allowance of LF12,000 (£144) per annum towards the cost of car insurance premium.
NETHERLANDS Second Chamber	Variable salary ranging from minimum of FL59,762 (£12,770) to FL93,881 (£20,060), according to income from outside occupations, all taxable.	General allowance ranging from FL12,814 (£2,938) to FL5,476 (£5,476) according to distance of home from The Hague; intended to cover subsistence, administrative costs, postal and telephone costs etc. Travel allowance of FL9,460 (£2,021) per annum.
REPUBLIC OF IRELAND Dail Eireann	IR£13,902 (£10,954), all taxable.	Subsistence allowance of IR£17·50 (£13·89) per night for sittings of Dail or committees for MPs 20 miles or more from Dublin; IR£10 (£7·94) for Dublin MPs.
UNITED STATES Senate	US$60,662·50 (£35,684), all taxable. In 1977 a limit on outside earnings equivalent to 15 per cent. of the member's salary was imposed but this was increased to 30 per cent. in December 1982. Compared with Senators, members of the House of Representatives do not add substantially to their income by means of outside earnings.	General allowance ranging from US$33,000 (£19,412) to US$143,000 (£84,118)—average of US$55,000 (£32,353) to cover travel, telephone costs, stationery, postage, constituent mailings and computer services. Varies according to population of state and distance from Washington. Staff allowance, varying according to population of state, ranging from US$621,054 (£365,326) to US$1,247,879 (£734,046) per annum. From January 1983 the general allowance was increased to between US$36,300 (£21,353) and US$157,300 (£92,529). The staff allowance also increased but precise details are not yet available.
House of Representatives	Same as Senator from December 1982, however, members of the House of Representatives will receive US$69,800 (£41,059)—the first time since 1796 that Senators and Congressmen have received different salaries.	General allowance to cover same expenses as for Senator, ranging from $47,300 (£27,824) to US$233,000 (£137,059)—average US$103,000 (£60,588). Varies according to population of district and distance from Washington. Staff allowance of US$352,536 (£207,374), same for all members. Up to US$15,000 (£8,824) may be transferred to general allowance. From January 1983 the general allowance was increased to US$52,000 (£30,588). The staff allowance was also increased but precise details are not yet available.

Note:
Throughout this table the figures in £s given in brackets are converted from local currencies at the rates of exchange prevailing in October 1982.

TRANSPORT

Bridges

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether the pilot study of bridges, to assess the probable cost of strengthening necessary for the heaviest lorries, is now complete; when a nationwide bridge survey will begin; and when he proposes that strengthening work should start.

Mrs. Chalker: The sample survey which is investigating the implications of applying the new assessment code to bridges owned by local authorities and the other major public bodies is expected to be completed by the end of 1985. No decisions regarding any ensuing nationwide bridge survey and strengthening programme will be made until the results are available and have been considered by the various bridge owners.

Lorry Weighbridges

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether weighbridge sites for checkweighing lorries are to be provided (a) on the M25 or (b) elsewhere on the motorway system.

Mrs. Chalker: Yes. A weighbridge enforcement site should be completed at the Leatherhead Interchange, M25, this year. It is hoped to provide one at the M20/M25/A20 interchange at Swanley, Kent, at a later date. Other motorway sites in operation are as follows:

M62 (junction 24)	—Ailney Top, Yorkshire
M62 A627 (M)	—Thornham, Lancashire
M5/A449	—Warndon, Warwickshire
M45/A45	—Dunchurch, Warwickshire
M6 (between junctions 13 and 14)	—Quinton, West Midlands
M1 (junction 18)	—Doxey, Staffordshire
M1 (near junction 20)	—Crick, Northamptonshire
M4 (junction 24)	—Lutterworth, Leicestershire
M4 (A46)	—Coldra, Gwent
M1 (junction 14)	—Tormerton, Avon
M11 (junction 7)	—Harlow, Essex
M9/A54	—Craigforth, Stirling

Additionally, the following motorway sites are in the forward programme:

M1 (junction 36)	—Tankersley, Yorkshire
M180/A18	—Ermine Street, Lincolnshire
M6 (junction 23)	—Robb Lane, Cheshire
M5/A373	—Sampford Perevell, Devon
M1	—Haigh Roundabout, Yorkshire
M61/A58	—Westhoughton, Lancashire
M50 (junction 4)	—Ross-on-Wye, Hereford

Traffic Examiners

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the full complement of licensing authority traffic examiners; how many are currently in post; and how the complement compares with that of 1975.

Mrs. Chalker: The traffic examiner complement is 235 posts; currently, 225 officers are in post.

The 1975 complement is not readily available, but the complement in 1976 was 245 posts.

Car Parking

Mr. George Gardiner asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to publish proposals concerning car parking on footways, verges or the central reservations of urban roads, or to make a commencement order under section 7 of the Road Traffic Act 1974.

Mrs. Chalker: I have at present no such proposals.

Ports

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will publish in the Official Report statistics of the ports used in the United Kingdom by export tonnages originating within Yorkshire and Humberside for the most recent available year;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report statistics for the tonnages of exports originating in other regions and passing by road through Yorkshire and Humberside for the most recent available year, giving details of United Kingdom ports through which the tonnages were shipped;

(3) if he will publish in the Official Report statistics on the export tonnages using Hull and other Humberside ports for the most recently available year, giving origins by region and destinations by continent.

Mr. David Mitchell: The origin and destination of freight traffic through ports is not collected routinely. An origin and destination survey was however carried out in 1978 of international freight traffic, excluding fuel. Table 2b of the report of that survey, "Inland Origins and Destinations of UK International Trade 1978", a copy of which is in the Library, shows the ports used by goods originating in each region. The following table gives information from table 2b for Hull and the other Humber ports, and is expanded to show destination by continent.

Details of road routes were not collected, but table 21 of the report provides some indication of the volume of exports which may have passed through Yorkshire and Humberside.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report statistics on the export tonnages handled (a) by the port of Hull, (b) by other Humberside ports and (c) by the 10 main British ports for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. David Mitchell: Export tonnages for 1974 to 1983, given in the table, are based on regular returns from port authorities and operators. The 10 "main" ports are here selected as those with the highest export tonnage in 1983. For most of these ports, the chief export is oil.

HGV Driving Tests

Mr. Waller asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many heavy goods vehicle driving tests have been cancelled or postponed since 1 January at the Steeton heavy goods vehicle driving test centre (a) because no examiner was available or (b) because of weather conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Since 1 January, 12 heavy goods vehicle driving test appointments at the Steeton centre have been cancelled because of weather conditions, and eight by candidates themselves. Seven have been cancelled because no examiner was available. Over the same period four HGV test periods were not taken up.

747 Aircraft (Safety Exits)

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Transport if the Civil Aviation Authority will reconsider its assessment of British Airways' proposal to reduce the number of safety exits from 747s by two, in the light of the report by the United States National Transport Safety Board's view, that elimination of the mid-fuselage escape doors creates a serious risk that evacuation will not take place in an even manner and could significantly reduce the safety of the aircraft.

Mr. Ridley: The CAA informs me that when it granted the certificate of airworthiness for the Boeing 747 with five main emergency exits per side, it met its requirement that a full load of passengers should be evacuated in not more than 90 seconds, using only half the total number of exits. The aircraft with currently approved United Kingdom seating layouts, including the small increase requested by British Airways, also meets the requirement without the centre doors. Thus evacuation through the smaller number of exits can still be completed within the period specified for passenger aircraft in general, and there is no regulatory ground for refusing approval.

Fuel Flasks

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport if there have been any contaminated leakages during the past five years from the Central Electricity Generating Board's irradiated fuel flasks.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. There has been no such incident.

CIVIL SERVICE

Recruitment Schemes (Surveys)

Mr. Janner asked the Minister for the Civil Service whether the Government have completed the evaluation of the surveys of the ethnic origins of applicants in Civil Service recruitment schemes held in the north-west and the county of Avon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: A report on the surveys is being published today. Copies have been placed in the Library. The surveys covered non-industrial recruitment during March to August 1984. A high response rate was achieved. The proportion of respondents classifying themselves as being of ethnic minority origin was, overall, close to the estimated proportion in the working population as a whole, but was lower for those in the younger age range. Because of the small numbers involved, it was not possible to draw firm conclusions from the results.

Building on this experience, a comprehensive 12-month survey of executive officer recruitment will be conducted nationally, starting at the end of this year; there will be a continuing programme of sample surveys in the main areas of departmental recruitment; and there will be a service-wide study to follow the long term progress of staff who enter some of the main recruitment grades during 1986. In addition, ways will be explored of giving further encouragement to ethnic minority school leavers, in particular, to apply for Civil Service posts.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Child Prostitutes (Contraceptives)

Mr. Dickens asked the Attorney-General on how many occasions in each of the last five years the Director of Public Prosecutions has instituted or taken over proceedings against a doctor who has issued a contraceptive to a child prostitute for either aiding and abetting the procurement of a child for immoral purposes or for enticement; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General: Records maintained by the Director of Public Prosecutions relate to categories of offence which are not further classified so as to permit identification of cases the facts of which correspond with those specified in the Question. But so far as can be ascertained, the Director of Public Prosecutions has not been responsible for any prosecution of this nature in the past five years.

Solicitor Schemes

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Attorney-General in which regions of the United Kingdom experiments in 24-hour duty solicitor schemes have taken place at police stations.

The Attorney-General: Experimental 24-hour duty solicitor schemes have taken place at police stations in Birmingham and Northamptonshire as part of the Law Society's planning for a national scheme.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Women in Business

Mrs. Rumbold asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has as to the number of women chief executives and general managers who are running high technology or related businesses in England and Wales.

Mr. Butcher: The information requested is not available.

Mrs. Rumbold asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has as to the percentage of women employed in industry and business management at each level compared with overall management structure in industry.

Mr. Butcher: Estimates from the 1983 labour force survey indicate that 7 per cent. of employed women in Great Britain were employers and managers. The comparable figure for the employed population as a whole was 13 per cent. and for employed men 17 per cent.

Mrs. Rumbold asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has as to the percentage of new businesses started up with women as the principals in the past year.

Mr. Butcher: I regret that the information requested could not be provided except at disproportionate cost.

Pirate Radio

Mr. Pendry asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give an estimate of the date by which he expects to have eliminated pirate radio broadcasting within the United Kingdom either as a result of steps currently being taken to enforce the law, or as a result of additional new measures to be introduced; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: I cannot estimate when unlicensed broadcasting will be eliminated since the individual broadcaster, not I, takes the decision on whether to broadcast. What I can ensure is that breaking the law in this way is subject to rapid enforcement action and financially is never worthwhile. Since the start of 1985 the Department's radio investigation service has taken action on 76 occasions against 42 unlicensed broadcasting stations. In the same period, 48 people have been prosecuted and convicted for their involvement in the operation of unlicensed stations.

Small Firms Loan Guarantee Scheme

Mr. Bellingham asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if any additional lenders can now offer facilities under the small firms loan guarantee scheme arrangements.

Mr. Trippier: I am now in a position to announce that the Trustee Savings Bank has been added to the list of participating banks and financial institutions which are able to offer facilities under the loan guarantee arrangements.

Satellite Master Antenna Television Systems

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the Government's policy towards the licensing of satellite master antenna television systems for the reception of programme services from low-powered satellites.

Mr. Pattie: My right hon. Friend, the Home Secretary and I have received considerable numbers of representations from cable operators, programme providers and equipment manufacturers in support of the liberalisation of satellite master antenna television systems. We have considered these representations at length particularly because of their implications for wideband cable systems and direct broadcasting by satellite.

We have now concluded that, subject to certain safeguards, some relaxation in the licensing of SMATV and other cable diffusion systems can be permitted. Systems which serve more than one dwelling house or single set of premises will require licences under the Cable and Broadcasting Telecommunications and Wireless Telegraphy Acts and the Cable Authority will be charged with the task of determining whether the licensing of a particular system is consistent with its primary duty of promoting wideband cable systems. For this reason these licences will be restricted in certain cases; the terms of such licences will be shorter; and the operator will be expected to give way in due course to any operator who is granted a wideband franchise by the Cable Authority covering the area in question. The "must carry" rule, involving an obligation to carry DBS and broadcast services, will apply. These principles are elaborated in a detailed guidance note which the Cable Authority is issuing today. All those wishing to operate SMATV and other cable diffusion systems, even if the particular system is confined to a single set of premises, should obtain a copy of that note.

We have further decided that direct reception of low-powered satellite services on a single set of premises may also be permitted. Such reception will require a licence under the Wireless Telegraphy Act, but this licence will not carry with it any guarantee that services will be able to be received without interference. Because of this, and the likely size and relatively high cost of a dish currently needed to receive these services, it seems unlikely that this facility will be taken up in the short term by many members of the general public, although some commercial organisations may wish to do so.

Moreover, all those wishing to operate SMATV and other cable diffusion systems should note that, in most circumstances, dishes also require planning permission at present. The Government published proposals in 1984 to amend the general development order to take account of a wide range of recent developments in the telecommunications field; but these changes have not yet been introduced and are unlikely to reduce controls on dishes of the size currently required for low-powered satellite reception.

The low-powered satellite services originating in the United Kingdom at present are primarily intended to be retransmitted by cable systems operating in the United Kingdom, so their content is regulated by the Cable Authority. We expect this pattern to continue. If future services should develop in this country which are intended exclusively for direct reception in the United Kingdom and clearly demonstrate the need for additional regulatory powers, the Government will consider what steps might be necessary to provide the appropriate regulation.

The Government are satisfied that these steps will provide a welcome boost to the cable industry and represent a significant opportunity, both domestically and eventually internationally, for our equipment and programme service industries.

Life Insurance Contracts (Traded Options)

Mr. Hayes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will seek to amend the insurance companies regulations to clarify whether options traded on the stock exchange are a permitted link for life insurance contracts.

Mr. Fletcher: Whilst it is my understanding that the insurance companies regulations do not make options traded on the Stock Exchange a permitted link, interpretation of the regulations on this point has given rise to some difficulty. I therefore intend to take an early opportunity to amend the regulations so as to put beyond doubt that traded options are not permitted links. Further consideration will be given to the suitability of traded options and other assets as permitted links within the new regulatory regime proposed in the White Paper on financial services.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

UNESCO

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in relation to Britain's membership of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Raison: We will make a final review of our membership of UNESCO towards the end of 1985 after the general conference. Until then we shall continue in consultation with other member states, to pursue vigorously the reforms set out in my letters of 2 April and 4 July 1984 and that of my right hon. and learned Friend of 5 December 1984 to the Director-General of UNESCO.

SCOTLAND

Tayside Health Board (Finance)

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give in percentage terms the element of growth finance given to Tayside health board in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. John MacKay: In the years 1974-75 to 1977-78, resources were made available to health boards on the basis of the sums required to meet the cost of existing services and to fund approved new developments. Arrangements were introduced in 1978-79 — Scottish health auhority revenue equalisation formula — with a view to achieving a more equitable distribution of available resources among boards. Since then Tayside health board, which is the best funded board in Scotland in SHARE terms, has received annual increases in financial allocations intended to meet only expected increases in pay and prices.

Forth and Clyde Canal

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make a statement on the extent of his Department's involvement in the promotion of the Forth and Clyde canal for leisure, recreation and amenity purposes;

(2) what consideration he has given to district council local plans within the Strathclyde region and Central region in respect of the Forth and Clyde canal.

Mr. Younger: My Department has not been involved directly in the promotion of the Forth and Clyde canal for leisure, recreation and amenity purposes. I am, however, aware that a number of local authorities, including Strathclyde regional council and Falkirk district council, and other bodies are at present involved in the preparation of a local plan dealing specifically with recreational, amenity and commercial uses which might be expected to develop on the canal. I understand that the authorities and bodies involved have agreed that the processing of the plan through its statutory stages should be the responsibility of Strathclyde regional council and Falkirk district council. Although my Department has been keeping abreast of progress on its preparation, the plan will not be formally submitted to me until such time as it has been finalised and an opportunity has been given to interested parties to make representations on its provisions. I am informed that the plan is not likely to reach that stage before the autumn of this year.

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what assistance the Scottish Development Agency is providing in the development of amenity, leisure and recreational usage of the Forth and Clyde canal.

Mr. Allan Stewart: By way of land renewal schemes designed to bring about an overall environmental improvement to the canal, the agency has spent some £1·25 million. In the current financial year two further land renewal projects totalling £110,000 are planned. In addition, as a member of a working group led by the British Waterways Board, the agency will be contributing to the cost of a study of the development potential of the canal.

Education (Provision and Standards)

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the change in the levels of (a) provision and (b) standards in education in the years 1979 to 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Between 1979-80 and 1984-85, the provision made for education in the rate support grant settlements increased in real terms by 5·1 per cent. per pupil. In making this level of provision, the Government's aim has been to maintain standards and effect improvements in appropriate areas.

Schoolchildren (Behaviour)

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to seek to make parents responsible for their children's behaviour at school such as a system of fines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I believe that the regulations governing exclusion from school are adequate to ensure the early involvement of parents when problems arise over their children's behaviour at school. Moreover, there is provision in existing legislation for the prosecution of a parent whose child fails to attend school regularly without reasonable excuse, notwithstanding that the child may have been required to discontinue his attendance at school for disciplinary reasons. I do not consider that it would be possible to make it an offence for a parent to fail to ensure that his child complies with school rules, since to define the offence adequately one would have to impose an undesirable uniformity on the disciplinary policies of individual schools.

Corporal Punishment

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many education authorities in Scotland have now banned corporal punishment in schools; what representations he has received about the consequences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Of the 12 education authorities in Scotland, six have completed the process of abolition and two others expect to do so by the end of this school session. Of the remainder, three authorities have abolished corporal punishment in all but secondary schools and only one authority has decided to retain corporal punishment in both the primary and secondary sector.

Such representations as I have received in this matter relate mainly to the effectiveness of the alternative sanctions, particularly the time spent in their administration.

Aluminium Mobilisation (Report)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans there are to publish the results of the research on aluminium mobilisation, commissioned by the Forestry Commission and the Department of the Environment with the Macaulay Institute of Soil Research, Aberdeen; what results the Foresty Commission has obtained in analysing the aluminium content of certain stands of stichless spruce growing in the south Wales coalfield; and if he will give the location of each study.

Mr. John MacKay: The research by the Macaulay Institute, the field part of which is being carried out at Loch Fleet in Galloway and Fetteresso in Grampian region, is only in its second year and results are not yet available. The Forestry Commission's work on sitka spruce is taking place in the Afan forest district, south Wales, and the indications so far are that the poor growth in some stands is due to a combination of climatic stress and infestation by green spruce aphis, rather than to aluminium toxicity.

Yew Trees (Research)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimates the Forestry Commission has made or plans to make, of (a) crown thinning, (b) pollution damage, (c) symptoms of decline and (d) other diseases, in yew trees, in the United Kingdom and abroad.

Mr. John MacKay: The Forestry commission has no plans for a systematic survey of the state of health of this species. The Commission's research division investigates reports of damage and disease in yew in the same way as it does for other tree species.

Acid Rain

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what studies the Forestry Commission has made of forest decline and acid rain damage to trees in other countries.

Mr. John MacKay: The Forestry Commission keeps closely in touch with the situation in Europe and North America, and its scientists have made several visits to West Germany to study the problem. A Forestry Commission scientist, together with others from Britain, took part earlier this month in an advanced research workshop in Canada on the effects of acid deposition on forests, wetlands and agricultural ecosystems.

Ash Die-back

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimates the Forestry Commission has made of the level of ash die-back in each of the counties of England, Scotland and Wales.

Mr. John MacKay: No estimates have been made by the Forestry Commission of the level of ash die-back on a national scale by counties.

The incidence of this condition in woodlands is minimal. It is, however, more significant in non-woodland trees and appears to be related to the intensity of agricultural activity, particularly in areas of arable farming. The census of woodlands and trees carried out by the Forestry Commission between 1979 and 1982, on a county basis in England and Wales and a Forestry Commission Conservancy basis in Scotland, provides some information on the health of non-woodland ash trees, but this does not differentiate between ash die-back and other causes of poor health, such as old age.

Rating Revaluation

Mr. Dixon asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment has been made of the alteration caused by the Scottish rating revaluation to the competitive position of industry in Scotland compared with industry in other parts of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ancram: We estimate that the general revaluation of all property in Scotland, taken together with the reduction in industrial derating from 50 per cent. to 40 per cent. both effective from 1 April 1985, leave the competitive position of Scottish manufacturing industry unchanged by comparison with England and Wales.

Coatbridge Project

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many jobs he expects to become available arising from Scottish Development Agency involvement in the Coatbridge project.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The agency estimates that some 950 jobs have to date been created or safeguarded by the project. It is hoped that by the end of the project this figure will have risen to 1,500.

Heart Disease

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what figures are available about the numbers of persons suffering from heart disease in the Monklands/Cumbernauld district hospital area; and what comparisons are available at district, national and international level.

Mr. John MacKay: The number of patients suffering from heart disease and ischaemic heart disease who were discharged from hospital during 1983 in these areas were as follows:

	Numbers
(a) Monklands/Cumbernauld health district area	1,368
(b) Lanarkshire Health Board area	5,170
(c) Scotland	50,238

Comparable statistics about discharges from hospitals in other countries are not available.

Monklands District Hospital

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when the extension to the accident and emergency unit of Monklands district hospital is expected to be completed.

Mr. John MacKay: Detailed costing of the scheme to alter and extend the accident and emergency department at Monklands district general hospital are at present under discussion. Lanarkshire health board expects a start on site in late autumn 1985, with the construction period lasting some 18 months.

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total number of personnel employed in Monklands district hospital compared with 1977.

Mr. John MacKay: At September 1984, 1,393·8 staff, whole time equivalent, were employed at Monklands district general hospital. The comparable figure for September 1977 was 900 staff WTE.

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many patients were admitted to Monklands district general hospital in 1984 compared with 1977.

Mr. John MacKay: In the twelve months to 30 September 1984, Monklands district general hospital had 19,447 in-patients, compared to 12,305 for the year to September 1978, the first full year for which data are available following commissioning of the hospital in 1977.

Note: The figures quoted are for deaths, discharges and transfers to other hospitals.

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many private patients have been admitted to Monklands district hospital; and in which departments.

Mr. John MacKay: Monklands district hospital is not authorised to treat private patients.

Police Forces (Strengths)

Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the actual strength of each of the Scottish police forces, and in total at the latest date for which figures are available; and how these figures compare with the comparable month in 1979.

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is set out in the following table:

Force	Actual Strength at 31 March 1979	Actual Strength at 31 March 1985	Percentage Increase
Central Scotland Police	477	548	14·9
Dumfries and Galloway Constabulary	298	309	3·7
Fife Constabulary	639	659	3·1
Grampian Police	903	954	5·6
Lothian and Borders Police	2,236	2,386	6·7
Northern Constabulary	595	604	1·5
Strathclyde Police	6,599	6,778	2·7
Tayside Police	928	951	2·5
TOTAL	12,675	13,189	4·1

The figures include officers who are employed at ports, airports and oil-related industrial sites and whose costs are not borne entirely by police authorities. Also included are officers on national training courses and those seconded to central service posts.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has decided the amount of fee remission grant to allocate to schools participating in the assisted places scheme in respect of session 1985-86.

Mr. Younger: The allocations of fee remission grant for 1985-86 are shown in the table below. As in 1984-85, forty-two schools will participate.

Boundary Commission

Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has made any changes in the composition of the Boundary Commission for Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Younger: The members of the Boundary Commission for Scotland are—

Mr. Speaker, ex officio, Chairman.

The Honourable Lord Ross, Deputy Chairman—appointed by the Lord President of the Court of Session on 14 January 1977 and re-appointed from 1 January 1985.

Professor Urlan A. Wannop—appointed by the Secretary of State for Scotland on 6 June 1983 and re-appointed from 1 January 1985.

Mr. Adam R. Napier—appointed by the Secretary of State for Scotland on 2 May 1985.

The appointed members' term of office expires on 31 December 1988.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Mentally Handicapped People

Mr. Kilfedder asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what future help he intends to provide for the mentally handicapped in the North Down and Ards area.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Department of Health and Social Services is funding a 25-place extension to Ravara adult training centre, Bangor. The scheme is expected to be completed in the summer of 1986. In addition, a statutory residential home providing three places for mentally handicapped adults is expected to open later this year.

It is too early to say anything about the practical consequences in terms of service provision for North Down and Ards of the decision to transfer responsibility for the education of mentally handicapped children to the Department of Education and the Education and Library Boards.

Funds are being made available by the Department of Environment to Nih Housing Association Limited to provide, in conjunction with MENCAP, a 12-place hostel at Princetown road, Bangor, which is due to be completed shortly. Proposals from the association for an extension to its existing scheme at Bloomfield road, Bangor, which is managed jointly with the CROFT community, are currently under consideration.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland by what means he ensures that the licensed limits for activity and quantity of radioactive waste disposed of to air, land or water are adhered to in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Chris Patten: Disposals of radioactive waste are subject to controls under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960. The certificates of authorisation issued under it contain limitations and conditions designed to ensure that the effects of disposal are regulated in accordance with the internationally recommended standards of radiological safety. Officers appointed under the terms of the 1960 Act visit premises to check that conditions of authorisation are being complied with.

Hearing Aids

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many outpatients in Northern Ireland are waiting to have a hearing aid fitted or exchanged; and what is the average waiting time.

Mr. Chris Patten: At 31 December 1984, the latest date for which figures are available, the total number for whom an appointment had been made or who were on the waiting list for the fitting of an aid, including replacements, was 742.

A recent departmental survey indicates that, in general, aids are issued within seven weeks of the first appointment with a consultant.

Personation

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people were charged with vote stealing or personation during the recent council elections.

Mr. Scott: One.

Ross Lough (Drainage)

Mr. Archer asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consultations there have been between Northern Ireland Government Departments and the owner of the land concerned, about drainage works at Ross Lough, Lisnaskea, County Fermanagh; and if he will now take steps to protect the wildlife at this site.

Mr. Chris Patten: There have been recent consultations about these works between the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland and the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland and the landowner concerned. It has been agreed that there is no reason for the works in question to stop.

Ross Lough was declared an area of scientific interest under the Amenity Lands Act (Northern Ireland) 1965 and this declaration remains valid under the terms of the Nature Conservation and Amenity Lands (Northern Ireland) Order 1985, which came into operation on 14 April 1985. All Areas of Scientific Interest are being re-evaluated with a view to formal re-declaration as areas of special scientific interest under the Nature Conservation and Amenity Lands (Northern Ireland) Order 1985. The Wildlife (Northern Ireland) Order 1985 which came into operation on 15 April 1985 also provides protection for wildlife.

Homes (Dampness)

Mr. Clifford Forsythe asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many homes administered by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive have been reported as suffering from dampness; and what methods are used to ascertain whether this dampness is attributable to bad design, condensation or disrepair.

Mr. Chris Patten [pursuant to his reply, 14 May 1985, c. 96-97]: This is a matter for the chairman of the Housing Executive, who has advised me that information about the number of dwellings is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. Any reported dampness is inspected by a member of the Housing Executive technical staff in order to determine the cause, which is seldom attributable to any one factor.

DEFENCE

Cruise Missiles

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Defence if regular checks of the electronic equipment on cruise missiles are undertaken, especially after each lorry journey outside the base.

Mr. Stanley: Regular checks are made to ensure the continuing efficiency and reliability of ground-launched cruise missiles.

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Defence what technical evaluation there has been of the operating characteristics of cruise missiles based in the United Kingdom; if he is satisfied with the results of such evaluation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: These missiles have been subject to an extensive flight testing, and test and evaluation programme in the United States. The overall flight testing of the ground launched cruise missile has been satisfactory. Some details were given in the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington (Mr. Boyes) on 30 January 1984, column 33.

Defence Contractors

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he is satisfied with current methods of controlling the profits of defence contractors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butler: Yes, Sir. It is MOD policy to place contracts following competition whenever possible, since we believe that effective competition is the best method of ensuring that the MOD secures best value for money. Under the 1968 agreement between the Government and industry, the profit paid on non-competitive Government contracts is determined according to a profit formula which is subject to triennial general reviews and, from 1984, intermediate annual reviews, by an independent review board. Following consultation with industry, the implementation of its recommendations is a matter for the Government. My right hon. and learned Friend the Chief Secretary announced on 30 April—columns 97 and 98—the outcome of the first annual review by the review board, and I provided further details in my reply of 16 May—columns 207-8—to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Forth).

The 1968 agreement provides also for equality of information between the parties up to the time the price is fixed and for post-costing to establish the actual cost of a contract. Post-costing acts as a check on the MOD's pricing procedures, assists in the pricing for follow-on contracts and enables adjustments to be made to any price which was agreed on the basis of materially inaccurate or incomplete information.

European Fighter Aircraft

Sir Patrick Wall asked the Secretary of State for Defence what progress was made over the development of the European fighter aircraft during his talks on 15 May with his European colleagues.

Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the results of his discussions in Rome about the European fighter aircraft.

Mr. Butler [pursuant to the reply, 17 May 1985, c. 265]: Defence Ministers, including my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence and I, met in Rome on Thursday 16 May to discuss the European fighter aircraft project.

Progress was made by the potential partner nations, in particular in defining more closely the in service weight and engine thrust of the aircraft. It was agreed that the industries of the five nations should work closely together to take this work forward and report to Ministers ahead of their meeting in London next month.

However, there remains a good deal yet to be done before it will be possible to enter project definition on a collaborative programme.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish a list of the nuclear weapons tests conducted by or for the United Kingdom at the Nevada test site in the United States of America or jointly conducted by or for the United Kingdom and United States of America at the Nevada site; if he will give code names and dates for these tests, and whether these were above ground or underground.

Mr. Butler: The United Kingdom, jointly with the United States of America, has conducted 17 nuclear test explosions at the Nevada test site; all tests were conducted underground. A list of the tests, detailing the event name, date and yield range is as follows:

Joint UK/US Underground Nuclear Tests conducted at the Nevada Test Site

Falkland Islands

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether any contribution towards the cost of expenditure on the Falkland Islands has been made by foreign Governments or organisations.

Mr. Stanley: There has been no contribution by a foreign Government or organisation to defence expenditure on the Falkland Islands.

Log Books and Signals

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report his letter dated 20 May to the hon. Member for Linlithgow about log books and signals of HMS Superb, HMS Warspite, HMS Courageous and HMS Splendid.

Mr. Heseltine: Yes. It is as follows:

Dear Tam

On 4th April, I said that I would write to you about the log books and signals of HMS Superb, HMS Warspite and HMS Courageous. Can I at the same time deal with your outstanding enquiry about HMS Splendid's signals log (Hansard Vol. 68, column 335) on which, due to an oversight, you were not told that we would be replying by letter.

As I told the House on 15th November, signals logs are not retained permanently: HMS Splendid's signals log for the Falklands Campaign was destroyed on 2nd October 1982 in accordance with standing instructions.

I assume that your questions about HMS Submarines Superb, Warspite and Courageous relate to your allegation, reported in The Times on 3rd April, that they were protecting a Polaris submarine in the South Atlantic. In fact, of the three submarines, only HMS Courageous was involved in the conflict (as stated in both the Falklands White Paper and Admiral Fieldhouse's Despatch). As the Prime Minister told George Foulkes (in her letter of 19th September 1984 which was published in Hansard on 22nd October), there was no change in the standard deployment pattern of our Polaris submarines during the conflict; moreover, the Government gave a categorical assurance at the time that nuclear weapons would not be used in the Falklands conflict.

As to the logs of these submarines, I can confirm that my Department has in its possession the control room logs covering the period of the Falklands Campaign for Superb, Warspite and Courageous. I have given careful consideration to providing the information on signals logs which you requested and which overlapped a request from George Foulkes for similar information concerning all naval vessels which participated in the Falklands Campaign. I have concluded that no useful purpose would be served in checking whether each has destroyed its signals in accordance with standing instructions.

Yours ever,
Michael

RAF Trainer Aircraft

Sir Patrick Wall asked the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 8 May to the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, North (Mr. McNamara) Official Report, column 386, if he will make a further statement on the exchange of telephone calls between the commercial director of British Aerospace and the principal director of contracts (air) on 13 March concerning the new trainer aircraft for the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Butler: I am aware that the group commercial director of British Aerospace, Mr. Alan Smith, denies that in the telephone call made to him by the Ministry of Defence's Principal Director of Contracts (Air) on 13 March, he was told that an end point of midday on 14 March had been set for improved offers in respect of the new trainer aircraft for the Royal Air Force.

The Government regret that such a misunderstanding should have arisen. This matter has been fully discussed in a debriefing given to British Aerospace by the Ministry of Defence on the competition. While each side maintains its position on what was said during the telephone call, both now regard the matter as closed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Lord Privy Seal what has been the daily average of starred and unstarred questions for such of the last 10 parliamentary sessions as figures are available and the current session to date.

Mr. Biffen: Over the last 10 sessions the daily average numbers of questions appearing on the Order Paper were as follows:

	Oral	Written
1974-75	59	138
1975-76	63	167
1976-77	59	163
1977-78	68	170
1978-79	69	153
1979-80	64	164
1980-81	63	139
1981-82	65	135
1982-83	66	149
1983-84	79	188
1984-85*	106	185

* To 26 April 1985.
Note: Figures relating to oral questions exclude Friday sittings.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Authorities (Construction and Maintenance Work)

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment in respect of which local authorities he has used his powers under (a) section 17(4) of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 and (b) section 17(5) of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: I have recently exercised my powers under section 17 (4) of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 to direct the London boroughs of Brent, Haringey, and Greenwich, and the metropolitan district of St. Helens, to submit special reports on new building work carried out by their direct labour organisations. I have not yet exercised my powers under section 17(5) of the Act.

Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981

Sir Hugh Rossi asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is yet in a position to respond to the "First Report of the Environment Committee on the Operation and Effectiveness of Part II of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981", published in January; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: The Government have already implemented several of the recommendations made by the Select Committee. We feel this area is of sufficient importance to publish our formal response today as a Command Paper, issued jointly by my Department, the Welsh Office and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. Although the Committee's report did not deal directly with Scotland, the Secretary of State for Scotland wishes to be closely associated with the approach set out in response.

The Committee clearly recognised the major contribution of the Wildlife and Countryside Act to the valuable developments that have taken place in our drive to conserve the resources of the countryside. We are especially encouraged by their firm endorsement of the voluntary approach to conservation. We would like to record a special tribute to the vast majority of those who live on and work the land for the constructive way in which they have responded to the policy for consent and co-operation embodied in the Act.

The Government response deals with the detailed recommendations, and sets these in the context of its overall policies. It makes it clear that we will continue to support voluntary co-operation with the selective use of more rigorous measures. The Wildlife and Countryside (Amendment) Bill, which we are supporting through Parliament, will provide useful improvements in the effectiveness of the 1981 Act.

The Committee expressed concern about the balance of the Government's priorities between agriculture and conservation. The Government's policies are not of course those of a single Department or Minister but represent a balance of the Departmental objectives of the various Departments involved. My Department works closely with MAFF and the Welsh and Scottish Offices and other Government Departments to seek to ensure this balance. The agriculture industry and those concerned with the ownership and management of the countryside are becoming much more aware of the importance of conservation and the changing policies of agriculture departments both foster and reflect these changing attitudes. As examples, I would mention the changes to the farm capital grant scheme to achieve a closer integration of conservation and agricultural policies, and the Government's success in negotiating a provision in the new structures regulation for special payments to farms in environmentally sensitive areas. The joint MAFF —

Countryside Commission three-year experiment to conserve the unique landscape of the Broads is a very positive example of this approach.

Many of these initiatives meet criticisms made by the Committee and represent a real attempt by the Government to pull together the various aspects of policy in this area. There has, for example, been a move away from providing support for operations such as hedge removal and land reclamation in favour of assistance for positive conservation measures. And we broadly accept the Committee's recommendation that ADAS staff should give greater priority to advisory effort related to conservation of the natural beauty and amenity of the countryside.

The Government are grateful to the Environment Committee for its hard work, which has resulted in a very valuable report. We welcome it as an important contribution to the emerging consensus on how best to safeguard our precious countryside and its wildlife. Our Command Paper sets out in detail the many actions we have already taken to meet recommendations made by the Committee. We intend to press ahead with our policies, reviewing them where necessary to cope with changing circumstances.

Water (Aluminium Levels)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether there have been any occasions in recent years when aluminium levels in water supplies in the United Kingdom have not been within the limits laid down by the European Community directive on the quality of water intended for human consumption.

Mr. Macfarlane: Aluminium levels in some United Kingdom water supplies do exceed the limit laid down by the European Community. Derogation or delay applications have been received by the competent national authorities in the United Kingdom in respect of 179 water supply zones in which the maximum admissible concentration for aluminium of 0·2 mg per litre is exceeded on the basis of a three-monthly average. These applications are under consideration.

Oil Refineries (Sulphur Dioxide Emissions)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what emission factors are used in calculating the emissions of sulphur dioxide from oil refineries; and in which year these were last reviewed.

Mr. Waldegrave: Oil refinery fuel is a mixture of very low sulphur gas oil and high sulphur fuel oil. Emissions are therefore calculated on the basis of three quarters of total fuel consumption assuming a sulphur content as for fuel oil. Account is taken of the fact that the sulphur content varies from year to year.

The method of calculation is currently under review.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentages of sulphur dioxide emissions in the United Kingdom are calculated by his Department to have originated in oil refineries in each of the last 20 years for which figures are available; and what forecasts his Department has made of such emissions.

Mr. Waldegrave: The percentage of United Kingdom sulphur dioxide emissions originating from oil refineries, were as follows:

	Per cent.
1964	3
1965	3
1966	4
1967	4
1968	4
1969	4
1970	4
1971	4
1972	5
1973	5
1974	6
1975	5
1976	6
1977	5
1978	6
1979	5
1980	6
1981	5
1982	5
1983	4

The figures for 1973-83 are published in my Department's "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics No. 7 1984". Earlier figures are available from Warren Spring laboratory, Department of Trade and Industry. Specific forecasts of emission levels are not available, but I am not aware of any reason to expect any significant increase in sulphur dioxide emissions from oil refineries over the next 10 to 15 years.

Pesticides

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice is given by his Department and the Nature Conservancy Council regarding the application of organochlorine pesticides to timber in roof spaces and other enclosed situations.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Department of the Environment participates in the pesticides safety precautions scheme under which organochlorine pesticides used in timber treatment are evaluated and cleared for safety in use. Advice on the application of pesticides cleared under the scheme is issued by the Health and Safety Executive, and recommended precautionary measures are included on the label of products offered for sale. Technical advice on the use of these pesticides in buildings is provided by the Department's Building Research Establishment.

The Nature Conservancy Council's advice on the application of pesticides in timber treatment was summarised in my answer to the hon. Member's question on 4 March 1985, column 347.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each of the residuary bodies to assume responsibility in the event of abolition of the Greater London council and metropolitan county councils the names of the people who have been appointed as shadow chairmen and core members of each body.

Mr. Waldegrave: No such appointments have been made.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will take steps to retain skilled Greater London council computer staff in a temporary body divorced from executive functions;

(2) if he will take steps to ensure that successor bodies continue to use the computer systems of the Greater London council.

Mr. Waldegrave: The future of the GLC's computer services and their staff is a matter for the successor authorities, but we expect that the operation of general purpose computers will pass initially to the residuary body. My noble Friend Lord Elton has undertaken to bring forward an amendment to the Local Government Bill in another place providing for residuary bodies to take an active part in identifying and securing the future of worthwhile centres of expertise.

Council Spending

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the total amount which his Department acquired resulting from penalties which were imposed on councils for spending in excess of required amounts during the 1984-85 financial year.

Mr. Waldegrave: The total amount of block grant held back by the exchequer from local authorities in England which budgeted to exceed their expenditure guidance in 1984-85 was £455 million.

Water Charges

Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the Government's consideration of changes in the rating system will include consideration of any consequent changes in the present system of water charges to domestic consumers.

Mr. Macfarlane: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Leeds Central (Mr. Fatchett) on Tuesday 30 April, column 85.

Stolport

Mr. Tracey asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is now in a position to announce his decision on the proposed stolport development in London's dockland.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: I have today granted planning permission for the proposed stolport in the Royal Docks, Newham, subject to a number of conditions. I have placed a copy of the decision letter in the Library of the House.

Basildon Development Corporation

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the Basildon development corporation to be wound up.

Sir George Young: Although the Development Corporation has been vigorously pursuing the tasks which must be completed before it is wound up, the target date of 30 June 1985, which my right hon. Friend announced on 21 December 1983, has not proved attainable. We now consider that the corporation's remaining assets and liabilities should transfer to the Commission for the New Towns in April 1986. The Department will initiate consultations with the Essex county council and the Basildon district council as soon as possible, with a view to the making of an order under section 41 of the New Towns Act 1981, winding up the corporation.

Departmental Cars (Cost)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the Answer of 9 May, Official Report, column 467-8, if he will give resasons for the annual increases of £2,600 between 1981-82 and 1982-83 in respect of costs to provide cars for the Secretary of State and five of the departmental Ministers; why the increases were uniform; why the costs of car provision for one of the Parliamentary Under-Secretaries of State declined by £8,060 between 1980-81 and 1981-82 when costs were increasing for all other Ministers; what caused the annual increase in car costs of £4,680 for all Ministers between 1982-83 and 1983-84 except one; and why the costs remained stable for the Secretary of State's car between 1983-84 and 1984-85 whilst over the same period it declined by a uniform £2,600 per annum in respect of four of his departmental Ministers.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin [pursuant to his answers, 22 May 1985, c. 441, and 9 May 1985, c. 267-8]: The costs identified for 1980-81, 1981-82 and 1982-83 were those incurred by PSA Supplies on behalf of DOE in providing ministerial cars as described. The annual increase in cost for those years reflects increases in the cost of provision, including increases in drivers' wages and overheads, fuel, maintenance, management and garaging. It is coincidental that the sum of these increases were uniform for these two years. The cost of provision of a car for one Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State reduced between 1980-81 and 1981-82 because he was in office for only six months in 1981-82. His successor does not use an allocated car. In 1983, the property repayment services scheme was introduced whereby Government Departments paid PSA Supplies, subsequently the Crown Suppliers, direct according to tariffs reflecting different levels of service provided, such as different models and different periods of time for which the cars were available. The increase in cost of provision of cars for all Ministers, except one who was in office for only nine months of 1983-84, reflects the levels of service provided and increases in operating costs as detailed above. In 1984-85, the Secretary of State required the same level of service as provided in 1983-84, four of his departmental Ministers required a lower level of service, while one departmental Minister required a higher level of service.

Asbestos (Faslane)

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for the Environment further to his reply to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman) on 13 May, Official Report, column 26, what public bodies were consulted about the transportation of asbestos contaminated material from Faslane; what form the consultation took; and how they responded.

Sir George Young: I will answer this question shortly.

Woodlands

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what estimates he has as to the percentages of broadleaved woodland in England, Scotland and Wales, respectively, which are contained within sites of special scientific interest;

(2) if he will estimate for England, Scotland and Wales respectively, the percentages of total woodland and the areas represented by (a) ancient semi-natural woodlands, (b) ancient woodland sites, (c) recent semi-natural and (d) other broadleaved woodlands.

Mr. Waldegrave: I will answer this question shortly.

Water Industry (Privatisation)

Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what responses he has had to the Government's discussion paper on the privatisation of the water industry.

Mr. Gow: The discussion paper was sent to all water authority chairmen and to the chairman of the Water Companies Association. The water authorities' collective response is expected by the end of this month. We have received individual responses from a number of authorities.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Repatriation

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons identified as families and single persons have been voluntarily repatriated and to which countries, by name, under section 29 of the Immigration Act 1971 in each of the past five years.

Mr. Waddington: The scheme operated under section 29 of the 1971 Act on behalf of the Government by International Social Services of Great Britain provides financial assistance to non-British citizens who wish to return permanently overseas but do not have the means to do so. The available information about persons who have been so assisted in the period 1980 to 1984 is as follows:

Lion Intoximeter

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has received any reports on the performance and reliability of the Lion intoximeter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. and learned Friend has received the report of the forensic science service on the operation of the Lion intoximeter and Camic breath analyser evidential breath testing instruments, which will be published in due course.

Interviews (Tape Recording)

Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the results of pilot schemes to tape-record interviews between police officers and persons suspected of criminal offences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I would refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to a Question from my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Bruinvels) on 10 January, at columns 529-530. Since that time, the field trials have been continuing, and it is hoped shortly to extend them to an additional police station in the Metropolitan police district, and to establish a new scheme in Gloucestershire. The continuing picture from all the field trial areas is of a favourable police response to tape recording, and the earlier signs of a general increase in pleas of guilt have also continued. The lessons to be learned from the field trials are being assessed in the planning now under way for the transition to a national tape recording scheme as provided for by the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984.

Featherstone Prison (Suicides)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many suicides have occurred in Her Majesty's Prison Featherstone situated near Wolverhampton since the prison was opened.

Mr. Mellor: One—in October 1980.

Abduction and Kidnapping

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the recommended and average sentence for (a) child abduction and (b) child kidnapping; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many people have been convicted of (i) child abduction and (ii) child kidnapping in each of the past five years and the current year to date.

Mr. Mellor: The maximum penalty for child abduction, for merely child stealing, is seven years imprisonment, for kidnapping life imprisonment and for abduction of an unmarried girl two years imprisonment. The Child Abduction Act 1984 introduced from October 1984 the offence of child abduction in place of child stealing. The sentences imposed within these maxima for the courts to decide. Information on sentencing for offences of child stealing—offence classification 13—abduction—offence classification 25—and kidnapping, etc. — offence classification 36 covering kidnapping, hijacking, and false imprisonment — is published annually in 'Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, Supplementay Tables'. In the latest issue for 1983, tables 1.1(A) and 2.1(A) give convictions and sentences and tables 2.3-2.5 lengths of custodial sentences. Information on convictions is summarised in the following table.

Ian Brady and Myra Hindley

Mr. Mark Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has yet reached a decision on the cases of Ian Brady and Myra Hindley.

Mr. Brittan: On 1 March I informed the House that I was asking the local review committees at the prisons in which Ian Brady and Myra Hindley are held and the parole board to consider these cases—column 311. The parole board has now recommended to me that neither Ian Brady nor Myra Hindley should be released and that the case of Ian Brady should be considered again by the local review committee where he is then held in ten years' time and that that of Myra Hindley should be similarly considered in five years' time. I have accepted these recommendations. I would repeat that the review then of these cases does not mean either that the periods of detention necessary to meet the requirements of retribution and deterrence will have been completed or be near completion; or that the parole board will recommend the release of either prisoner; or that the then Home Secretary would necessarily accept such a recommendation if it were made.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL FOR SCOTLAND

Defence Policy

Mr. Canavan asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland what complaints have been submitted to procurators fiscal that a British defence policy based on the threatened use of nuclear weapons is illegal; what action has been taken as a result; and whether he will arrange to meet the complainants concerned to discuss their evidence.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: Such a complaint was submitted to the procurator fiscal at Stirling on 29 March 1985 by a delegation of students from the University of Stirling. The matter was referred to Crown counsel who instructed "no proceedings" and I do not think that any further purpose would be served by meeting the complainers.

I am not aware of any other complaints of a similar nature having been made.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Foreign Affairs Council

Sir Antony Buck asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Foreign Affairs Council of 20-21 May.

Mr. Rifkind: My right hon. and learned Friend and I represented the United Kingdom at the Foreign Affairs Council which met in Brussels on 20 May.

The Council briefly discussed some of the few remaining issues in the enlargement negotiations still to be resolved before the treaty of accession is signed on 12 June.

There was also a brief discussion of progress in following up the proposals in the first report of the "People's Europe" Committee. The Commission urged member states to speed up implementation of some of these recommendations.

There was further consideration of the negotiating mandate for the second EC-Yugoslavia financial protocol. Discussion of this will continue at the June meeting of the Council.

The Council agreed a declaration on relations with the United States in the steel sector, stressing the need to find satisfactory solutions to outstanding problems as soon as possible and reiterating the declaration agreed by the Council of Industry Ministers on 26 March that the Community would react strongly to any unilateral restrictions on trade imposed by the United States. Copies of the declaration are being placed in the Library of the House.

Ministers of the Ten briefly discussed the situation in the Lebanon, and issued a short statement. Copies of this are also being placed in the Library of the House.

Colombo Commission

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects the Colombo commission to report.

Mr. Renton: We expect the Colombo commission to make an interim report in mid-June.

Israel (Boycott)

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has received from Her Majesty's Ambassador in Saudi Arabia regarding the meeting of the Islamic bureau for the boycott of Israel in Jeddah on 27 April, in which the Secretary-General of the Islamic Conference Organisation called for a strengthening of the boycott; and whether Her Majesty's Ambassadors in Islamic conference nations have stressed to their host Governments that the United Kingdom does not recognise or observe the boycott in any way.

Mr. Luce: It is well know that we are strongly opposed to all attempts by third parties to restrict our trade with Israel.

Palestine Liberation Organisation

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has had from Her Majesty's ambassadors in Baghdad or Tel Aviv relating to the claim made by the Palestine Liberation Organisation on Palestine Liberation Organisation Central Radio in Baghdad at 16.36 hrs Greenwich mean time on 12 May that they had been responsible for explosions in Jerusalem during Mr. Shultz's visit and describing violent action of this kind as a major national option; and whether Her Majesty's ambassador has made any protest to the Iraqi Government about continuing violence and its effect on peace negotiations.

Mr. Luce: All concerned in the Arab-Israeli dispute are well aware that we condemn the use of violence from whatever quarter. We continue to believe that a just and lasting settlement can only be achieved through negiotiations at which the voice of the Palestinians would be heard. We therefore welcome the agreement between King Hussein and Mr. Yasser Arafat to work for a peaceful, negotiated settlement.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what report he has received from Her Majesty's Ambassador in Tunis about the statement on 13 May on Radio Monte Carlo by the leading member of the central committee of Al-Fatah, known as Abu Iyad, that the Palestine Liberation Organisation would be mistaken to approve an initiative by King Hussein which involved a Jordanian-Palestinian confederation and which would negotiate an Israeli withdrawal from the West Bank and Gaza; and whether he has received any confirmation from other ambassadors in Arab countries that this is the official view of Yasser Arafat's branch of the Palestine Liberation Organisation.

Mr. Luce: We are aware of the statement referred to, and of the commitment by King Hussein and Mr. Yasser Arafat on 11 February that the Jordanian Government and the Palestine Liberation Organisation should work together for a negotiated settlement.

Abduction

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions his Department has been involved following the abduction of British children from the United Kingdom to other foreign countries in 1982, 1983, 1984, and 1985 to date; and if he will detail the ages of the children and the other countries involved.

Mr. Renton: The information is not readily available. I shall arrange for it to be published in the Official Report as soon as possible.

Anglo-Irish Encounter Group

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Anglo-Irish encounter group has published the report of its third conference on increasing the appreciation of our cultural heritage.

Mr. Renton: The report of the third encounter conference is expected to be available towards the end of June 1985.

Namibia

Mr. Stan Thorne asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on recent events in Namibia.

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on recent developments over Namibia.

Mr. Rifkind [pursuant to his reply, 22 May 1985, column 459]: The following is the information:

We remain concerned at the situation in Namibia. The new administrative arrangements announced by the South African Government have no status under the United Nations plan. It remains the South African Government's responsibility to permit the implementation of the United Nations plan.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Science and Engineering Research Council (Exhibition)

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will arrange for an exhibition relating to the Science and Engineering Research Council to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Brooke: I understand that arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 17 to Friday 21 June.

Student Grants

Mrs. Rumbold asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what work has been done, in the context of assessment of the impact of the various alternative forms of student financial support, to update the research in 1983 on the impact of grants on the rate of increase in participation in higher education.

Mr. Brooke: The 1983 paper "Future Demand for Higher Education in Great Britain" (DES report on education 99) was updated in July 1984 by "Demand for Higher Education in Great Britain 1984-2000" (report on education 100). The variant Y projection of demand in ROE 100 reflected the student support levels then current and the effects of any changes in student support arrangements should be shown by revisions to that projection.

Mrs. Rumbold asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment has been made of the impact of replacing the grant system by a students loan scheme on access to higher education in both universities and polytechnics to social classes below A and B.

Mr. Brooke: None, but in the review of student support, attention will be given to loans in place of grants, in part at least, as one possibility for change in the present student support arrangements.

Teachers (Pay)

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science why the decision was taken to restrict salary increases for teachers to 4 per cent. in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph: The teachers' pay increase for 1985 has not yet been decided. The Burnham committee adjourned last week but negotiations will continue when the committee reconvenes today.

School Meals

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many families living in the west midlands region are presently receiving assistance for their children to have free school dinners.

Mr. Dunn: The number of pupils taking a free school meal in schools in the local education authorities in the west midlands region on the day of the annual school meals census in October 1984 is shown in the report on the 1984 school meals census, which is available in the Library.

Pupil-Teacher Ratio

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the pupil-teacher ratio in special schools, excluding hospital schools, for each year since 1979-80.

Mr. Dunn: The pupil-teacher ratios in maintained and non-maintained special schools in England from January 1980 to January 1984 were:

January	*Pupil-teacher ratios
1980	7·7
1981	7·7
1982	7·5
1983	7·4
1984	7·1

* Excluding hospital schools.

Special Education (Expenditure)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the projected rate of expenditure on special education, expressed in (a) cost and (b) real terms for each year from 1984-85 to 1987-88.

Mr. Dunn: The following are the figures requested in respect of education in special schools in England over the period 1984-85 to 1986-87; the sum provisionally allocated in the Government's Cmnd. 9428 plans to local authority current expenditure on education in 1987-88 has not been divided between sectors. Information is not available on expenditure on pupils with special needs outside special schools, or on students with special needs in further education.

Expenditure on special schools

£ million

	Financial years 1984-85	1985-86	1986-87
Cash	420	404	420
Real terms	439	404	402

Notes:

1. The 1984-85 cash figure is an estimate based on local authority budgets, and those for 1985-86 and 1986-87 are projections.

2. The 1984-85 figure is not directly comparable with that for 1985-86 because the former may include, and the latter excludes, expenditure from the unallocated margin of local authority expenditure. There is no unallocated margin for 1986-87, but the split between services of planned local authority current expenditure for that year is provisional.

3. To produce the real terms line the cash figures have been adjusted to 1985-86 prices for general inflation as measured by the GDP deflator. Cmnd. 9428 explains that this process is now referred to as an adjustment to "real terms" rather than "cost terms".

4. The number of pupils in special schools is projected to decline by around 2 per cent. between 1984-85 and 1986-87.

Education (Expenditure)

Mr. Madel asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to make available the report of Her Majesty's Inspectorate on the effects of local authority expenditure policies on the education service in England in 1984.

Sir Keith Joseph: The Her Majesty's Inspectorate report on the observed effects of local authority expenditure policies on the education service in England in the autumn of 1984 has been published today. Copies are available in the Vote Office. This report, the fifth since this Government decided that Her Majesty's Inspectorate's findings should be published, should be read with attention by all of us concerned with the provision of education.

Bursaries

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the numbers of bursaries which have been allocated to individual students in each academic year since 1978-79 for postgraduate study in the faculties of mechanical and electrical engineering.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 23 April 1985, c. 439]: I regret that the information given in my earlier answer was incorrect. I understand from the Science and Engineering Research Council that studentships do not divide simply into either mechanical or electrical engineering. Consequently, the numbers of research and advanced course postgraduate studentships have been re-examined and a fuller presentation should be as follows:

	Mechanical engineering*	Electrical† engineering
1978-79	117	177
1979-80	109	182
1980-81	65	167
1981-82	61	151
1982-83	86	176
1983-84	101	499
1984-85	125	541

* Includes Production Engineering.

† Includes Electronic Engineering and those Specialist and Conversion Advanced courses supported by SERC's Information Engineering Committee.

Comparable figures are not yet available for 1985-86.

Class Sizes

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table showing the number of classes and of pupils in classes in each local education authority with 30 and under, 31 to 35, 36 to 40 and over 40 pupils per class for primary and secondary schools in 1979, 1981 and 1984 respectively.

Mr. Dunn [pursuant to his reply, 29 April 1985, c. 5]: The information for 1979 was set out in my reply of 6 July 1984 to my hon. Friend the member for Nuneaton (Mr. Stevens) at columns 315-28. The information for both 1981 and 1984 could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The latest information for January 1984, however, is set out in the following table.

EMPLOYMENT

Live Animals (Experiments)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will seek powers to permit the Health and Safety Commission to include in the test guidelines associated with the notification of new substances regulations, a requirement that in vitro alternatives to living animals are used to determine eye irritancy, particularly with reference to known or suspected severe irritants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The notification of New Substances Regulations 1982 implement in Great Britain the notification reqirements of European Commission directive 79/831/EEC and lay down a regime for the testing prior to marketing of new chemical substances so as to permit an assessment to be made of the risks to man and the environment. The test methods to be used are given in EC directive 79/831/EEC and detailed in EC directive 84/449/EEC. The eye test specified there is one of a set of test guidelines drawn up by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development and agreed internationally.

An in vitro test for eye irritancy is currently being evaluated by the OECD. If such a test is found to be acceptable, the United Kingdom will seek a change in the European requirements which may then be carried forward into United Kingdom legislation.

Where possible, for example where the substance is known to be irritant by virtue of it corrosive nature or has been shown to be a skin irritant, the test guidelines accompanying the regulations already make it clear that an eye test on living animals may be omitted.

Retail Trades (Report)

Mr. Evans asked the Secretary of State for Employment when the first version of the report finally entitled "Pay and Employment in Four Retail Trades" was submitted to his Department.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A first draft of this report was received in November 1983.

Pesticides

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Employment what steps his Department or the Health and Safety Executive takes to inform the public of the risks arising from the pesticides used in wood treatment.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Health and Safety Executive participates in the pesticides safety precautions scheme, which provides for all pesticides to be cleared for safety before being introduced into the United Kingdom. Where the product is to be offered for sale, clearance also includes agreement on a suitable label reflecting risks and recommended precautionary measures. Information on risks and necessary precautions arising from wood treatment is also contained in the recommendation sheets in the 'Chemical Compounds used as Pesticides' series. These are available from the Health and Safety Executive.

Clothing Industry

Mr. Evans asked the Secretary of State for Employment why the report on pay in the clothing industry was not commissioned from an external body.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Resources and data were available internally for a study of employment determination in the clothing industry to be carried out in a cost-effective manner.

Mr. Evans asked the Secretary of State for Employment when he decided to produce a report on pay in the clothing industry.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The employment market research unit, which has a general aim to further understanding of the employment consequences of various labour market practices, started a project on wage floors during 1983. A reference to the work is contained in "Department of Employment Research 1983-84" published by HMSO.

Waddon Skillcentre

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the future of the Waddon and Waddon annexe skillcentre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Under the skillcentre training agency's plans for the reorganisation of the skillcentre network, Waddon skillcentre and its annexe at Sydenham are to close. My right hon. Friend has asked the chairman of the Manpower Services Commission to make sure that satisfactory alternative provisions have been identified before any individual skillcentre closure takes place. The chairman is expected to announce his decision in each case shortly. The skillcentre reorganisation has to be seen in the context of adult training strategy which will provide many more training opportunities overall. In 1986-87, we shall help to train more than twice as many people as in 1983-84 including up to 5,900 adults in south-east London. Both employed and unemployed people will benefit from this expansion.

Wages Councils (Waltham Forest)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many employees in Waltham Forest are covered by the operation of wages councils; how many visits were made by the inspectorate to firms in Waltham Forest in 1984; and how many firms were visited.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Estimates of the number of workers covered by wages councils are available only on a national basis. Statistics relating to the number of visits made by wages inspectors are not collected for areas smaller than wages inspectorate divisions.

Warehouse Fire (Sheffield)

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Employment, in each successive week since the National Carriers' warehouse fire in Sheffield, (a) how many man hours health and safety inspectors have spent investigating the incidents in Sheffield, (b) how many hours of paid overtime have been worked by inspectors involved in the Health and Safety Executive's investigation of the incident and (c) what jobs have been done during the paid overtime worked by the inspectors.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A breakdown of man hours and overtime spent by health and safety inspectors investigating the incident in Sheffield is not available without disproportionate cost. The jobs done during the overtime worked by inspectors have been exclusively concerned with interviewing firemen and taking statements.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Employment if, pursuant to the answer of 29 April, Official Report, column 45, he will indicate in which areas statistics obtained from the European Economic Community or Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development member states nullify direct comparability between them.

Mr. Alan Clark: Statistics from administrative sources, rather than from household surveys, are not directly comparable because of differences in definitions, administrative practice and methods of compilation. In particular, the coverage of the figures may differ in respect of age limits or the type of work sought by the unemployed, for example whether permanent or temporary, or full-time or part-time. Differences in conditions of entitlement to benefits also affect comparisons of registered unemployment. A detailed summary of the treatment of data on registered unemployment in EC countries is given in "Definitions of registered unemployed, 1984" published by the statistical office of the European Communities, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has as to the percentage increase in the population eligible for unemployment benefit for each of the last three years in each of the European Economic Community and Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries.

Mr. Alan Clark: International comparisons of unemployment are not available in the form of estimates of the population eligible for unemployment benefits.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has as to the change in the number of people in employment in each of the European Economic Community and Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries for each of the last three years.

Mr. Alan Clark: The available information for Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development member states, including those in the European Communities, is given in the following table:

Community Programme

Mr. Haselhurst asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what steps he has take to initiate discussions with charitable groups in order to secure additional community programme placements as indicated in his recently published White Paper, "Employment: the Challenge to the Nation"; and if he will make a statement; (2) if an invitation to charitable bodies to submit proposals for new placements for the enhanced community programe in 1985-86 will extend to groups not at present participating in the programme.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The White Paper "Employment: The Challenge to the Nation" (Cmnd. 9474) explains that as well as increasing the community programme by 100,000 places to 230,000 places, £10 million will be made available to explore new approaches to helping long-term unemployed people. My right hon. Friend has asked the Manpower Services Commission to develop detailed proposals for these experiments as quickly as possible. Many charities and voluntary organisations aready make a invaluable contribution to the success of the community programme. All suggestions, whether from charities or other bodies about how to build on that success are both welcomed and carefully considered.

"Chemicals in Agriculture"

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to publish the work of the working group "Chemicals in Agriculture"; and if he will list the membership of the group and their qualifications.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A summary of the working group's activities is contained in the Health and Safety Commission's report which is published annually.

The membership of the working group is as follows:
Mr N Finch—Country Landowners Association
Mr T Horsfield—National Farmers Union
Mr W J Taylor—National Farmers Union
Mr T D McLean—British Agrochemicals Association
Mr A H Jones—Timber Growers Association
Mr M Cunningham—National Union of Public Employees
Mr A Watterson — General Municipal, Boilermakers and Allied Trade Union
Mr C Kaufman—
Agriculture and Allied Workers National Trading Group
Mr D V J Thomas—
Agriculture and Allied Workers National Trading Group
Mr M Housden—
Agriculture and Allied Workers National Trading Group
Dr C Clutterbuck—
Agriculture and Allied Workers National Trading Group

Information on the qualifications of individual members of the working group could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Pesticides

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Employment what studies his Department has made of information regarding the application of organochlorine pesticides to timber in roof spaces and other enclosed situations; and what action his Department has taken as a result.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Health and Safety Executive, as a participant in the pesticides safety precautions scheme, studies all relevant information when considering a pesticide for clearance. Clearances are reviewed in the light of any significant new information. As a result, the clearance for use of certain organochlorine pesticides has been withdrawn and the use of others severely restricted.

Health and Safety Executive (Library and Information Service)

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Employment for what reasons the Health and Safety Executive library and information service has reduced public access time.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The hours of public telephone access have been reduced by one hour daily — now 10.00 am to 3.00 pm—so that library staff can cope more efficiently with a growing number of written as well as telephoned enquiries. The impact of this move is being closely monitored by the Health and Safety Executive.

Wages

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average minimum wage for a 39-hour week in retail non-food shops (a) in London and (b) outside London for (i) 19-year-olds, (ii) 18-year-olds, (iii) 17-year-olds and (iv) those aged under 17 years at the latest available date.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The minimum weekly rates of pay for employees at various ages covered by the Retail Trades (Non-Food) Wages Council (Great Britain) Wages Order are shown on page 172 of the regularly updated publication, "Time Rates of Wages and Hours of Work" (Department of Employment), a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any information on the approximate changes in the level of wages of cleaners since the abolition of the fair wages resolution in 1983.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. The fair wages resolution applied only to workers, other than cleaners, on Government contracts. Terms and conditions of cleaners on Government contracts were dealt with under separate Treasury arrangements.

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of (a) retail food shops and (b) retail non-food shops visited by wages inspectors were found to be illegally underpaying their staff in 1982, 1983 and 1984, respectively.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information requested is given in the following table:

	1982 Per cent.	1983 Per cent.	1984 Per cent.
Percentage of establishments covered by the Retail Food Trade Wages Council visited by Wages Inspectors and found to be underpaying one or more workers	43·9	45·9	43·9
Percentage of establishments covered by the Retail Non-Food Trades Wages Council visited by Wages Inspectors and found to be underpaying one or more workers	36·1	38·0	38·8

These figures cannot be taken as an indication of the general level of compliance with wages councils orders as the inspectorate tends to concentrate visits on establishments which are more likely to be underpaying.

A better indication of the overall level of compliance is the extent to which workers are found to be paid less than the legal minimum. This is shown for the retail trades in the table below:

Workers	1982 Per cent.	1983 Per cent.	1984 Per cent.
Percentage of workers in the retail food trade whose pay was checked by all methods who were found to have been underpaid	9·7	6·7	3·3
Percentage of workers in the retail non-food trade whose pay was checked by all methods who were found to have been underpaid	5·2	3·1	3·3

These figures compare favourably with the picture for Great Britain as a whole where the proportions were 6·2 per cent., 6·3 per cent. and 4·3 per cent. in 1982, 1983 and 1984 respectively.

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average minimum wage for a 39-hour week in retail food shops in (a) London and (b) outside London for (i) 19-year-olds, (ii) 18-year-olds, (iii) 17-year-olds and (iv) those aged under 17 years at the latest available date.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The minimum weekly rates of pay for employees at various ages covered by the Retail Food and Allied Trades Wages Council (Great Britain) Wages Order are shown on page 168 of the regularly updated publication, "Time Rates of Wages and Hours of Work" (Department of Employment), a copy of which is in the Library.

Shop Workers (Hours)

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Employment what was the average number of hours worked by part-time shop workers in (a) retail food shops and (b) retail non-food shops in 1979 and 1984.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The available information on a broadly comparable basis in 1979 and 1984 relates to the average weekly hours of part-time female employees covered by pay-as-you-earn schemes and whose pay was not affected by absence in the survey week in April. Details for the main sectors of retail distribution are published in table 177 of the reports of the new earnings survey for 1979 and for 1984 respectively, copies of which are in the Library.

EC (Social Fund)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Employment what regions and projects in the United Kingdom will be excluded as a result of the revision in the terms of the European Economic Community social fund; what is the expected loss in the United Kingdom share of the fund following the revision; if he will place a copy of the revised terms in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The European Commission recently published its fund management guidelines indicating which types of project and which regions will be given priority for support from the European social fund in 1986. I have placed a copy in the Library. The main changes in priority projects are that all training schemes must include an element of new technology training, and that priority will no longer be given, except in Northern Ireland and other absolute priority regions, to temporary job creation schemes or to wage subsidy schemes for people over 25.

The main changes to priority regions in the United Kingdom are that the Western Isles, Powys, Warwickshire, parts of Devon, north Yorkshire, most of Cumbria, Grampian and the Borders have lost their previous priority status, while Derbyshire, Nottinghamshire, Lincolnshire and the Isle of Wight have gained priority status. Non-priority areas continue to qualify for support under some parts of the fund.

Most member states will be experiencing a greater reduction in areas with priority status than the United Kingdom. We are continuing to pursue with the Commission a number of anomalies in their selection of priority areas. It is too soon to say how these changes will affect United Kingdom allocations from the fund.

WALES

School Meals

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report the percentage of school meals which have been provided free of charge to pupils in each education authority in Wales for each year from 1979 to the latest available date.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: The number of pupils receiving a free school meal expressed as a percentage of the total number of pupils taking meals, at all maintained schools on a specific day in the autumn of each year, was as follows:

Per cent.

	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984*
Clwyd	21·2	21·0	27·9	30·8	30·4	30·8

* Provisional estimate.

The number of pupils receiving a free school meal expressed as a percentage of the total number of pupils present was as follows:

Rates

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report the number of domestic hereditaments in Wales on an authority-by-authority basis with a rateable value of under £400.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information is given in the following table:

Domestic hereditaments with rateable values under £400 at April 1984

X-ray Examinations (Ysbyty)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the longest delay in providing an X-ray examination at Ysbyty, Gwynedd, following a doctor's request.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This information is not held centrally.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of occasions on which his Department has referred problems concerning aspects of the ambulance service in Wales to the ambulance service advisory committee.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The ambulance service advisory committee ceased to exist in 1974.

Disabled People

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many disabled persons have been taken into employment in Wales under the job introduction scheme during the past 12 months.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Statistics are available only from 10 September 1984. Between that date and 8 March 1985 there have been 96 placings.

Mentally Ill People

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales, where in Wales there now exists a formal joint team between district health authorities and county social service departments, in relation to the development of services for mentally ill people; and if he is satisfied with the rate of progress in this area.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: All health authorities, local authorities and family practitioner committees are required by statute to form joint consultative committees, which include representation of voluntary sector interests. The arrangements below the level of JCCs for ensuring effective joint working are for authorities locally to decide.

Much remains to be done to achieve the decentralised patterns of mental illness services which are our objective. None the less, we are taking steps to ensure the co-ordinated development of services. These include monitoring health authorities' strategic plans; the requirement placed on health authorities to reinvest the proceeds of the first 0·5 per cent. of efficiency savings on developments in continuing care services for mentally ill, mentally handicapped and elderly people; special funding of mental illness developments in the NHS in 1985-86 of almost £1 million; and Welsh Office contributions to jointly financed developments in social services of over £2 million in 1985-86.

We have arranged for a further independent review of mental illness services jointly by the NHS health advisory service and the social work service of the Welsh Office between 1985-86 and 1987, the reports of which will be published.

Fluoridation

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate (a) the initial capital cost of equipment and (b) the continuing cost of labour and materials in Wales as a result of the addition of fluoride to water supplies.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The initial capital cost of equipment for the addition of fluoride to water supplies in the Welsh water authority area was £32,800 and the continuing cost of labour and materials is approximately £25,000 per annum, based on the 12 months ending 31 March 1985.

House Prices

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Wales to what factors he attributes the fall in the level of house prices in Wales compared with the rest of the United Kingdom in the last year.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No meaningful conclusion can be drawn from the fact that average Welsh house prices rose more slowly in 1984 than in United Kingdom as a whole. The most recent Building Societies Association Bulletin explains that, although over time Welsh prices move in line with the United Kingdom average, the pattern year by year is different.

PRIME MINISTER

Sheffield

Q13. Mr. Flannery asked the Prime Minister if she has any plans to pay an official visit to Sheffield.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Rating Reform

Q22. Mr. Latham asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the recent representations she has received on the reform of the rating system.

The Prime Minister: I am well aware of the objections which many people have to the present rating system. Alternative forms of local taxation are among the issues being considered by the Government's studies on local government finance now in progress.

Anti-Fouling Paints

Q35. Sir John Wells asked the Prime Minister if she is satisfied with co-ordination between the Departments of the Environment and Trade and Industry the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Northern Ireland Office on the consultation prior to the publication of draft regulations restricting the use of anti-fouling paints on boats; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Yes. My right hon. Friends are now considering representations made on these draft regulations during the period of public consultation which has just ended.

Rented Dwellings

Q108. Mr. Heddle asked the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government have plans to seek to increase the supply of homes to rent.

The Prime Minister: The Government's public expenditure plans already allow for over £3 billion of public investment in housing in 1985-86. We have encouraged local authorities to concentrate their resources on those in special need. We are also considering whether further steps, in addition to those in the Housing Act 1980, should be taken to encourage private landlords to meet the demand for homes to rent.

Nicaragua

Mr. Deakins asked the Prime Minister what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards United States policies towards Nicaragua, especially its economic and trade boycott.

The Prime Minister: We share with the United States Administration the common objectives of promoting stability, security and peaceful development in central America. Like them we want to see progress in Nicaragua towards the establishment of genuine pluralist democracy, the scaling down of armaments and an end to support for subversion of neighbouring states. We have not been asked to participate in the United States economic boycott.

Engagements

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 23 May.

Mr. Marlow asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 23 May.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 23 May.

Mr. Leigh asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 23 May.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today.

Missing Children

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government will initiate a nationwide campaign to assist distressed parents in locating their missing children.

The Prime Minister: I can well understand the distress of parents in such circumstances but doubt whether a Government campaign would provide the answer. The information which is necessary operationally for the police is already available; in addition the Metropolitan police missing persons bureau, which is a measure of the particular problem experienced in London, provides some statistical indication of the numbers of children involved. The views of the Association of Chief Police Officers were sought on whether a more comprehensive facility was required but the police considered that arrangements for recording vulnerable missing persons on the police national computer were adequate and effective.

TRANSPORT

Driving Examinations

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to privatise the examination of learner drivers; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. Friend has no proposals to privatise the driving test organisation.

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the continuing delays in the examination of learner drivers.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the last paragraph of my reply about L test waiting periods to his hon. Friend the Member for Colne Valley (Mr. Wainwright) on 19 February at column 437.

Speed Governors

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department is monitoring the use of vehicle speed governors such as the Lucas road speed limiter; and whether he is considering making their use mandatory on coaches and lorries.

Mrs. Chalker: As the hon. Member is aware the House of Commons Transport Committee, in its report on road safety, recommended that the development of speed limiters should be monitored closely with the possibility of mandatory fitment in due course. We shall be responding to the report shortly.

Drink-drive Campaign

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce the date on which the next Christmas drink-drive campaign will start; what slogan will be used; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Decisions as to the content and timing of future publicity on drinking and driving will need to take account of a number of factors, not least our evaluation of the results of the Christmas 1985 campaign, which is not yet completed. It will therefore be some time before I am in a position to make a firm statement of our future plans.

Service Stations (M1)

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for Transport on what dates his officials last carried out an annual inspection of each service station on the nine service stations between London and Leeds on the M1; and what was the conclusion of their inspection of the telecommunications systems at that time.

Mr. Ridley: The motorway service areas on the M1 between London and Leeds were inspected on the dates given in the following table:

Motorway service area	Date
Scratchwood	14 November 1984
Toddington	28 June 1983
Newport Pagnell	26 February 1985
Rothersthorpe	7 March 1984
Watford Gap	7 March 1984
Leicester Forest East	10 February 1983
Trowell	11 July 1983
Woodall	4 July 1984
Woolley Edge	4 July 1984

At all sites the telecommunications system were found to be satisfactory.

An inspection at Toddington has been deferred pending the completion of alterations. Those of Leicester Forest east and Trowell have been delayed due to a heavy volume of work in my Eastern regional office, but arrangements have been made for these sites to be inspected at an early date.

Rural Bus Grant

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he will make available maps relating to the rural bus grant referred to in the Transport Bill.

Mr. David Mitchell: The maps are available from the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Mark Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Transport what recommendation was made by the inspector who held a public inquiry into proposed tolls increases at the Severn bridge; and when he expects to announce his decision.

Mrs. Chalker: The proposal before the inspector was that the toll for cars should be increased from 20p to 50p and for lorries and coaches from 40p to £1 but that the present 10p toll for motor cycles should cease. The Inspector recommended that the order necessary to give effect to this proposal be made, subject to a minor modification to clarify the definition of motor cycles. My right hon. Friend has accepted the inspector's recommendation. The Severn Bridge Tolls Order 1985 (SI 1985/726) has been made and is being laid today. The order will come into effect on Sunday 23 June. It should be noted that this is the first toll increase since August 1979. Copies of the inspector's report and the formal decision letter sent today to all objectors have been placed in the Library.

Aerial Crop Spraying

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many Civil Aviation Authority inspectors are employed to investigate aerial crop spraying incidents; how many are employed to make spot checks unannounced on aerial crop spraying contractors; and how many are employed routinely to monitor aerial crop spraying.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Civil Aviation Authority employs eight investigators to deal with alleged breaches of civil aviation regulations, including those relating to aerial spraying. The authority also employs three inspectors who examine all operators and the adequacy of their staff, premises, equipment and aircraft before granting aerial application certificates. The inspectors make regular checks on all the operators including unannounced spot checks.

Dual Carriageways (Safety Barriers)

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average cost per mile of erecting safety barriers on the central reservations of dual carriageways.

Mrs. Chalker: The average cost is approximately £48,000 per mile, but it can vary considerably according to local circumstances.

Section 20 Rail Services

Mr. Snape asked the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements will be made in passenger transport executive areas for the continuation of financial support to section 20 rail services in the event that one or more district councils secede from the joint board arrangements.

Mr. David Mitchell: The arrangements would depend on the circumstances of the individual case. The Local Government Bill recognises this by providing for secession to be approved on the basis either that a district council would remain a member of the Passenger Transport Authority for certain services such as section 20 agreements, whilst taking over responsibility for public transport in other fields, or that it would secede for all purposes.

Boeing 747 (Safety Standards)

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will urge the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority to set up new trials to test proposed safety standards for escaping passengers in Boeing 747s;

(2) if the Civil Aviation Authority is satisfied that safety standards for passengers will be maintained on British Airways' Boeing 747s modified to seal up two of the escape exits.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's reply to the question put by the Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody) on 22 May.

ENERGY

Power Stations (Flue Gases)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will estimate the likely costs to the domestic electricity consumer in each of the first 10 years of implementing the requirements of the draft EEC directive on combustion from large plants, acid rain, by retro-fitting 12 major power stations with flue gas-desulphurisation equipment.

Mr. Goodlad: Such estimates are a matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board and I am asking the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Domestic Electricity Bills

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the average annual domestic electricity bill.

Mr. Goodlad: I understand from the Electricity Council that the average bill in 1984-85 for domestic consumers in England and Wales on standard tariffs is estimated to have been £194—6·03p per kilowatt hour. The estimated average bill for those on Economy 7 tariffs was £309 — 3·82p per kilowatt hour. The resulting overall average electricity bill for all domestic consumers was £206—5·37p per kilowatt hour.

CEGB (Environmental Performance Targets)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the responsibilities of the Central Electricity Generating Board with regard to caring for the environment in its operations; and what performance targets it has to meet in this respect.

Mr. Goodlad: The Central Electricity Generating Board's responsibilities with regard to the environment are set out in section 37 of the Electricity Act 1957. While I do not set specific performance targets in this area, the board is required, in common with the rest of industry, to comply with any general statutory environmental limits applicable to its operations.

Onshore Licensing

Mr. Portillo asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he will make an announcement about on-shore licensing arrangements.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: I hope to be able to make an announcement about the first round onshore licensing round by the end of June.

Offshore Licensing

Mr. Needham asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to announce licence awards under the ninth round of offshore licensing.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith [pursuant to the reply, 23 January 1985, c. 418]: I have today announced the conditional awards of petroleum production licences for a further 80 blocks in the ninth round. These lie in all the areas in which blocks were offered. They include the deep water frontier areas of the Rockall and Faeroes troughs; the other frontier areas of the central and extreme southern North sea and the Celtic sea; the intermediate areas of the English Channel and West Shetlands basin; and mature areas in the northern and southern North sea and Morecambe bay.

On January 23 of this year my right hon. Friend announced awards for 13 cash tender blocks applied for in the auction part of the round, bringing in a total of £121·3 million. Today's awards bring the ninth round to a very successful conclusion. A record number of applications were received, and the extent of the work obligations involved is high.

The total of 93 awards is significantly greater than the maximum of 80 we originally expected to be able to make. We also achieve our objective of opening up new frontier areas, including some in deeper water than we have previously licensed. The awards also reflect the continuing high level of interest in gas exploration and development.

Some of the blocks which I am licensing today lie close to the coast. In inviting applications for these blocks I made two matters clear. First, that there will need to be special arrangements because of the sensitivity of these areas for fishing, wildlife and navigation. Secondly, I expect the licensees, if and when they come to consider development plans for such blocks, to carry out a study into the implications and impact of the proposed development.

I would also expect the study to be carried out in consultation with all interested parties including the relevant local authorities, and with fishing and environmental bodies. I emphasise the importance of these matters.

More particularly, I have requested and obtained from all applicants, including the successful companies, confirmation of their acceptance of the special arrangements. I have set out certain essential elements which must be included in the contingency plans to be considered by my Department before drilling can take place. The purpose of these plans is to ensure a rapid response to any oil spill, access to adequate resources in reserve, and good liaison with the relevant local and other authorities.

A copy of the list of awards and the list of elements has been lodged in the Libraries of both Houses.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Licences

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report all the different types of licences operated or granted by his Department and the year in which they first came into operation.

Mr. John Patten: The information is as follows:

	Year
Therapeutic Substances Act 1956 (and previous legislations):
Research Licences	1927
Medicines Act 1968:
Product Licences	1971
Product Licences of Right	1971

Junior Hospital Doctors

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will assess the effect on patient care of the hours worked by junior hospital doctors;

(2) how many junior hospital doctors currently work in excess of the agreed maximum of 84 hours per week;

(3) how many junior hospital doctors currently work in excess of 60 hours per week.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not have information in the form requested. The average number of hours for which junior hospital doctors are contracted is 87·3. This comprises a basic working week of 40 hours, plus additional times spent working, standing-by in hospital, or available on-call at home, and includes provision for covering the annual and study leave of colleagues where appropriate. The hours spent actually working will be considerably fewer than those contracted; a survey commissioned by the Review Body on Doctors' and Dentists' Remuneration in 1981 and published in its 12th report (1982, Cmnd. 8550) indicated an average of 55·3 hours.

For some time we have accepted that the long hours required of some junior doctors are not in their interests, nor those of patients. It is for this reason that in 1983 we banned rotas requiring any junior doctor to be on duty on average for more than one night and one weekend in every two. At the same time we asked health authorities to conduct a major review of rotas more onerous than one in three, which are roughly equivalent to 84 hours a week. By the end of that year, the number of such rotas had fallen or was planned to fall by 20 per cent. from 5,000 to 4,000. We expect authorities to keep the need for the most onerous rotas under continuing review, and have set rotas of one in three or better as the target maximum commitment for the future. This year we have asked authorities to take steps to relieve the pressure on those doctors likely to have a heavy burden of out-of-hours work where there is no immediate prospect of improving their rotas. We estimate that the number of doctors in this category is unlikely to be more than 2,000 or under 10 per cent. of all juniors.

The Government are committed to the aim of reducing the excessive hours of some junior doctors and we have the support and agreement of the leaders and representatives of the medical profession. We will continue to make progress if we can secure the co-operation of the profession at local level in every Authority.

Consultant Vacancies

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many consultant vacancies are currently unfilled; and how many of these have been unfilled for more than 12 months.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Information in the form requested by the hon. Member is in the following table:

NHS consultant posts not occupied by a permanent holder at 30 September 1984 (All figures. England and Wales)

	Total	Medical	Dental
Wholly unoccupied	729	705	24

Care is required in interpreting the figures given in the table which use a definition of consultant vacancies including new posts not yet advertised or filled. Regions are quite free to determine that their service needs do not require them to appoint to such consultant posts.

Consultant staff in post have increased by about 300 a year since 1979. This reflects generally good recruitment and the priority given by health authorities to these appointments in maintaining and developing their services.

From 1985, vacancy figures will not include posts not yet advertised or filled.

Consultant Posts

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many consultant posts there are; and how this compares with 1980.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The numbers of medical and dental consultant posts in the hospital service in England at 30 September 1984, and at the comparable date in 1980, are given in the following table.

	Medical posts	Dental posts	Total posts
30 September 1984	14,117	529	14,646
30 September 1980	13,240	506	13,746

EC (Retirement Pensions)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will set out the basic retirement pension, in £ sterling, and the basic rate of unemployment benefit in each of the EEC countries; and if he will express the figures in each case as a percentage of the national average wage.

Mr. Whitney: For the first part of his question I refer the hon. Member to sections IV and VII of the Department's publication, "Tables of Social Benefit Systems in the Member States of the European Communities, Portugal and Spain, (position at 1 January 1984)", a copy of which is in the Library. As to the second part of the hon. Member's question, the data available do not allow reliable comparisons with the national average wage in each member State of the European Community.

NHS (Theft and Fraud)

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of cases of theft or fraud which were (a) reported to management, (b) reported to the police and (c) in which prosecutions took place in the National Health Service in England in 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984.

Mr. John Patten: The number of cases of theft, fraud and arson etc. reported to the Department was as follows:

	Number
1979-80	3,540
1980-81	3,923
1981-82	4,049
1982-83	4,289
1983-84	4,181

We do not collect centrally the other information requested.

Widows (Pensions)

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the latest estimate of the number of widows in receipt of widows' pension who have underlying entitlement to invalidity pension (a) with and (b) without invalidity allowance.

Mr. Whitney: The information requested is not available.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many widows are currently in receipt of additional component to widows' pension; and what is the average additional component in payment.

Mr. Whitney: At September 1983, the latest date for which information is available, there were 77,300 widows in receipt of additional component to their widow's pension. The average amount of notional additional component — before deduction of any guaranteed minimum pension — was £2·85 per week. The comparable figures for widows in receipt of widowed mother's allowance were 39,250 and £3·21 per week, giving a total of 116,550 recipients of widows' benefit receiving additional component averaging £2·97 per week.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the latest estimate of the number of widows who are currently in receipt of both invalidity allowance and additional component to widows' pension.

Mr. Whitney: The information requested is not available.

Teachers

Mr. Alan Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to how many full-time teachers have been in receipt of benefits of any form including in relation to dentist or optician charges in 1984, or in any period for which figures are available.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that benefit statistics are not kept according to the occupation of the claimant.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the criteria in each European Economic Community country whereby people offered employment and refusing it relinquish their right to unemployment benefit; and how frequently checks are made on individual claims in each country.

Mr. Whitney: I refer my hon. Friend to section VII of the Department's publication, "Tables of Social Benefit Systems in the Member States of the European Communities, Portugal and Spain, (position at 1 January 1984)", a copy of which is in the Library. This outlines the qualifying conditions for entitlement to unemployment benefit in each country of the European Community. I have no information regarding the frequency of checks made on individual claims.

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the level of benefit available in each European Economic Community country for unemployed people in the following categories (a) school leavers aged 16 years, living at home, (b) school leavers aged 16 years, estranged from home, (c) school leavers aged 17 years living at home, (d) school leavers aged 17 years, estranged from home, (e) school leavers aged 18 years living at home, (f) school leavers aged 18 years, estranged from home, (g) married men with no dependants, (h) married women with no dependants, (i) married men with two children and (j) married women with two children.

Mr. Whitney: Section VII of the Department's publication, "Tables of Social Benefit Systems in the Member States of the European Communities, Portugal and Spain, (position at 1 January 1984)", a copy of which is in the Library, outlines the information available regarding rates of benefit provided specifically for the unemployed in each country. Section IX of the tables contains information on additional cash benefits which may be available to unemployed people.

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has for each EEC country as to the categories of people entitled to draw unemployment benefit.

Mr. Whitney: I refer my hon. Friend to Section VII of the Department's publication, "Tables of Social Benefit Systems in the Member States of the European Communities, Portugal and Spain, (position at 1 January 1984)", a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has for each European Economic Community country as to its criteria whereby people in the following categories are entitled to draw unemployment benefit (a) married women who have been in work, but are now unemployed, (b) married women who have never been employed, but who are on the unemployment register, (c) people voluntarily retired, but under pensionable age and (d) school leavers who have not been in employment.

Mr. Whitney: To qualify for unemployment benfit in EC countries a person needs to have been an insured worker. Section VII of the Department's publication, "Tables of Social Benefit Systems in the Member States of the European Communities, Portugal and Spain, (position at 1 January 1984)", a copy of which is in the Library, sets out details of entitlement.

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the different categories in each European Economic Community country of those eligible to receive unemployment benefit; and if he will indicate the time limit in each country.

Mr. Whitney: I refer my hon. Friend to section VII of the Department's publication, "Tables of Social Benefit Systems in the Member States of the European Communities, Portugal and Spain, (position at 1 January 1984)", a copy of which is in the Library.

Mortgage Interest (Unemployed Persons)

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to how long in each European Economic Community country benefit is available to pay mortgage interest for people who become unemployed.

Mr. Whitney: We have no information on this particular point.

Unemployed People (Assistance)

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has for each of the European Economic Community countries as to the level of assistance available to the unemployed and low paid with the following payments (a) telephone, (b) gas, (c) electricity and (d) other fuels.

Mr. Whitney: We have no worthwhile comparative information on these matters.

Stanley Royd Hospital, Wakefield (Inquiry)

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why the chairman of the Wakefield district health authority has refused to give oral evidence to the public inquiry on the outbreak of food poisoning at Stanley Royd hospital, Wakefield; and if he will take steps to ensure that such evidence is now provided.

Mr. John Patten: The chairman of Wakefield Health Authority, along with many others, provided written evidence to the public inquiry. I understand that he indicated that he was willing to appear before the inquiry panel to give oral evidence, but that it was not considered necessary to ask him to do so.

Public Health Laboratory Service

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to reach a decision on the recommendations contained in the report of his Department's review of the public health laboratory service; and whether he intends to introduce an amendment to subsection 2(c) of section 5 of the National Health Service Act 1977 to transfer to health authorities responsibility for the administration and funding of the public health laboratory service's regional and area laboratories.

Mr. John Patten: Consultation is now taking place on the recommendations contained in the report of the review of the public health laboratory service. We have asked for comments by 15 August. We shall consider our own response to the review in the light of the comments we receive.

Nurses (Pay)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the levels of pay which have been made to student nurses, nurses and ward sisters employed by National Health Service hospitals in each year since 1979.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The table shows for the years 1979 to 1984 the minimum and maximum points of the pay scales for the grades of student nurse, enrolled nurse, staff nurse and ward sister. Pay rates for 1985 will be determined in the light of the recommendations of the Review Body for nursing staff, midwives, health visitors and professions allied to medicine.

Surplus Hospital Land

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the total financial gains which have been made by the National Health Service resulting from the sale of surplus hospital land in each year since 1979 and the organisations which made purchases.

Mr. John Patten: The information in respect of the National Health Service in England is as follows:

Year ending 31 March	£ million
1979	7·5
1980	9·9
1981	15·2
1982	19·4
1983	18·0
1984	31·5

Figures for the year ending 31 March 1985 are not yet available. Information about the organisations which made the purchases is not held centrally and could not be obtained without disproportionate expenditure.

Heart Transplants

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has yet made a definite decision to open another heart transplant centre.

Mr. John Patten: No. A gradual expansion of heart transplantation was recommended in the report* evaluating its costs and benefits copies of which are in the Library, and my right hon. Friend has asked the supra regional services advisory group to make recommendations as to how its development might best be taken forward. These recommendations are not expected before the late autumn, and no decision on the extent and nature of any expansion in the service will be taken until they have been fully considered and account taken of all the other competing demands on the resources available.

* Costs and Benefits of the Heart Transplant Programmes at Harefield and Papworth Hospitals, HMSO £7·50.

Ex-Service Men (Benefits)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what benefits are currently paid out to second world war ex-service men who suffered the loss of (a) one leg, (b) two legs, (c) an arm, (d) both arms, (e) one eye or (f) both eyes and to war widows.

Mr. Newton: The second world war ex-service men disabled as a result of that service and war widows are eligible for pensions and allowances under the war pensions scheme. The rate of disablement pension depends upon the assessed degree of disablement. Minimum assessments for the injuries quoted are:-

	Percentage assessment	Weekly pension
(a) amputation of leg through hip joint	90	£52·56
(b) amputation of both legs	100	£58·40
(c) amputation of arm through shoulder joint	90	£52·56
(c) amputation of both arms	100	£58·40
(e) loss of one eye	40	£23·36
(f) loss of both eyes	100	£58·40

In addition to the basic disablement pension a range of supplementary allowances may also be payable, usually for the more severly disabled.

The standard rate of war widows pension is £46·55 a week, which may also attract additional allowances.

NHS Contracts (Competitive Tendering)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will invite the chairmen of regional health authorities to discuss with him the effects of enforced competitive tendering for National Health Service contracts on the manpower and wage levels of ancillary workers, caterers, cleaning and laundry staff.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We discuss competitive tendering at regular meetings with chairmen of regional health authorities. I see no purpose in raising the particular point to which the hon. Member refers.

Children in Care

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of the number of children who have been placed into care during the past six years in the west midlands region have been placed with foster parents.

Mr. John Patten: The available information is given in the table which relates to each local authority in the West Midlands region.

Local Authorities (West Midlands Region)

	Percentage of children in care who were boarded out in foster homes at 31 March

District General Hospitals

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of newly constructed district general hospitals which have been completed in each single year since 1979; and in what regions these have been located.

Mr. John Patten: 33 major phases of district general hospitals have been completed since 1979 and are listed by year and region as follows:

Region	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	Total

Correspondence

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton may expect a reply to his letter to the hon. Member for Braintree (Mr. Newton) of 28 March regarding his Department's contributions towards charges for nursing homes, accompanied by a letter from a constituent of the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton.

Mr. Whitney: I have written to my hon. Friend today.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will set out the rules governing the use of the name of a hospital by doctors resident at health authority premises when writing to hon. Members.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: There are no set rules although no doctor should put himself forward as any kind of spokesman for a hospital unless authorised to do so. I have no knowledge of any instance which the hon. Member has in mind when he refers to the use of the name of a hospital.

Smoking (Diseases)

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the reply of 17 April, Official Report, column 215, if he will break down the figure of £170 million per annum cost to the National Health Service of diseases to which smoking is a major contributory factor into the cost of (a) inpatient treatment, (b) outpatient and inpatient treatment and (c) family practitioner services.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Acute Beds (Bloomsbury)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on what criteria he based his conclusion that the Bloomsbury health district has a surplus of acute beds.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 16 May 1985, c. 226]: In 1979 the London health planning consortium advised of the need for "a major shift in the balance of services within the Thames Regions" and in particular for a significant reduction in the number of acute beds in London's hospitals. Changes in population, medical advances and improvements in the efficiency with which hospital facilities were used were cited as the main reasons for arriving at this conclusion, together with the need to release resources to improve services for elderly, mentally ill and mentally handicapped people in London and elsewhere. These findings were confirmed in 1980 by the London Advisory Group which considered that "the order of change identified by the London Health Planning Consortium is broadly correct ie a reduction of 15 per cent. in the total number of acute beds in London between 1979 and 1988".

Between 1979 and 1983 (the latest year for which we have information) the number of acute beds in London has reduced by just under 10 per cent. It is for the district and regional health authorities to determine the precise level of services in each district within this overall framework.

Pensions

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many pensioners in Wales drew an additional pension of some kind under the 1975 scheme in September 1984.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 20 May 1985 c. 330]: At September 1983, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 40,460 retirement pensioners receiving an earnings-related additional pension in Wales.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Public Expenditure (Interest Rates)

15. Mr. Fatchett asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated change in public spending attributable to a 1 per cent. increase or decrease in interest rates.

Mr. Peter Rees: The precise effect depends on such matters as the size and structure of Government debt and changes in relative interest rates.

European Monetary System

16. Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make a statement on the practicability of the United Kingdom joining the exchange rate mechanism of the European monetary system.

Mr. Hayhoe: Present conditions are not appropriate for United Kingdom membership , but we keep the matter under continuing review.

Personal Taxation

20. Mr. Wareing asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether his review of personal taxation will extend to consideration of benefits payable by the Department of Health and Social Security; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: As my right hon. Friend the Chancellor explained in his Budget speech, the Green Paper on personal taxation will discuss a range of options including closer integration between the tax and benefit systems.

Johnson Matthey Bankers

21. Mr. Skinner asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he is satisfied that the Price Waterhouse report into Johnson Matthey Bankers fully covers the events leading up to the rescue operation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Rees: I have nothing to add to the answers which my hon. Friend gave the hon. Member on 25 April, column 975, and to the hon. Member for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair) on 8 May, column 401.

VAT (Soccer)

22. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received about the levying of value added tax on professional soccer.

Mr. Hayhoe: Only a few letters. Since the Bradford tragedy, there have been suggestions that VAT is a hindrance to ground improvements; but professional football clubs are registered for the tax, and subject to the normal rules can recover any VAT incurred on such works.

Capital Transfer Tax

24. Mr. Maude asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total annual cost of collecting capital transfer tax.

Mr. Moore: The estimated cost for 1984-85 of collecting both capital transfer tax and residual estate duty is £18·2 million. The cost of collecting capital transfer tax alone is not available.

Inland Revenue South-West Region

25. Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he is satisfied with the efficiency of management in Inland Revenue south-west region; and what are the reasons for the present state of work in the tax offices of that region.

Mr. Moore: Yes. In most of the 39 tax offices in the south-west region, the state of work does not give cause for special concern. In some offices there are serious arrears; these are mainly attributable to the loss of trained staff, and in some instances also to transitional problems caused by reorganisation.

Money Supply

26. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the increase in April's money supply figure.

Mr. Peter Rees: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's earlier reply to the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Latham).

Budget Proposals (Pensions)

27. Mr. Thurnham asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received from pensioners following his Budget proposals.

Mr. Moore: We have received a number of representations from pensioners about various aspects of the Budget proposals.

State Earnings-Related Pension Scheme

28. Sir William van Straubenzee asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the effect on the revenue of the abolition of the state earnings-related pension scheme.

Mr. Moore: Estimates of the effect on revenue of the abolition of the state earings-related pension scheme would depend on the assumptions made about any consequential changes in the numbers of contributions made to pension schemes, and in their level.

Public Sector Borrowing Requirement

29. Mr. Wallace asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the public sector borrowing requirement at the end of 1984-85; and what is the effect on its level of the sale of publicly owned enterprises during the year.

Mr. Peter Rees: The latest estimate of the public sector borrowing requirement for 1984-85 is £10·1 billion. That is 3·1 per cent. of GDP, which is as low as it has been for well over a decade. The PSBR benefited in the year by an estimated £2·1 billion from the special sales of assets programme.

Parliamentary Questions

30. Mr. Dalyell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his practice concerning the signing by Ministers in his Department of written answers to parliamentary questions before they are sent to hon. Members.

Mr. Hayhoe: My right hon. Friend requires draft answers to be approved and initialled by Ministers before they are re-typed and sent to hon. Members.

Workplace Crèche Facilities

31. Mr. Holt asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any plans to review the present arrangements for taxing workplace crèche facilities.

Mr. Moore: I have nothing to add to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Wealden (Sir G. Johnson Smith) on 24 April, column 481.

Black Economy

32. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate is made for the black economy in computing gross domestic product.

Mr. Peter Rees: The allowances made for the black economy were described in the October 1983 issue of Economic Trends, pages 77 and 78, and in the notes section of the 1984 edition of United Kingdom National Accounts, page 113. These publications are available in the Library of the House of Commons.

Public Expenditure

33. Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he is taking with regard to public expenditure control in the light of the report of the Audit Commission on capital spending.

Mr. Peter Rees: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has welcomed the Audit Commission's report on capital expenditure controls in local government in England—Vol. 78, column 786. Account will be taken of it in his review of the local authority capital control system and any action will follow the conclusion of that review.

Sugar (Taxation)

34. Mr. Gregory asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if Her Majesty's Government have any plans to seek to tax sugar; and if he will make statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: No.

Licences

Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list in the Official Report all the different types of licences operated or granted by his Department and the year in which they first came into operation.

Mr. Hayhoe: Her Majesty's Customs and Excise issue excise licences for the following purposes:

Still User
Beer Primer
Brewer for Sale
Compounder
Distiller
Rectifier
Producers of Wine and Made Wine
Match Manufacturer
Mechanical Lighter Manufacturer
Methylator
Limited Licence to Brew
Gaming
Gaming Machines

The Department also administers import and export licences on behalf of other Government Departments. The Treasury licenses the melting down or breaking up of United Kingdom coins.

Most of these licensing systems have been in operation for many years and it would not be possible to determine the year in which they first came into operation without disproportionate cost.

The Inland Revenue operates and grants no licences.

Balance of Payments

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year since 1978 and 1985 to date the change in the balance of payments on current account together with his estimate of the effect each year on (a) the United Kingdom money supply and (b) the level of domestic credit.

Mr. Peter Rees: Figures showing the accounting relationship between the balance of payments and the external and foreign currency counterpart to changes in the money stock together with the components of changes in domestic credit up to the end of 1984 are given in "Financial Statistics" tables 11.5 and 11.6. Similar figures are not yet available for the first quarter of 1985.

Manual Earnings

Mr. Maclean asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state the number of minutes of work a male manual worker on average earnings needed to complete in 1973 and 1984, respectively, to earn the equivalent in the years in question of the average retail price of the following food items: (a) one pint of milk, (b) one dozen eggs, (c) one pound of beef, (d) one pound of pork, (e) one pound of lamb, (f) one pound of back bacon, (g) three pounds of chicken, (h) one pound of butter, (i) one pound of cheese, (j) one pound of potatoes, (k) two pounds of sugar, *(l)*one pound of tomatoes and (m) a 800 gramme white loaf.

Mr. Peter Rees: The information requested is provided in the following table. The calculations, presented in minutes, are based on the average net hourly income (gross earings less NIC's and income tax) of a full-time manual man (single) on adult rates, excluding those whose pay was affected by absence and draws on information in "New Earnings Surveys". The price data come from information collected for the retail prices index.

EC (Financial Guidelines)

Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the European Economic Community financial guideline relates to calendar years or to financial years.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Community's financial year is the calendar year. The guideline thus relates to the calendar year.

Manufacturing Investment

Mr. Strang asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the annual level of investment in manufacturing industry in each of the next five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: Both Government and CBI surveys indicate an increase of 7 to 8 per cent. in manufacturing investment this year.

Share Schemes

Dr. Godman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many save-as-you-earn share option schemes under the Finance Act 1980 have been (a) submitted to the Inland Revenue and (b) approved in each year since 1980.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 21 May 1985, c. 413-14]: The information requested is as follows:

	(a) Schemes submitted	(b) Schemes approved
1980*	33	7
1981	133	113
1982	77	76
1983	87	74
1984	150	100
1985†	53	46
Total	533‡	416

* The start date for the schemes was 15 November 1980.
† Up to 30 April.
‡ Of this total, 33 are schemes which companies have not proceeded with, for a variety of reasons.

Dr. Godman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many approved deferred share trust profit sharing schemes under the Finance Act 1978 (as amended) have been (a) submitted to the Inland Revenue and (b) approved in each year since 1979.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 21 May 1985, c. 414]: The information requested is as follows:

	(a) Schemes submitted	(b) Schemes approved
1979*	186	78
1980	120	106
1981	77	77

* The start date for the scheme was 6 April 1979.
† Up to 30 April.
‡ Of this total, 120 are schemes which companies have not proceeded with, for a variety of reasons.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Cocoa Agreements

Dr. Twinn asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will seek to secure that the price objectives of international cocoa agreements are in future denominated in a representative basket of currencies.

Mrs. Fenner: Negotiations for a new International Cocoa Agreement are within the competence of the European Community. Her Majesty's Government are seeking, together with our EC partners and other consuming countries, a new agreement based on a realistic view of the market and taking account of the problems caused by currency fluctuations.

Dr. Twinn asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to seek amendment of the International Cocoa Agreement 1980 so as to permit adjustment of the price objectives to compensate for fluctuations in international currency markets.

Mrs. Fenner: The 1980 Agreement expires this September. The question of its further extension, including the application of any price range, is linked to the prospects for further negotiation of a successor Agreement and cannot be determined at this stage. I fully appreciate, however, the need to take into account in this context the effect of currency fluctuations.

US Quotas

Mr. Gregory asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he has taken since the United States Government imposed quotas on certain imported goods under section 22 of the Agricultural Act 1933 in January.

Mrs. Fenner: On hearing of this action, my Department raised it with the European Commission, within whose competence such matters lie, and the Commission transmitted our concern to the United States authorities. My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, also raised the issue, when he visited Washington DC on 7-9 May, with the United States trade representative.

On 17 May, the United States Government decided, with effect from 19 May, to exclude from the restrictions imports of certain goods containing sugar, pending an investigation by the US International Trade Commission.

These goods are:

—articles in retail packages, if not dry mixtures;
—articles in retail packages, if dry mixtures containing 10 per cent. or less sugar by dry weight;
—articles in bulk, whether or not dry mixtures, containing 10 per cent. or less sugar by dry weight;
—certain cake decorations (ie those to be used in the same condition as imported without any further processing other than the direct application to individual pastries or confections) containing 65 per cent. or less sugar by dry weight;
—crushed coconut meat or juice preparations with added sugar, containing 65 per cent. or less sugar by dry weight;
—minced sea food preparations containing 20 per cent. or less sugar by dry weight.

Brown Tail Moth

Mr. Hancock asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what action he is taking to protect the fruit-growing areas of south Hampshire from the brown tail moth caterpillar;

(2) what information he has about the incidence of serious infestations of the brown tail moth; and what is his policy towards its control.

Mrs. Fenner: The brown tail moth caterpillar occurs mainly in the coastal areas of Hampshire, Sussex, Kent, Essex and Suffolk. The moth is not regarded as an agricultural pest and responsibility for any necessary control rests with the growers. I have no knowledge of any serious orchard infestation.

The Agricultural Development and Advisory Service provides information on the habitat and control of this caterpillar in leaflet 40—"Web-forming Caterpillars"—copies of which have been placed in the library of the House.

EC (Agricultural Expenditure)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what estimate he has made of the extra expenditure in the European Economic Community budget resulting from each 1 per cent. cut in cereal prices up to 3·6 per cent.; and whether the inter-governmental agreement for 1985 will be modified to take account of this increased expenditure;

(2) which year's expenditure counts as the base for future agricultural spending as specified by the European Economic Community document on budgetary discipline; and what estimate he has made of the effect on future budgets of a cut in cereal prices below the 3·6 per cent. on which the budget was based.

Mr. Jopling: The European Commission has estimated that each 1 per cent. increase in the intervention price for cereals, after taking account of consequent changes in payments for the carryover of end-of-season stocks, would increase EAGGF expenditure by about 3 mecu in 1985 and 60 mecu in 1986. The draft budget for 1985, including the additional finance to be provided through an inter-governmental agreement, has been drawn up on the basis of the Commission's original price-fixing proposals. Any increases in expenditure, arising from changes to these proposals or other factors, will however be accommodated within the budget provision as the Commission has stated that it will take whatever measures are necessary in the management of agricultural markets to avoid a supplementary budget for 1985.

In accordance with article 4 of the Council's conclusions on budget discipline, the financial guideline for agriculture is calculated by reference to agricultural expenditure in 1984 and 1985 and the rate of growth of the own resources base.

Water Authorities (Grants)

Mr. Leigh asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what criteria he applied when allocating a grant earning ceiling to water authorities in 1985-86.

Mr. Jopling: In allocating grant-earning ceiling, that is, the total capital expenditure attracting grant aid to water authorities for sea defence, flood protection and arterial drainage purposes for the current year, I was faced with bids that in total exceeded the amounts available by over £16 million. I therefore decided that in allocating such expenditure I should establish a rough order of priorities that would seek to ensure that the money was allocated to cover the work that was most needed. The first factor that I took into account was the firm contractual commitments for 1985-86 that had already been entered into by authorities and where contractual penalties would be incurred if the work was not carried out. I then sought to allocate amounts with the following priorities very much in mind: flood warning schemes; urban sea defence; urban flood relief; rural sea defence and the preservation of existing rural drainage schemes; new rural drainage schemes.

In using this broad order of priorities I recognised that many schemes serve more that one objective. I am not seeking to lay down the programme of works for water authorities. The order of priorities does not mean that I consider that all requirements in a higher category need to be met before there is any expenditure in a lower category.

I envisage that some authorities may quite rightly consider that to protect an existing agricultural scheme is more important than to alleviate a particular urban sea defence problem in view of the likelihood or the scale of potential damage. It must always be for the drainage authority committee with knowledge of the local problems to decide on those schemes that it wishes to undertake.

TRANSPORT

Pesticides

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps are being taken to restrict the application of pesticides from the air.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Only chemicals which are specifically cleared for aerial application under the pesticides safety precautions scheme may be used for this purpose; these exclude the most toxic and persistent chemicals. The Civil Aviation Authority is responsible under article 40 of the Air Navigation Order 1980 for the control of aerial crop spraying. It has recently reviewed and strengthened the requirements it imposes on operators, in particular the procedures designed to keep spray to the target area. The distance which must be kept from houses has been increased from 75ft to 200ft, for example, and operators must confine the application of chemicals to the area to be treated. The authority will not hesitate to prosecute if it has satisfactory evidence that the procedures laid down have not been followed.

Severn Bridge (Toll Charges)

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now publish the report submitted to him in November 1984 following the public inquiry held in Bristol in July 1984 regarding his proposal to increase toll charges on the Severn bridge.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Newport, West (Mr. Robinson) on Thursday 23 May 1985.

A38 (Safety Fencing)

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the answer of 20 May, Official Report, column 284, what he envisages will be the effect of publishing interim guidance on the provision of safety fencing on the A38 between Exeter and Plymouth; and for whom the interim guidance will be published.

Mrs. Chalker: Until the new criteria are finalised, their full effect cannot be assessed, but work on assessment has begun, and I shall write to my hon. Friend as soon as it is complete. The updated criteria will be published as a departmental standard and will be available generally through the DOE/DTp publications sales unit.

Wrecked Ships

Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any proposals to change procedures relating to the salvaging of wrecked ships; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have no proposals of this sort, although when parliamentary time permits I propose to seek approval for legislation that would provide for the protection and disposal of objects of archaeological and historic importance that are recovered from wrecked vessels.

ENVIRONMENT

Fluoridation

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate (a) the initial capital cost of equipment and (b) the continuing cost of labour and materials in all parts of the United Kingdom as a result of the addition of fluoride to water supplies.

Mr. Macfarlane: (a) The intial capital cost of fluoridation equipment is estimated currently to lie in the range £35,000—£75,000 for populations up to 500,000. This excludes any building costs.

(b) It has been estimated that the total running cost of United Kindom fluoridation plants is approximately £1 million.

Building Regulations

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress he has made in simplifying building regulations.

Mr. Gow: New building regulations will be made to come into force before the end of the year which will be simpler and more flexible in form, will give wider exemption and simplified procedures for minor works and will provide for private certification.

Planning Zones

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce his proposal to introduce simplified planning zones.

Mr. Macfarlane: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Staffordshire (Mr. Heddle) on 26 March at column 147.

West Yorkshire Structure Plan

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what timetable for the consultation and examination procedure would be appropriate in order to enable him to approve first alterations to the west Yorkshire structure plan prior to the proposed abolition of the metropolitan counties.

Mr. Macfarlane: The time taken to process submitted alterations to approved structure plans varies according to the extent and complexity of the alterations and the weight of objections. In the case, of the alterations to the west Yorkshire structure plan, my right hon. Friend's preliminary view was that there was unlikely to be time to complete the various steps required to process the alterations before 1 April 1986.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to announce his decision on whether to invoke his powers under section 6(1) of the Local Government (Interim Provisions) Act 1984 to defer consideration of the submitted alterations to the west Yorkshire structure plan.

Mr. Macfarlane: My right hon. Friend will announce his decision shortly.

Structure Plans

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each county for which he has accepted structure plan alterations firstly the time that elapsed between the submission of alterations by the counties and his decision to put them to public examination, and secondly the time which elapsed between that decision and his approval to the alterations.

Mr. Macfarlane: The information is as follows:

Wildlife and Countryside (Amendment) Bill

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the letters he has received from the Nature Conservancy Council concerning the Wildlife and Countryside (Amendment) Bill.

Mr. Waldegrave: It is not normal practice to publish correspondence between the NCC and my Department.

Tower Block Flats (Defects)

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he proposes a warranty scheme for repairs to defects in flats within tower blocks which have been sold under the Housing Act 1980.

Mr. Gow: Owners of flats who are eligible for assistance under the Housing Defects Act will receive that assistance by way of repurchase at 95 per cent. of the defect-free value. Reinstatement grants are not available for flats because of the difficulty of reinstating flats individually.

Water Industry (Consumer Consultative Committees)

Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what value he attaches to the water industry consumer consultative committees.

Mr. Macfarlane: As was made clear in the Department's recent evidence to the Public Accounts Committee, I attach a good deal of importance to water authorities' arrangements for consumer consultation under section 7 of the Water Act 1983, and to the valuable advice which water authorities derive from their consumer consultative committees on a wide range of issues.

Welfield Site, Hatfield

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects a decision on the planning inquiry relating to the Welfield site in Hatfield to be announced; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macfarlane: I hope to issue a decision on this case very soon.

Nugee Committee (Report)

Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive the report of the Nugee committee on the private rented sector.

Mr. Gow: I expect to receive the report later this year.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Health and Population

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what non-government specialist advice on health and population matters is available to staff of development divisions overseas and to his headquarters staff, respectively; and how often overseas visits in connection with health and population projects were made by United Kingdom-based non-governmental experts in 1984.

Mr. Raison: Advice is available on request from a variety of non-government sources such as the London and Liverpool schools of tropical medicine and the specialist population centres. In addition to technical co-operation officers and consultants now engaged on projects abroad, 17 overseas advisory visits were made on behalf of the Overseas Development Administration in 1984.

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many of the staff in each development division overseas are experts in health and population projects; and how many staff at Overseas Development Administration headquarters have similar expertise.

Mr. Raison: There are no health or population specialists on the staff of development divisions. There are eight professionals in these fields at the headquarters of the Overseas Development Administration.

Homeless Persons

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he is planning to discuss with the relevant co-ordinating council what the level of funding from his Department will be in respect of the international year of shelter for the homeless in 1987.

Mr. Raison: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington (Mr. Boyes) on 7 May columns 307-8. Funds under our bilateral aid programme are not allocated globally on a sectoral basis, but country by country in accordance with priorities between sectors as agreed with our aid recipients.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Value Added Tax

Mr. Heddle asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report the administrative costs in percentage terms of collecting value added tax in businesses with an annual turnover of (a) £30,000, (b) £40,000, (c) £50,000, (d) £60,000, (e) £70,000, (f) £80,000, (g) £90,000 and (h) £100,000, respectively.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that detailed records of administrative costs are not maintained by reference to turnover bands and the information requested would be disproportionately expensive to calculate.

PAYE System

Mr. Grylls asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress he is making in putting the pay-as-you-earn system on to a more cumulative system; and when he expects to put national insurance contributions and pay-as-you-earn calculations side by side in same deduction tables.

Mr. Moore: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Government Departments (Expenditure)

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he is satisfied with the control of expenditure on the running costs of Government Departments; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Rees: Successive scrutinies of the running costs of Government Departments have shown that in aggregate these costs have been rising more quickly than costs in the economy generally. The Government intend to improve the arrangements for controlling running costs. Targets will therefore be set in the forthcoming public expenditure survey, to cover the running costs, including manpower costs, of each Department. These targets will be published in the 1986 public expenditure White Paper.

Family Income Supplement

Mr. Lester asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate has been made of the additional cost to the Exchequer of family income supplement or its successor if wages councils were abolished.

Mr. Peter Rees: No estimate has been made.

Privatisation (Fees and Commissions)

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list in the Official Report (a) updated figures for fees paid, including fees to auditors in respect of the first share issues for Amersham International Limited, Associated British Ports, British Aerospace, British Railways Board Hotels, Britoil, Cable and Wireless and the National Freight Corporation and (b) all the fees and commissions paid to primary underwriters, sub-underwriters, financial advisers, legal advisers, auditors and stockbrokers in respect of the second Cable and Wireless issue, the second Associated British Ports issue, Enterprise Oil, Sealink, Jaguar, British Telecom and the 1979 and 1983 BP issues; and if he will name each firm concerned.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 21 December 1984, c. 360.]: Tables 1 and 2, which each relate to the United Kingdom sales specified in part (a) of the question, have been revised and updated as follows:

Notes:
† The Bank of England was jointly responsible with Kleinwort, Benson for making the sale arrangements and providing advice. The bulk of the Bank's costs were incurred in its role as receiving bank. No estimate for costs incurred in the provision of advice is available.
‡ Trade sale.
‖ The sale of Jaguar was conducted by BL plc who appointed advisers. Details of the appointments and the total cost are a matter for the Company. Only one firm was appointed to advise the Government, it is not the practice to disclose fees paid to individual firms.
¶ In both BP sales, the Bank of England was responsible on the Government's behalf for making the sale arrangements and providing advice. The bulk of the Bank's costs were incurred in its role as receiving bank. No estimate for costs incurred in the provision of advice is available.
● The United Kingdom offer was placed with institutional investors ("Priority Applicants"). The cost of the commissions payable to Priority Applicants is included in the total.
■ Estimate for 1984-85: final accounts are not yet available.
★ Provisional
* Too numerous to list

In some cases the revisions update previous preliminary estimates. In other cases, figures have been revised to include fees for various minor financial advisory services, for example petroleum consultancy, insurance audits, property valuation. In accordance with the terms of the question, the figures exclude payments to receiving banks, public relations advisers, printers and distributors, and similar costs not associated with the provision of financial advice. Payments of stamp duty are similarly excluded.

Tables 1 and 2 relate to United Kingdom sales. In three sales, — BP in 1979 and 1983, and BT — special arrangements were made overseas: total value of fees and commissions incurred in respect of these was about £0·5 million and £27·5 million, including £7·8 million paid to the Bank of England, respectively. The BT figure is provisional, since final settlement of all bills has not yet been made. The principal advisers on the BP arrangements in 1979 were Davis Polk and Wardwell, Linklaters and Paines (US), Morgan Stanley and Co., and Sullivan Cromwell; in 1983 they were David Polk and Wardwell, and Sullivan and Cromwell; in the BT sale they were Morgan Stanley and Co., McLeod Young Weir, Nomura Securities Co., Swiss Bank Corporation International, and Sullivan and Cromwell.

HOME DEPARTMENT

British Crime Survey

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, pursuant to the answer of 15 March, Official Report, column 303, he is yet in a position to publish the findings of the follow-up study of the British crime survey.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend hopes to be able to do so in June or early July.

Prevention of Terrorism Act

Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were detained under the Prevention of Terrorism Act at Manchester airport, Liverpool ferry terminus and at other points of entry into the United Kingdom during the period 1983 to 1985; how many persons were charged with any offences arising from detention; and what proportion of those charged have been convicted.

Mr. Brittan: Information on total detentions at a port or airport in Great Britain is published each quarter in the Home Office statistical bulletin "Statistics on the operation of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Acts 1974, 1976 and 1984". Information on charges and convictions following all detentions is published annually (tables 6 and 7 of statistical bulletin 1/85). The more detailed information requested is given in the table. Information on detentions on entry to Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Prison (Isle of Wight)

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans for the construction of a further fortress type purpose-built prison on the Isle of Wight this century; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: No.

Cinemas

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will amend the staff level regulations contained in the Cinematographers Act 1956 to take into account the development of multi-screen cinemas.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. and learned Friend will shortly be consulting interested organisations on draft revised regulations to replace the Cinematograph (Safety) Regulations 1955. During the consultation process particular attention will be given to the question of the number of staff to be required in multi-auditoria cinemas consistent with maintaining the safety of the public using those premises.

Tamil Community

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Tamils from Sri Lanka have been allowed temporary admission into the United Kingdom during the past 12 months; and how many of these have subsequently been deported from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waddington: The information is not available in the form requested.

In the 12 months up to 1 May 1985, approximately 350 Tamils from Sri Lanka accompanied in some cases by dependants, on arrival in the United Kingdom either sought asylum or expressed a fear of returning to Sri Lanka and were subsequently granted temporary admission.

In the same period no Tamil passenger expressing a fear of returning to Sri Lanka was returned there.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Tamils from Sri Lanka have applied for asylum in the United Kingdom during the past 12 months; and of these how many applications have been (a) granted, (b) refused and (c) have still to be decided.

Mr. Waddington: The relevant statistics are recorded by nationality and not according to ethnic origin.

In 1984, 425 applications for asylum were received from Sri Lankan nationals. In the same period two applicants were recognised as refugees, 14 were granted leave to remain exceptionally, 51 withdrew their applications and 143 were refused leave to enter or remain.

Between 1 January and 31 March 1985, the latest period for which figures are available, there were 203 applicants, of whom one was allowed to remain exceptionally, nine withdrew their applications and 14 were refused leave to enter or remain. At 31 March 1985, there were 715 cases awaiting decision.

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out in the Official Report the number of Tamils from Sri Lanka who have (a) entered the United Kingdom, (b) applied for political asylum and (c) been granted permanent settlement in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: The relevant immigration statistics are classified by nationality and do not separately identify Tamils. The available figures for all Sri Lankan nationals are shown in the following table:

Citizens of Sri Lanka admitted to the United Kingdom who applied for political asylum or refugee status or were granted settlement in the United Kingdom.

1980	23,900	20	770
1981	25,500	10	790

1983	28,300	380	920
1984	30,200	420	760

Recent weeks have seen a substantial increase in the number of Sri Lankan Tamils seeking asylum on arrival in the United Kingdom. Between 16 May and 22 May there have been some 420 such cases. These cases are now being considered in accordance with the policy announced by my right hon. and learned Friend on 20 May, at column 273, with a view to returning to Sri Lanka those who do not qualify for asylum, unless there is reason to believe that they would suffer severe hardship on their return.

Metropolitan Police (Burglar Alarms)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many burglar alarm calls were dealt with by the Metropolitan police in 1984; what percentage of these were false alarms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand that figures are not available for alarms signalled by bells only. Figures that are available relate to alarms whose signals got to the police direct, or via central stations maintained by alarm companies. The total number of calls from these alarms dealt with by the Metropolitan police in 1984 was 210,213 of which 98·9 per cent. proved false. It is the policy of the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis to withdraw direct police response to alarms which generate an unacceptable number of false calls until the trouble has been put right.

Swansea Prison

Mr. Alan Williams asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what threat of industrial action by prison officers has arisen at Swansea prison; what threats of suspension have been made by his Department to the officers concerned; and if his Department's response recognised that the prison officers had conducted a secret ballot before announcing action.

Mr. Mellor: Following a secret ballot, prison officers at Swansea threatened to reduce the inmate population of the establishment to its certified normal accommodation of 241. The action has been suspended to allow further discussions to take place; but the staff concerned know that, notwithstanding the ballot, one of the responses open to management during industrial action is the temporary relief from duty of any officer who refuses to obey a lawful order.

Lion Intoximeter

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is now satisfied with the working of the Lion intoximeter; how many, and which, police forces now use it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a report from the forensic science service on the operation of the Lion intoximeter and the Camic breath analyser evidetial breath testing instruments, which will be published in due course. The lion intoximeter is used by 39 of the 43 police forces in England and Wales. The Camic instrument is used in Northumbria, Durham, Cleveland and North Yorkshire and, I understand, by forces in Scotland.

Drug Trafficking

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish, for consultation, a draft of his proposed legislation to provide for the seizure and confiscation of assets acquired through drug trafficking.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend intends to make particulars of his proposals available for comment before a Bill is introduced.

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for reports from the chief constables of north, west and south Yorkshire police forces about the extent of drug trafficking in each area and the measures they are taking to combat it.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) on 28 March at column 274.

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons arrested and charged with drug trafficking offences have absconded before trial (a) in England and Wales and (b) in each Yorkshire police force area in the last five years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I will reply as soon as possible.

Coal Industry Dispute

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are in prison as a result of incidents arising from the miners' strike; and what are their alleged offences.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is not recorded centrally.

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people charged with riot and unlawful assembly for offences in connection with the miners' dispute have (a) been acquitted or (b) had the charges withdrawn.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information requested is given in the table.

Charges of Riot and Unlawful Assembly for Offences in Connection with the Miners' Dispute

Police Force	Riot Charge withdrawn	Acquittals of Riot	Unlawful Assembly charge withdrawn	Acquittals of Unlawful Assembly

* 19 charges were ordered by the court to lie on the file.
† 9 charges of riot were effectively amended to charges of unlawful assembly.
‡ 7 charges were ordered by the court to lie on the file.

Children and Young Persons (Detention)

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether an offender sentenced to be detained for a determinate period under section 53(2) of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 and detained in prison at his direction is entitled to remission of any part of that sentence under theprison rules.

Mr. Mellor: No. But these detainees can be released on licence at any point in their sentence, and such arrangements are designed to ensure that they are not treated less favourably than other offenders.

Prisons

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what formal consultation process there is to ensure that the requirements of prison staff and inmates are fully taken into account in the design of new prison facilities.

Mr. Mellor: Design solutions for new prisons are developed on the basis of full consultation with the various specialist and operational interests concerned, and take account of the range of current thinking on prison design generally. The trade unions representing governors, prison officers and other prison staff are formally consulted on new prison projects at the preliminary design stage, and thereafter as necessary.

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is satisfied that the design of the re-developed Holloway prison adequately meets the requirements of staff and inmates.

Mr. Mellor: The design was developed in the late 1960s on the basis of medically orientated treatment concepts which are not now regarded as wholly appropriate. There are also a number of acknowledged design weaknesses. Facilities for staff and inmates are however greatly superior to those provided before the redevelopment began, and will be further improved when the project is finally completed towards the end of this year.

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the terms of reference of the committee of inquiry into conditions at Holloway prison include consideration of and making recommendations regarding the physical design of the prison.

Mr. Mellor: The terms of reference of the project committee do not specifically refer to the physical design of the prison, but the committee is inevitably taking it into account.

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the original estimates of the capital and annual running costs for the redeveloped Holloway prison; and if he will give details of the latest estimates of these costs together with an explanation of any differences.

Mr. Mellor: As the redevelopment programme was carried out in six main phases under different contracts covering a total period of 14 years, the full information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The information readily available is as follows:

Phase 1—Commenced August 1971. Cost £1·1 million. Completed November 1985.

Phases 2 and 3—Commenced April 1973. Cost £2·6 million. Completed May 1976.

Phases 4 and 5—commenced October 1977. Cost £7·7 million. Completed June 1984.

Phase 6—Commenced November 1984. Estimated Cost £239,000. Due for completion—November 1985.

Information about annual running costs is contained in the Prison Departmental Financial Report 1983-84, a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what mechanism is in place to ensure that new prison building programmes meet planned capital and operating cost targets.

Mr. Mellor: Capital cost targets for new prison projects are based on standard briefing guides for the particular category of establishment and are examined and re-assessed at specific stages of design and construction. The manpower implications of the design are similarly kept under regular review. Attention is also given, in both design and the selection of materials, to the cost of maintenance and the need to conserve energy.

Fire Precautions (Hospitals)

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will now seek to extend the Fire Precautions Act 1971 to National Health Service hospitals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Continuing effort is being devoted to improving fire precautions standards in National Health Service hospitals within the limits of available resources and my right hon. and learned Friend has at present no plans to designate such premises under the Fire Precautions Act 1971.

Police Central Intelligence Unit

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether there are any plans to extend the police central intelligence unit established in London to other metropolitan areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: After the 1981 riots all police forces were invited to develop systems for monitoring rises in community tension which might forshadow serious public disorder. In London each district reports on a regular basis on the level of tension in the area. The central information unit collates these district reports for senior management in New Scotland yard to consider whether action is required to prevent tension escalating into riots. Similar arrangements for monitoring the potential for public disorder exist in most police forces.

Police Central Intelligence Unit

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers are working in any capacity in the central intelligence unit established in London.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The officers currently employed at the central information unit are one superintendent, one inspector, two sergeants and two constables.

Police Services (Charges)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the charges for police services to the organisers of (a) the 1984 Wimbledon tennis championships, (b) the 1984 Chelsea flower show and (c) the 1985 Football Association cup final.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that the charges for police services which were made to the organisers of the 1984 Chelsea flower show and 1984 Wimbledon tennis championships were £8,018·85 and £52,794·69 respectively. Details of charges in respect of the 1985 FA cup final are not yet available: policing charges made for the 1984 event were £30,887·74.

Fire Precautions (Business Premises)

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress he has made in introducing flexibility in the application of fire precautions to business premises presenting minimal risk.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Within the scope of existing legislation, fire authorities already exercise discretion in the application of fire precautions to business premises presenting minimal risk, but arrangements are in hand to issue further guidance on this aspect and to reinforce it in training courses provided at the fire service college. The report of the scrutiny into burdens on business considered that flexibility could be increased with the introduction of a new statutory system of fire precautions control along the lines of proposals formulated within the machinery of the central fire brigades advisory councils. These proposals are designed to enable fire authorities to control fire precautions in a wider range of occupancies and to concentrate their attention on the premises presenting the greatest risk. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and the Home Secretary hope to publish a consultative document based on these proposals before the summer recess.

Extradition

Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements exist for the extradition from Pakistan of someone of (a) Pakistan nationality, and (b) British nationality wanted to face drug charges in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Mellor: There are no arrangements with Pakistan for the extradition of persons accused of drug offences.

Detention Centres

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he has received any allegations of assault or mistreatment of inmates at Send detention centre, Woking, Surrey;

(2) whether he has received any allegations of assault or mistreatment of inmates at Werrington detention centre, Stoke on Trent;

(3) whether he has received, since 29 March, any further complaints of assault or mistreatment of inmates at Aldington detention centre from parents or solicitors or other professional persons;

(4) whether he has received any allegations of assault or mistreatment of inmates at Blantyre house detention centre, Kent;

(5) whether he has received any allegations of assault or mistreatment of inmates at Usk detention centre, Gwent;

(6) further to the answer of 29 March, Official Report, column 399, about Aldington detention centre, what is the current state of investigation;

(7) whether he has received any complaints of failure of persons to co-operate with the police investigations into complaints at Aldington detention centre referred to in the answer of 29 March, Official Report, column 399.

Mr. Mellor: Since the new, consistent detention centre regime took effect on 6 March we have received no such allegations in respect of Send, Werrington, or Usk detention centres; an allegation by an inmate at Blantyre House was fully investigated by the Governor, who concluded that it was without substance. The police are investigating a number of allegations in respect of Aldington detention centre, the most recent of which was made on 16 May, it would be inapropriate to comment on their inquiries while they are proceeding.

Custodial Remand

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average period of custodial remand for female custodial remand prisoners in England and Wales for the years 1982, 1983 and 1984.

Mr. Mellor: The available information is published annually in "Prison Statistics, England and Wales" (Table 2(g) of the latest issue for 1983, Cmnd. 9363). Corresponding figures for 1984 are not yet available.

Terrorism

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons detained under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Acts in each of the police areas of metropolitan London, Dumfries and Galloway and Merseyside have been charged with offences under the Acts or under other Acts, separately, between 11 November 1974 and 31 December 1984.

Mr. Brittan: Information on detentions in the three police force areas specified is published quarterly in Home Office Statistical Bulletins (table 3 of issue 1/85), a copy of which is in the Library. Information on subsequent charges is readily available only for Great Britain and is given in Tables 6 and 7 of the same publication. Some information on charges following detention in Merseyside was given in my reply to a question from the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry) on 29 January 1985 at column 77. I will provide as soon as possible further information on charges for Merseyside and corresponding information for the Metropolitan police district and Dumfries and Galloway.

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were detained in connection with terrorist-type offences under Acts other than the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Acts and the Emergency Provisions (Northern Ireland) Acts in each of the years from and including 1969 to 1985 to date.

Mr. Brittan: The information requested is not available.

Female Prisoners (Statistics)

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average length of custodial sentence of female prisoners in England and Wales in each of the years 1982, 1983 and 1984.

Mr. Mellor: The readily available information is published annually in "Prison Statistics, England and Wales" (tables 3.7, 3.12, 5.5, 5.7 and 7.3 of the latest issue for 1983, Cmnd. 9363). Information about young female offenders was also published in tables 6 and 7 of Home Office Statistical Bulletin issue 2/85, "Young Offenders in Prison Department establishments under the Criminal Justice Act 1982, July 1983-June 1984".

Independent Broadcasting (Wales)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will have discussions with the Independent Broadcasting Authority about the changes taking place on the pattern of local independent broadcasting in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Under the Broadcasting Act 1981, the Independent Broadcasting Authority has responsibility for entering into contracts for the provision of independent local radio programmes, and for deciding, in the light of its statutory duties, what action to take if any subsequent change in the nature of an independent local radio company takes place. My right hon. and learned Friend, has, therefore, no power to intervene in decisions that the Independent Broadcasting Authority may take in relation to the current situation in Wales, but the Government are maintaining a close interest in developments.

Refugees

Mr. Ernie Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average period of time taken to deal with applications by refugees for indefinite leave to remain in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waddington [pursuant to his reply, 13 May 1985, c. 10]: On the basis of the information available, it is estimated that half of all refugees granted settlement on removal of time limit in 1984 had their case decided within five to six weeks of application.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Privatisation Programme (Fees and Commissions)

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what fees and commissions have been paid to City institutions in respect of shares sales of those privatised enterprises for which he is responsible; to whom these fees and commissions have been paid; and on what basis they have been calculated.

Mr. Butcher: My Department has been directly responsible for the privatisation of Cable and Wireless, first sale of shares*, British Aerospace and British Telecom. The following table shows the total value of fees and commissions paid in respect of these sales and the firms to which they were paid. The information does not include advice paid for by the companies being privatised.

Footnotes

* The second sale of shares in Cable and Wireless in 1983 was the responsibility of Her Majesty's Treasury.

† Too numerous to list.

‡ The United Kingdom offer was placed with institutional investors ('Priority Applicants'). The cost of the commissions payable to Priority Applicants is included in the total.

‖ These figures exclude payments to receiving banks, public relations advisers, printers and distributors and similar costs not associated with the provision of financial or legal advice.

¶ Provisional pending final settlement of all bills. It also excludes the overseas offering for which the total value of fees and commissions was £27·5 million (also provisional) which includes £7·8 million paid to the Bank of England. The principal advisers for the overseas offers were Morgan Stanley and Co., Macleod Young Weir, Nomura Securities Co., Swiss Bank Corporation International and Sullivan and Cromwell.

The sale of Jaguar was the responsibility of BL plc. The Department sought advice from one firm, J. Henry Schroder Wagg and Co. Ltd. It is not the practice to disclose the value of individual contracts between the Department and its advisers.

Payments are based on a variety of hourly rates, flat rates and percentage commissions. Where appropriate the basis for payment is disclosed in the offer for sale document.

Pirate Radio

Mr. Pendry asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the current pirate radio stations known to be broadcasting in the United Kingdom; what was the approximate date on which they started transmitting and the regularity with which they now broadcast; and what was the number of occasions, if any, that they have been prosecuted, and with what result.

Mr. Butcher: The following information relates to unlicensed stations known to be currently broadcasting. The figures for prosecutions and convictions refer to individuals who have been involved in the operation of stations. In addition to the prosecutions shown, more than 10 prosecutions are pending against individuals involved in operating various of the stations listed. Further prosecutions are pending against operators of unlicensed broadcasting stations which have stopped transmitting.

Manufacturing

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has as to the share of the top 100 private sector companies in (a) manufacturing employment, (b) net manufacturing output and (c) net capital expenditure in manufacturing in 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984.

Mr. Butcher: The figures provided in the following table relate to the manufacturing activity of the largest 100 enterprises in the private sector, defined in terms of their employment in manufacturing. Estimates for 1983 and 1984 are not yet available.

Band III

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received about the effect on the United Kingdom mobile radio equipment manufacturers of the introduction of large systems in Band III.

Mr. Butcher: A variety of proposals have been received from companies interested in establishing large radio systems in Band III. Among those responding, several have urged the Government to reach early conclusions on the use of Band III; one company has stated that if any early date were set for the introduction of a large system, it could be unhelpful to United Kingdom equipment manufacturers. The Government hope to make an announcement on Band III in the next few weeks.

Consumer Credit Act

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he is satisfied with the operation of the Consumer Credit Act; if he has any proposals to seek to amend it in the light of developments in credit provision since it was enacted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: With the coming into force of the remaining provisions of the Consumer Credit Act on 19 May, the Act will now offer consumers comprehensive protection over the full range of credit and hire agreements. I believe that traders, who have been extensively consulted about the new regulations which came into force on 19 May, will also benefit from the rationalisation of the law on credit, some of which was over a century old. I cannot rule out changes to the Act in due course, but I believe it would be premature to take any decision on this until we have had some experience of the Act operating as a whole.

WALES

Public Sector Employment

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many (i) public sector jobs and (ii) local government jobs there are in Wales; and what have been the changes in each case since 1977.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: On 8 December 1984 provisional figures indicate that there were 121,635 full-time equivalent local government jobs, including law and order services, a drop of 3,659 since 10 December 1977. It will take time to produce the information requested on the public sector. I shall write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy in the Library.

School Closures (Powys)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many schools have closed in Powys since May 1979; and if he will list each of the schools.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: In the period May 1979 to 22 May 1985, 19 schools have closed in Powys. Of these, ten schools were involved in amalgamations resulting in the opening of new schools. The schools, dates of closure and, where appropriate, the new schools opened, are as listed.

Welsh Water Authority (Membership)

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the members of the Welsh Water Authority, indicating their occupations.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Following is a list of the members of the Welsh water authority and their occupations.

J. E. Jones—Chairman and company director
F. B. Doyle—Chief executive
G. Edwards—Company director
R. W. Edwards—University professor
N. Hufton—Trade union official
Major H. R. Jackson—Farmer and agricultural contractor
Dr. G. Jones—Management consultant
T. Knowles—Company director
A. G. Lewis—Company director
Councillor Sir John Cotterel—Farmer
Councillor J. C. Espley—Retired
Councillor G. Jones—Fitter and turner
Councillor L. R. Thompson—Farmer
Councillor L. R. Turnbull—Engineering foreman

Bathing Beaches (EC Directive)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales if any funds have been made available by the EEC to his Department to assist in compliance with EEC directive 760/160/EEC on bathing beaches; if any application for such funds has been made by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: There are no specific funds available to our Department from the EEC to assist in compliance with Directive 760/160/EEC. However, the European regional development fund (ERDF) has assisted schemes for the improvement of coastal sewerage systems and the provision of adequate sea outfalls. The Welsh water authority has already received ERDF aid for a sea outfall at Tenby and discussions are presently taking place between my Department and the authority on a programme for the improvement of bathing waters around Wales, for which ERDF assistance will be sought.

A5 (Bypasses)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Ynys Môn on 20 May, Offical Report, columns 289-90, how long after the receipt of the consultants' formal report on bypasses of the five villages on the A5 on Anglesey he will be able to publish final decisions on routes and priorities.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: If the studies lead to a decision to proceed with the proposed bypasses, the timing of final decisions on routes and priorities will be largely dependent on the completion of any public consultations and of the relevant statutory procedures. It is too early to give any firm timetable in this cass.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Imported Poultrymeat

Sir Peter Mills asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, (1) what further steps he will take to enforce the regulations concerning imported poultry and their water content;

(2) what further resources are available to provide adequate enforcement officers to deal with poultrymeat imports.

Mr. MacGregor: The actual enforcement of both hygiene and water content requirements in respect of imported poultrymeat, and the allocation of resources to that task, remains a function of local and port health authorities. But the Government made our concern over the quality of imported chicken quite clear when, from September 1984, we extended enforcement responsibility under the water content regulations to port health authorities, to enable consignments to be checked in the ports. When we receive notification of infringements under the regulations, we pass the details on to the appropriate authorities within the European Community. We continue to seek the co-operation of other member states in ensuring that consignments do comply with legal requirements. In addition, the Ministry maintains close liaison with the enforcement authorities; my officials will be meeting their representatives shortly to exchange views.

Butter

Mr. Haynes asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will state the total amount of cut price Community butter available in the United Kingdom in the first three months of 1985; and what proportion of this is represented by 1 ton 5 cwts.

Mr. MacGregor: In the United Kingdom, 39,200 tonnes of butter was made available for sale at a reduced price under the EC's special sale scheme. Contracts for the purchase of this butter from the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce had to be concluded between 16 November 1984 and 31 January 1985. The bulk of it went on retail sale during the first three months of 1985. Some quantities have been sold outside this period, but it is not possible to say exactly how much.

One ton 5 cwts represents approximately 0·003 per cent. of the total quantity of butter made available under the special sale scheme.

Devon Ray

Mr. Steen asked the Minster of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the reply on Monday 20 May, what specific steps have not been fulfilled by Mr. Wakeham in relation to the Devon Ray, which are preventing it being decomissioned within the requirements of the Fishing Vessel (Financial Assistance) Scheme 1983.

Mr. MacGregor: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Agricultural Development Advisory Service

Mr. Andy Stewart asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what comments he has received from the agricultural industry on Professor Bell's report of a study of the agricultural development advisory service.

Mr. Jopling: Following my invitation to comment in my reply to a written question by my hon. Friend the Member for Devon, West and Torridge (Sir P. Mills) on 13 November 1984, I have received a total of 153 written comments of which some two thirds originated from staff in my Department.

The large majority of comments received gave a cautious welcome to the recommendations in the report whilst reserving final positions pending detailed development of these proposals. The proposal to charge for ADAS services has not been opposed in principle, although concern has been expressed over the level of charges that might be set and the ability of the farming community generally, and certain sectors in particular, to meet charges. The continuing role of ADAS in research and development was supported, particularly in relation to the Report's recommendations relating to experimental centres, the need for adequate links between R and D was stressed, and preferences were expressed for specific ways of funding R and D. The continuing need for ADAS to give a high priority to conservation was supported and greater priority was urged by a number of organisations. A clear majority of those commenting on this issue felt that introduction of general charging for conservation advice would be counter productive. On information technology, some concern was expressed over the implications for more traditional forms of providing advice.

These comments will be considered carefully by Ministers in the continuing process of their detailed consideration of the recommendations of the Bell report on which it is hoped to make a further statement before the summer recess.

Research and Development

Mr. MacLean asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements he has in mind for securing a greater industry contribution towards the cost of agricultural research and development.

Mr. Jopling: I have not yet reached firm conclusions on the precise form of future funding arrangements but in line with the advice of the priorities board for research and development in agriculture and food I intend, along with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland, to seek the views of industry on a system of sectoral contributions. Under such an approach, each sector would be invited to consider the contribution which it might make to the funding of research and development relevant to that sector's needs. Where statutory bodies already exist, I am suggesting that they might take on or develop this wider role of levying their members and then determining the programmes of work they wish to sponsor. In those sectors where statutory bodies do not already exist, I shall be seeking views on the most appropriate arrangements for those who wish to participate. We shall also be encouraging direct and specific commissioning by agricultural or food enterprises.

SCOTLAND

Acid Rain

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans the Forestry Commission has to investigate the effect of acid rain on beech trees in the United Kingdom.

Mr. John MacKay: The results of the Forestry Commission's 1984 survey of conifers found no damage similar to that seen in West Germany. In instances of forest decline in other countries, conifers have always shown symptoms before broadleaves, and the commission's 1985 survey will therefore again be restricted to spruce and pine.

Edinburgh Rental Hospital

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration he is giving to the future of the Edinburgh dental hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: In the light of the report of the joint working group of Edinburgh university and Lothian health board, to which my right hon. Friend referred in his answer of 25 October 1984 to the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Mr. Steel) at column 673, further consideration is being given to the future of the Edinburgh dental hospital. A further meeting is to be arranged with the university, the health board, the University Grants Committee and the Scottish Home and Health Department.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to be in a position to announce the allocation of fee remission grant for school session 1985-86 under the assisted places scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I refer to the reply given yesterday to my hon. Friend the Member for Renfrew, West and Inverclyde (Mrs. McCurley) at column 495.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

East Timor

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Government of Indonesia in support of the request of the International Committee of the Red Cross for access to East Timor.

Mr. Luce: The Government of Indonesia are well aware of our position on East Timor including access there for the International Committee for the Red Cross. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister raised this matter with President Suharto during her visit to Indonesia in April and received clear assurances about access by the International Red Cross.

Dooge Committee (Proposals)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs with which countries he has had bilateral contacts to examine in detail the Dooge committee's proposals; and what support has been received for the three major United Kingdom reservations.

Mr. Rifkind: The future development of the Community was discussed in the margins of the Foreign Affairs Council ony 20 May. It was also discussed by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and Chancellor Kohl on 18 May. My right hon. and learned Friend had talks with the French Foreign Minister on 21 May and hopes to have discussions with other Community colleagues betweeen now and the Milan European Council. Governments have yet to declare their positions on many of the Dooge committee's proposals.

Radio Thule

Mr. J. Enoch Powell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any steps are taken by Her Majesty's Government to monitor programmes transmitted by Radio Thule (Greenland).

Mr. Renton: We have taken no steps to monitor the broadcasts of Radio Thule.

Immigrants (Entry Clearance)

Mr. J. Enoch Powell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to what he attributes the fact that so many Commonwealth citizens apply for entry clearance through Her Britannic Majesty's consulate in Frankfurt am Main.

Mr. Renton: Frankfurt is a major European transit point. However, the number of entry clearance applications made there by Commonwealth citizens was not disproportionate compared to our other Western European posts. Frankfurt ceased operations as an entry clearance post on 1 February this year. Entry clearance work in the Federal Republic is now centralised in Dusseldorf.

Tamil Community

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has held with the Foreign Ministers of Sri Lanka and India concerning the flow of Tamils from Sri Lanka to the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Our high commissioner at Colombo has been keeping closely in touch with the Sri Lankan government about the problem presented by the increased number of Tamils seeking entry to the United Kingdom. We have consistently encouraged the Sri Lankan Government to pursue urgently a political settlement designed to bring an end to the inter-communal dispute.

As my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department told the House on 20 May, at column 273, there is no reason to believe that Tamils returning to Sri Lanka face persecution. The situation is thus not such as to justify a general policy of granting leave to enter or remain on an exceptional basis to all Tamils who express a fear to go back to Sri Lanka. all those not clearly in an exceptional category—able to demonstrate that they would suffer severe hardship if returned—will be sent back to their home country.

The Government are keeping the situation closely under review.

Lebanon

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has made any recent representations to the authorities in Syria about Syrian armed attacks on the Christian community in Lebanon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: We are not aware of any such attacks.

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action, if any, the European Economic Community Foreign Ministers have jointly taken during the past three weeks concerning Syrian attacks on the Christian community in Lebanon.

Mr. Luce: We are not aware of any such attacks, but the United Kingdom and the European Community have again expressed to all concerned, including the leaders of the principal Lebanese communities, their deep concern over the continuing violence in Lebanon. Foreign Ministers in the Ten issued a joint statement in Brussels on 20 May.

Mr. Vincas Bilickas

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what basis Monsieur Vincas Balickas enjoys the status of personally enjoying certain diplomatic courtesies.

Mr. Rifkind: Mr. Balickas enjoys certain personal diplomatic courtesies because he is an individual who held diplomatic rank in the Lithunanian mission in London at the time of the Soviet annexation in 1940.

PRIME MINISTER

Government Publicity

Dr. Cunningham asked the Prime Minister if she will place in the Library such details as are available, including costs, of the examples of Government publicity listed in annex A to the note by the Cabinet Office on "Central Government Conventions on Publicity and Advertising", dated 25 April 1985.

The Prime Minister: Copies of such details as are available have been placed in the Library of the House together with annex A to the note by the Cabinet Office which has been supplemented with such further details as could be readily obtained. I regret that further details of expenditure could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Welfare State (Reform)

Mr. Meacher asked the Prime Minister if she will publish the results of the surveys the Government have been carrying out into public attitudes towards reform of the welfare state.

The Prime Minister: The forthcoming Green Paper on social security will contain a summary of the main results of the survey of public attitudes to social security carried out by the Gallup organisation. The fully tabulated results will be available from Gallup at the same time.

ENERGY

Fuel Disconnections

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many domestic electricity supply disconnections took place in 1984.

Mr. Goodlad: I have asked the chairman of the Electricity Council to provide the information direct to the hon. Member.

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many domestic gas supply disconnections took place in 1984.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: I have asked the chairman of the British Gas Corporation to provide the figures direct to the hon. Member.

European Coal Industry

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions took place in the Council of Ministers in 1983 and 1984 over proposals for reducing capacity in the European coal industries; and what were the conclusions of the discussions.

Mr. David Hunt: No such proposals were tabled.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he has studied EEC Commission documents COM(84)419 and COM(83)583 on the future of the European coal industry; and if he will make a statement on the British Government's respose to these.

Mr. David Hunt: Explanatory memoranda on these documents, indicating their policy implications for the United Kingdom, were laid before the House on 22 October 1984 and 8 November 1983 respectively.

Reprocessing Plant, Dounreay

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will make a statement about the proposal to site a European fast reactor demonstration reprocessing plant at Dounreay.

Mr. Goodlad: I understand that the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority and British Nuclear Fuels plc intend shortly to make a joint planning application to the Highland regional council to build a fast reactor demonstration reprocessing plant at Dounreay to serve the needs of the European collaboration.

The chairman of the UKAEA has requested a statement of the Government's general policies on the United Kingdom's participation in the European fast reactor collaboration and on the regulatory procedures which would apply to any such reprocessing plant which might be built in the United Kingdom. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has written to him and copies of the letter have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

The Government see advantage both to the nation and to the European collaboration in siting the reprocessing plant in the United Kingdom. Such siting would, of course, be subject to the agreement of our European partners and to the necessary planning, safety and environmental consents being granted.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Supplementary Benefit

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer of 16 April, Official Report, column 160, when he intends to lay regulations amending the supplementary benefit rules so as to allow payment to strikers for funeral expenses.

Mr. Newton: We expect to make the necessary amendment to the Supplementary Benefit (Claims and Payments) Regulations 1981 within the next few weeks; and at the same time we shall take the opportunity to amend the regulations to provide for the back-dating of claims to supplementary benefit to be related to entitlement to statutory sick pay, in accordance with the undertaking given at Committee stage of the Social Security Bill in Standing Committee E on 17 January 1985, at column 231.

Invalidity Benefit

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he proposes to introduce the payment of invalidity benefit fortnightly in arrears; and what he now expects the savings to be due to this change.

Mr. Newton: The arrangements for this proposed change are still under consideration, but I hope to make an announcement in the next few weeks.

Hearing Aids

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many outpatients are waiting to have a hearing aid fitted or exchanged (a) in England and (b) in Wales; and what is the average waiting time in each case.

Mr. Newton: The Department no longer collects this information centrally. Responsibility for supplying hearing aids in England and Wales was transferred to Mersey regional health authority on 1 April 1985. Information collected from hearing aid centres by the authority includes the number of outpatients waiting for appointments for fitting or exchanging hearing aids.

My hon. Friend may therefore wish to contact the chairman of the health authority direct.

General Practitioners

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will now take steps to increase the number of general practitioners in the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Between 1979 and 1984, the numbers of general practitioners in Great Britain increased by some 2,700, or almost 10 per cent. from 25,614 to 28,301. Recruitment to general practice continues steadily and could produce further increases. There is, therefore, no need for additional measures.

Benefits (Deductions)

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether any guidance is given to his Department regarding a maximum permissible deduction from benefit for fuel or other debts; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether any fresh guidance has recently been given to officers of his Department about levels of deduction from benefit for fuel debts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The maximum deduction which may be made from a claimant's supplementary benefit for a fuel or housing debt is laid down in the Supplementary Benefit (Claims and Payments) Regulations 1981. The chief adjudication officer's guidance on the interpretation of the regulations concerned is published in Part 9 of the S manual, a copy of which is in the Library. Local offices have recently been given procedural instructions on the proposed introduction of a microcomputer system to handle deductions for fuel debts but the guidance on levels of deduction has not been changed.

Sums may also be deducted from a claimant's benefit to recover an urgent need payment or an overpayment of benefit, and maximum deductions are laid down in the Supplementary Benefit (Urgent Cases) Regulations 1981 and the Supplementary Benefit (Duplication and Overpayment) Regulations 1980 respectively. Instructions on this are issued by my right hon. Friend to local office staff.

Nurses

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what assessments he has made of changes in the last six years in the amount of work performed by nursing staff in the National Health Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is for individual health authorities to assess the amount of work performed by their nursing staff, as part of the task of determining appropriate staffing levels and the best mix of qualified and other nursing staff to meet their service needs. To aid authorities in this task, there have been factual central studies, in particular by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys on community nursing staff and by our Department's central management services on hospital based midwives, which contain information on the amount of work performed by some nursing staff.

Neasden Hospital

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what representations he has received regarding the proposal by Brent district health authority to close a 15-bed ward in Neasden hospital;

(2) if he will receive a deputation from Brent community health council about Brent district health authority's proposal to close a 15-bed ward in Neasden hospital.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: This proposal has been referred to the North West Thames regional health authority, which must decide whether they wish to refer it to us for a final decision or reject the proposal. If it does come before us we will gladly see the hon. Member's deputation. We have received no other representations about this.

Specialist Claims Control Visits

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total cost of the specialist claims control units of his Department in 1983-84 and 1984-85.

Mr. Whitney: The estimated administrative cost of specialist claims control staff was £2·4 million in 1983-84 and £2 million in 1984-85.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many prosecutions have been brought against claimants as a result of the operations of the specalist claims control units of his Department in 1983-84 and 1984-85.

Mr. Whitney: Separate statistics are not maintained of the number of prosecutions resulting from specialist claims control.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the total amount saved in stopped claims as a result of the operations of the specialist claims control units of his Department in 1983-84 and 1984-85.

Mr. Whitney: The information requested is not available. However, the estimated total benefit savings from cases examined by specialist claims control teams and where benefit either ceased or was adjusted were £19 million and £16·3 million in 1983-84 and 1984-85 respectively.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what assessment has been made in relation to those whose benefits are stopped following an investigation by the specialist claims control units of his Department of the numbers of persons who subsequently are awarded benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The operational research services branch of the Department has recently completed a study into specialist claims control and the report is under consideration. The study has taken account of persons whose benefit ceased following an investigation and who subsequently returned to benefit.

Disclosure of Information

Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if it is the policy of his Department that local officers should not disclose information to claimants who ask for it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: Personal information held on Social Security claims by the Department is confidential. Where a claimant or a person who states they are acting on behalf of a claimant asks a local officer for information about a claim, it is our policy that the local officer must be satisfied that the enquiry is in fact from the claimant or an agent acting with his authority before any information can be disclosed. if the hon. Member has a particular instance in mind I should be glad if he would write to me.

Chronically Sick and Disabled (Benefits)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total spending of his Department on benefits and services for the chronically sick and disabled in each of the years 1970-71 to 1984-85; and if he will give the change year in by year percentage as well as money terms.

Mr. Newton: The spending on benefits and on services provided direct by the Department for long-term sick and disabled people in the years 1970-71 to 1984-85 is given in the table. Information on the provision of services by health authorities and by local authorities specifically to this group is not available.

Year	Expenditure in cash terms £ million	Expenditure at 1984-85 prices £ million	Real annual percentage increase
1970-71	* —	—	—
1971-72	†360	1,570	—
1972-73	510	2,080	32
1973-74	590	2,180	5
1974-75	770	2,410	11
1975-76	1,040	2,620	9
1976-77	1,240	2,710	3
1977-78	1,520	2,910	7
1978-79	1,830	3,240	11

1983-84	4,150	4,360	12
1984-85	4,590	4,590	5

* Comparable figures are not available as there were no benefits specifically for the long-term sick and disabled people.

† Not fully comparable with later years as invalidity benefit was introduced part way through the year.

Endoscopic Ultrasonography Equipment

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what finances he intends to make available to enable endoscopic ultrasonography equipment to be modernised for the purpose of detecting more effectively early changes in conditions of patients suffering from chronic pancreatitis.

Mr. John Patten: The Department provides financial assistance for the development of new and improved equipment in suitable cases. The provision and modernising of medical equipment is a matter for health authorities.

Family Doctor Services

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the levels of spending which have been devoted by his Department towards family doctor services in each financial year since 1978-79.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Spending on the general medical services in England in each year since 1978-79 was as follows:

Financial Year	Actual Spending £ million
1978-79	380·6
1979-80	468·3
1980-81	618·8
1981-82	710·4
1982-83	799·2
1983-84	862·5
1984-85	*979·9

* Provisional.

Mental Health Service (Conference)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many officials of his Department attended the conference in London recently on mental health service planning which it arranged jointly with the Royal College of Psychiatrists.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Including sessional chairmen, 22 professional and administrative staff from our Department attended some part of the conference on "Mental Health Service Planning" held on 7 and 8 March 1985.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any proposals for implementing any of the recommendations made at the recent conference in London on mental health service planning attended by representatives of his Department and by representatives of the British Association of Social Workers, the British Psychological Society, MENCAP, MIND, the Royal College of General Practitioners and the Royal College of Nursing.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The conference held on 7-8 March was organised jointly by the Royal College of Psychiatrists and our Department. Other participants were drawn from regional and district health authorities, local authorities, local authority associations, the National Association of Health Authorities, professional organisations and voluntary organisations working in the field of mental illness and mental handicap.

The conference was held to enable participants to look jointly at problems associated with the implementation of our policies for mental health service planning in England and Wales. It was not constituted to consider or vote on formal recommendations. A wide variety of opinions was expressed. The participants had before them the recommendations in the Social Services Committee report on community care with special reference to adult mentally ill and mentally handicapped people, published on 28 February. In considering our response to that Report we are taking account of points made at the conference.

Mental Hospitals

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of mental hospitals and mental handicap hospitals which have closed down in each year since 1979; and if he will give a breakdown region by region of these closures during the same period.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: From the information we have centrally, the number of mental illness and mental handicap hospitals approved for complete closure for the period May 1979—March 1985, is as follows:

Year	Number of hospitals
May—December 1979	1
January—December 1980	3
January—December 1981	5
January—December 1982	2
January—December 1983	6
January—December 1984	14
January—March 1985	—
TOTAL May 1979—March 1985	31

Details of the individual hospitals are in the table.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the numbers of patients residing in mental hospitals and units in England in each year since 1979.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: On the assumption that the hon. Member is referring to mental illness hospitals and units, the available information is given in Table 1 of DHSS Statistical Bulletin 1/85, "Mental illness hospitals and units in England, results from the Mental Health Enquiry 1983," a copy of which is in the Library.

Research Management (Review)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he established a review into health and personal social services research management in his Department; when the results of that review were submitted to him; and whether he will now place a copy of the report in the Library.

Mr. John Patten: We began an examination of the Department's health and personal social services research management in August 1984. The work is completed and being considered.

Board and Lodging Allowance (Birmingham)

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many letters have been sent by his Department's local offices in Walsall road and Soho road, Birmingham, to supplementary benefit recipients informing them that the board and lodging allowance will cease on a given date.

Mr. Whitney: Up to and including 22 May 1985 the Department's office in Walsall road, Birmingham had issued nine letters and the office in Soho road, Birmingham had issued 112 letters to claimants informing them that their supplementary allowance in respect of board and lodging would cease on a given date.

Housing Benefit Regulations

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he now intends to withdraw the Housing Benefit (Amendment No. 4) Regulations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The regulations were made as a matter of urgency to close loopholes and correct anomalies. There is no reason to withdraw them.

NHS Support Services (Contracts)

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the letter dated 9 October 1984 from the Minister for Health to all regional health authority chairmen about contracts for National Health Service support services.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The text of my letter was:

"Some Districts are seeking to require contractors who tender for the provision of NHS support services to employ staff on Whitley terms and conditions of service. This is contrary to the advice given by the Department last year in DA(83)40; and it is, as John Patten made clear again in his letter this summer, unacceptable to Ministers. You may find it helpful if I explain our policy and the reasons for it.

All authorities have been asked to seek tenders, including in-house tenders, for their domestic, catering and laundry services to ensure that they get the best value for money in these services. When going to tender, authorities need to prepare tender documents which clearly specify the work to be done, including the standards to be achieved. They need to see that only competent contractors are invited to tender. When assessing a contractors competence, an Authority can certainly consider, amongst other things, whether the wage rates and conditions likely to be offered by that contractor will be adequate to attract the right sort of staff, given the available supply of full-time or part-time workers in the area. All these are necessary steps to take to ensure that the authority meets its obligation to secure services of the standard required at the lowest cost.

However we consider that it is quite wrong for authorities to go beyond these steps and specify the terms and conditions of service which private contractors should provide for staff working on NHS contracts. There is no sensible basis upon which a Health authority can interfere in this way in the relationship between the contractor and its employees. It cannot be right for Health Authorities to stipulate holiday entitlement, sickness benefits or inflation-proofed pensions as well as wage rates for cleaning and catering companies in their area. Moreover attempts to set wage rates and conditions are likely to be against the interests of the health authority and its patients because the effect will probably be to restrict competition for contracts and to add to any contractors' costs. This in turn is likely to lead to extra costs for authorities. Those extra costs will be to the detriment of patients in that district, because they will have to be found from resources which would otherwise be available for patient care.

It may be that some members of health authorities who have favoured the idea of including a requirement for Whitley terms and conditions in their contracts have done so because they have been persuaded that this was the only way to ensure that standards are maintained if work goes to a contractor. I am quite sure that this view is mistaken, and that, far from being in the interests of the service, imposing these requirements on contractors will simply divert resources from patient care.

Some Authorities may also have been influenced by the argument that the circular itself is not a binding direction in law. This is quite irrelevant and is not any sudden or unexpected discovery. Circulars have always been worded in this way and we do not draft them to ensure that each circular is a legally binding document. We do not ordinarily expect to have to use the Secretary of State's legal powers of direction as we look upon our Health Authorities as partners in our aim of improving the National Health Service. However we have always expected Authorities to follow Government policies and we are entitled to continue to do so.

I would like you to ensure that Ministers' views are clearly and firmly brought to the attention of any Authorities in your Region which have adopted Whitley wages and conditions requirements for contractors, or are considering doing so. It is most important that they understand that these requirements cannot be in the best interests of patients, and should not be included in tender documents. We look to you in the first place to continue to provide the leadership to the Region which is required to ensure that all Districts, and their hospitals and patients, take full advantage of the tendering policy.

KENNETH CLARKE

Pyridoxine

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if there have been any yellow card reports sent to the Committee on Safety of Medicines regarding adverse reactions to vitamin B6, pyridoxine.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Yes. There are 28 products which contain only vitamin B6 (pyridoxine). We have received 29 adverse reaction reports relating to such products. In addition we have received 527 reports relating to combination products containing pyridoxine and other ingredients. It is very important to bear in mind that a report does not necessarily indicate a causal relationship between a product or a constituent of a product and the reported reaction.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when the Committee on Safety of Medicines or its professional staff last considered the safety of vitamin B6, pyridoxine; and what were the conclusions.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The safety of pyridoxine, either alone or in combination products, has been considered by the committee and by professional staff on numerous occasions over the years; it was last considered earlier this year. I am advised that provided products are used in the doses and indications set out in their prescribing literature there are no concerns about their safety.

Drug Trials

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied with the operation of drug trials, the provision of information concerning risks associated with drug trials to volunteers, and arrangements for compensation in the event of death, illness, or injury to a volunteer as a result of drug trials; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We would strongly disapprove of any programme of drug testing which did not comply with existing guidelines. These recommend that volunteers be provided with a full explanation of the proposed procedure, including the risks, and suggest a basis for compensation in the event of drug-induced injury. We are awaiting updated advice from the Working Party set up by the Royal College of Physicians and from the Medicines Commission on what, if any, further control measures are required.

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what effect the introduction of limited list prescribing has had since the regulations were introduced; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he proposes to amend the regulations relating to limited list prescribing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have been impressed by the smoothness of the introduction of the selected list and recognise that this in large part due to the efforts of the doctors and pharmacists. We hope that it is now generally recognised that the selected list is a very sensible way of making better use of National Health Service resources, without harming patients.

There has, however, been some uncertainty about the circumstances in which scheduled drugs may be dispensed against prescriptions for non-scheduled ones with the same ingredients. Amending regulations were laid yesterday to clarify the position.

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the cost savings of limited list prescribing to the National Health Service to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is too early to make any estimate of the savings achieved to date from the introduction of selected list prescribing. April prescriptions are still being priced and will not in any case be a reliable indicator of future savings since prescriptions written before 1 April could be dispensed until the end of April.

National Insurance

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will consider excluding employers from paying national insurance contributions for one year for each person employed following their completion of a youth training scheme course; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will consider excluding all employers who employ 10 people or less from national insurance contributions for one year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: No. We believe problems would arise when employers ceased to be eligible for such concessions for some or all of their employees. The Government have instead introduced more far-reaching measures to encourage employment generally by abolishing the national insurance surcharge last year, and among young and other lower-paid people in particularly by the system of graduated lower rates of contribution which we propose to introduce on 6 October.

St. Mark's Hospital (Sesquicentenary)

Mr. Sydney Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he or any of his Ministers will be attending any of the functions to make the sesquicentenary of St. Mark's hospital, City road, London.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I am pleased to inform my hon. Friend that I look forward to attending the banquet celebrating St. Mark's hospital's 150th anniversary.

Continence Advisers

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer of 16 May, about continence advisers, if he will estimate the cost of collecting centrally information on the number of such advisers employed.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 21 May 1985, c. 401]: 'Continence advisers' are not a recognised National Health Service grade, nor are they identifiable from the standard list of occupation codes. By far the greater part of the cost of any special data collection exercise would fall upon health authorities. It is not possible to estimate what the total cost would be, as there would be substantial variations between regions, according to whether their own information systems enabled them to identify these staff, or whether they would have to collect the information by making special enquiries.

Abortions

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish data on the number of abortions for each week over 19 weeks for each of the last five years; if he will subdivide the data according to whether the abortion was carried out in a private or a National Health Service hospital; and whether or not the foetus was deformed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 17 May 1985, c. 255-6]: We do not collect information about the condition of the aborted foetus.

The remaining data requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, readily available information is given in the table, which relates to the numbers of legal abortions carried out under the Abortion Act of 1967 which were notified by the end of February following the data year.

DEFENCE

Destroyers

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Defence if Her Majesty's Government have any plans for the future building of any destroyers for the Royal Navy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The last Type 42 destroyer, HMS Edinburgh, is still under construction and the earliest ships of the class are expected to remain in service until the mid-1990s. Our programme of replacements for the destroyer and frigate force is based on the Type 23 frigate.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement about his recent visit to the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Stanley: My right hon. Friend visited the Falkland Islands in order to attend the opening of Mount Pleasant airport. His programme also included meeting the civil and military commissioners, local councillors and other Falkland Islanders, and visiting some of the military units.

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the Falkland Islands airport will be open to civil aircraft; if any Latin American countries have indicated an interest in opening up civil airline services between there and the Falklands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: To enable the remaining construction work to be completed as rapidly as possible between now and early 1986 when the airport becomes fully operational, military and civil flying from Mount Pleasant airport will be limited for that period to Ministry of Defence wide-bodied aircraft carrying service personnel, civil passengers and priority freight, locally-based light aircraft, and possibly the occasional civil charter flight. From early 1986 there will no longer need to be any limitations on civil flights. No approaches to operate civil air line services to the Falklands have been made by any Latin American country to date.

Wood Farm Camp, Malvern

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many residences on the Wood Farm camp, Malvern, are being retained for long-term requirements; how many of these are now vacant; for how long any of these properties have been unoccupied; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Five married quarters are to be retained at Wood Farm camp, Malvern to meet long-term requirements. All these quarters are currently occupied.

Twenty-two quarters and most of the other land and buildings which the camp occupies are to be put up for disposal. Disposal action on some of the property has now started and this will continue until all surplus land and buildings have been passed for disposal. Surplus married quarters will first be offered for sale to Servicemen if they are suitable for individual sale. If no bids are received or if they are not suitable for individual sale, they will be sold on the open market.

USAF Alconbury

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many United States service personnel, and how many dependants, are currently stationed at USAF Alconbury; and how many are expected to be stationed there in 1990.

Mr. Stanley: Some 3,200 United States service personnel are currently stationed at RAF Alconbury with some 4,800 dependants. It is not possible at this stage to give more than a broad estimate of numbers in 1990, but on present plans we expect about 4,000 United States service men to be stationed at RAF Alconbury in that year, with about 6,000 dependants.

USSR Missiles

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated flying limit of the latest intercontinental ballistic missiles between locations in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the United States of America.

Mr. Stanley: The latest Soviet inter-continental ballistic missiles have the range to reach targets throughout the United Kingdom and the United States of America.

Crisis Management

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the changes in crisis management made by his Department since May 1979.

Mr. Stanley: Crisis management arrangements are regularly reviewed and exercised. It would be neither practicable nor, on security grounds, possible to list the detailed changes which have been made to these arrangements since 1979. However, I refer the hon. Member to paragraphs 204-206 of 'The Falklands Campaign: The Lessons'—Cmnd. 8758.

Radiation Exposure

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements exist for the payment of compensation in the event of radiation exposure arising from United Kingdom or joint United Kingdom/United States tests at the Nevada test site.

Mr. Butler: No specific arrangements exist and no claims arising from nuclear tests in Nevada have been received by my Department.

Trident

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the costs of designing and testing the British-produced Trident warhead are included in the previously announced cost of Trident.

Mr. Butler: Yes.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether any tests are planned for the British-made Trident warhead; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butler: Joint United Kingdom/United States nuclear weapon tests are carried out at the Nevada test site, as part of the continuing development of our nuclear warheads and are necessary in order to maintain the effectiveness of the United Kingdom's nuclear capability.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate the costs, in relation to the British-produced Trident warhead, of (a) design, (b) manufacture and (c) testing.

Mr. Butler: For security reasons, and in accordance with the long-standing practice of successive Governments, costs of the defence nuclear programme cannot be revealed.

Security

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the security classification of the blueprints found on the pavement outside Warren street tube station on the night of Tuesday 14 May.

Mr. Stanley: It is not clear to which document the hon. Member is referring. The highest classification of the items in the bag was "Confidential".

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the security classification of the guided missile operator instructions found on the pavement outside Warren street tube station on the night of Tuesday 14 May.

Mr. Stanley: The operator instructions were classified "Confidential".

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the security classification of the information contained in the letter headed with the name of a senior naval officer which was found on the pavement outside Warren street tube station on the night of Tuesday 14 May.

Mr. Stanley: A number of letters from senior naval officers were included in the mail bag found outside Warren street station. Some were unclassified; none was classified higher than "Confidential".

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the security classification of the computer tapes found on the pavement outside Warren street tube station on the night of Tuesday 14 May.

Mr. Stanley: The computer tapes were classified "Confidential".

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement concerning the parcels containing classified documents which were found outside Warren street tube station on the night of Tuesday 14 May.

Mr. Stanley: In the early hours of Wednesday 15 May, a Post Office bag, containing Ministry of Defence mail, was handed to the Press Association by three youths who said that they had found it near Warren street tube station. Investigations have since revealed that the bag—part of a consignment being sent by Datapost—had fallen from a Post Office van whilst in transit. It is believed that most of the mail was either unclassified or classified as "Restricted", with a few items classified "Confidential". Although Ministry of Defence security procedures were not breached the van carrying the mail was not properly locked in accordance with Post Office regulations.

Nimrod

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he now estimates that all 11 Nimrod AEW Mk III aircraft will be in service.

Mr. Butler: As I told my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Latham) on 30 April at column 126, we are still investigating various options for the further work necessary to bring the project to completion. Until a way forward has been agreed it is not possible to predict when all 11 Nimrod AEW Mk III aircraft will be in service. Our best judgment at the moment, however, is that an operational AEW capability for the Nimrod could be achieved in 1987.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how much the programme to equip the Royal Air Force with the Mk III AEW Nimrod has cost to date; and what he estimates the cost will be by the time all 11 aircraft are in service.

Mr. Butler: By the end of 1984, some £816 million (at current prices) had been spent or committed on the Nimrod AEW project. We are currently assessing various options for bringing the project to completion. Final costs will depend on the option selected.

Shackleton Aircraft

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he is satisfied that the five Shackleton aircraft based at Royal Air Force Lossiemouth can provide adequate airborne early warning of low-level attack by SU-24 and TU-22 aircraft.

Mr. Stanley: As stated in the statement on the Defence Estimates 1985,

"the RAF's AEW Shackletons still make a useful contribution to AEW capability and the air defence of the United Kingdom". (Vol. 1, paragraph 413).

It would not be in the public interest to specify the AEW Shackleton's operational capability against particular Soviet aircraft.

AWACS Aircraft

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has had any discussions with the United States Defense Department concerning the possible leasing of E-3A (AWACS) aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butler: No.

Field Artillery

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many field artillery regiments serving with the British Army of the Rhine are equipped with 105 millimetre light guns.

Mr. Lee: None.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many field artillery regiments serving in Germany are equipped with the 155 millimetre FH-70 towed howitzer.

Mr. Lee: None.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many field artillery regiments serving with the British Army of the Rhine are equipped with the 105 millimetre self-propelled gun.

Mr. Lee: Four.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many field artillery regiments serving with the British Army of the Rhine are equipped with the 155 millimetre self-propelled gun.

Mr. Lee: Four.

Challenger Tank

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many armoured regiments have so far been equipped with the Challenger tank.

Mr. Lee: Two.

Chieftain Tank

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many armoured regiments are equipped with the improved Chieftain tank.

Mr. Lee: Ten regiments are equipped with the Chieftain tank, which has been steadily improved since entering service. Further improvements, as described in paragraph 420 of the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1985, are in hand.

MCV Armoured Personnel Carriers

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence to whom the contract for the second batch of MCV 80 armoured personnel carriers has been awarded.

Mr. Butler: No contracts have yet been let for the manufacture of MCV 80 vehicles.

British Aerospace

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 8 May, Official Report, column 386, whether, when the Controller of Aircraft telephoned Sir Raymond Lygo, the managing director of British Aerospace on 15 March to confirm that the company understood that its offer of 14 March was its final offer and Sir Raymond indicated that he did not so understand, any indication was given to Sir Raymond that a further offer from British Aerospace might be accepted by his Department; whether the Controller of Aircraft encouraged Sir Raymond to make a further bid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butler: I have nothing further to add to the answers given to the hon. Gentleman on 8 May 1985 at column 386 and 22 May at column 426. I would also refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Beverley (Sir P. Wall) on 23 May 1985 at column 501.

EMPLOYMENT

Disabled People

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will sponsor a research programme into the effectiveness or otherwise of the job quota scheme for disabled people, with particular attention to the attitude of disabled people towards registering as disabled workers and the level of relevant skills for employment to be found amongst unemployed disabled people.

Mr. Alan Clark: Research into various matters affecting the quota scheme is one of the recommendations in the report of a Manpower Services Commission working group which my right hon. Friend and I are currently considering.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Employment what discussions he has had with the Manpower Services Commission on the working party on the jobs quota for disabled people who recently made recommendations concerning the quota scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: My right hon. Friend has recently received advice from the Manpower Services Commission on the report of a working group set up to consider certain suggestions for improving the effectiveness of the quota scheme within the framework of existing legislation. We are now considering that advice and hope to announce our decision during the summer. Copies of the working group's report have been placed in the Library.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for June each year since 1970 and at the latest available date the number of full-time adult male employees and the number of part-timers, together with the corresponding figures for adult females.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following table gives the available information for each year since 1971; figures for 1970 are not available. The data relates to all males and all females as there is no breakdown between adults and juveniles. Information for male part-time employees in employment is available only from the censuses of employment.

*Only figures for all males are available for these dates.

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) men and (b) women are classified as part-time workers at the latest available date.

Mr. Alan Clark: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Earnings

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list at the latest available date (a) the actual number of male workers earning less than two thirds average male earnings and (b) the percentage of the male work force who are earning less than two thirds male average, by region; and what were the corresponding figures for May 1979.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It is estimated that in April 1984 about 2 million full-time adult male employees working a full week had gross weekly earnings of less than two-thirds of the corresponding national average. The corresponding figure in April 1979 was about 1·75 million. The following table sets out figures in percentage terms by region within Great Britain.

Civil Service

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting which he had recently with representatives of Civil Service unions about referral to arbitration of their pay claims.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend wrote to the unions concerned on 2 May to tell them that on grounds of public expenditure policy he was unable to refer their pay claims to arbitration.

Racial Discrimination

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the extent of racial discrimination in employment since the introduction of his Department's code of practice on that subject.

Mr. Alan Clark: My Department's code of practice relates solely to ensuring the confidentiality of data from questionnaires completed in the survey of ethnic origins of staff. The code of practice prepared by the Commission for Racial Equality, which became operative on 1 April 1984, gives guidance on how to eliminate racial disrimination and to promote equal opportunity in employment generally. The commission has recently sent to the Select Committee on Employment a general assessment of the pogress so far made with the code towards these objectives.

Job-splitting

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the cost of advertising and promoting the job-splitting scheme since its inception.

Mr. Alan Clark: £448,000 since its launch in January 1983, of which £65,000 has been on the printing of leaflets.

EC (Unemployment)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Employment what discussions he has had with his EEC counterparts concerning unemployment within the EEC; and what steps he has taken as a result.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend met Community colleagues on 8 February for informal discussions, and since then has had bilateral meetings with the French, Luxembourg, Irish and Italian Ministers and with Commissioners Pfeiffer and Sutherland. At these meetings we have urged that unemployment should be the top priority, that all new proposals from the Commission to the Council of Ministers should include an assessment of their impact on jobs and that proposals currently before the Council that would increase costs, impose further labour market rigidities and destroy jobs, should be dropped.

Area Manpower Boards

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he receives reports on the relative performance and efficiency of his area manpower boards.

Mr. Peter Morrison No. The area manpower boards are advisory bodies of the Manpower Services Commission and as such, report to the Chairman of the commission. The commission is currently reviewing the performance and future role of its area manpower boards.

Wages Councils

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many representations he has received about the discussion document on the future of wages councils.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend and I have so far received 125 responses to the consultative paper on wages councils.

Easington

Mr. Dormand asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number and percentage of unemployed males and females, respectively, in the Easington constituency.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is available in the Library. On 11 April 1985 there were 4,044 and 1,733 unemployed male and female claimants respectively in the Easington constituency. Unemployment rates are not calculated for areas smaller than travel-to-work areas.

Fairgrounds

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list deaths and injuries resulting from fairground accidents for each year since 1970.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The figures for fairground accidents are not available prior to 1977. The figures for the period 1977 to 1984 are as follows:

Year	Deaths	Injuries
1977-78 (combined)	8	48
1979	3	34
1980	2	33

Year	Deaths	Injuries
1981	2	55
1982	4	46
1983	3	106
1984	2	106

Unemployment Statistics

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will list the latest unemployment figures and percentages in each region and the percentage of those in each region who have been unemployed for 12 months and more;

(2) if he will set out the unemployment figures and percentage in each region in May 1979, May 1982 and May 1984 and, in each case, the percentage of those who have been unemployed for 12 months and more.

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 20 May 1985, c. 299]: Following are the figures for April of the years requested (not available for May), together with those for October 1982 on both the registration and claimants bases.

Notes:

(1) The comparisons are affected by the change in the basis of the count in October 1982, and by the 1983 Budget measures which mean that older men, mainly over 60, no longer need to sign on at an unemployment benefit office in order to receive supplementary allowance or national insurance credits.

(2) The regional figures given are all based on aggregations of jobcentre areas since the duration analyses is not yet available from the new ward-based system.

(3) The total unemployment figures prior to October 1982 are given on the registration basis to be consistent with the available analysis by duration. Estimated totals on the claimant basis are however available and have been used to calculate the unemployment rates shown.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 79

SESSION 1984–85

13th May—24th May 1985

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There will, however, be headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one will find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc., under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speakers rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R=first reading, 2R=second reading, Money res=money resolution, Com=Committee stage, Rep=Report stage, 3R=third reading, amendt/amendts=amendment/amendments, *=matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
